PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 101st CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, October 5, 1989

The House met at 9 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. YATES).

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
October 5, 1989.

I hereby designate the Honorable SIDNEY YATES to act as Speaker pro tempore on today.

THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker, House of Representatives.

PRAYER

Rev. Samuel Billy Kyles, Monumental Baptist Church, Memphis, TN, offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, we thank Thee for these moments in life, time, and the history of mankind. We thank Thee for this day and for every opportunity it presents us to do good.

Father God we pray for the leaders of this great Nation. May they look above party and region, and ever hold to that which is right. And that which is just. And that which is true. We pray now for world peace.

We pray for the hungry, the homeless, the helpless, and for those who feel that there is no reason to hope. Let Your spirit go forth in this place so that all will know that the men and women of these hollowed halls do care, and that the less fortunate are not just numbers and percentages, but individuals who are flesh and blood and whose hearts are filled with a desire for a reasonable portion of goods that serve to make life comfortable.

And Father we pray in a special way, for those families whose lives have been torn asunder by the devastation of the hurricane.

And, finally, Dear God, let us not be as the two, on the dangerous Jericho Road, who passed by on the other side, but as the one—the good one, who risked his own well-being and comfort and stopped to pour in the oil and bind the wound and set the wounded on his beast, took him to an inn and paid the tariff for as long as needed.

Help us in this sacred place, to be binders of wounded hopes, wounded dreams, and wounded hearts.

In his name we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 292, nays 91, answered "present" 1, not voting 48, as follows:

Mr. SCHAEFER changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the Journal was approved.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. BOGGS). Will the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOAGLAND] please lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. HOAGLAND led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2653. An act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 to carry out the Export Administration Act of 1979.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 978. An act to authorize the establishment within the Smithsonian Institution of the National Museum of the American Indian, to establish a memorial to the American Indian, and for other purposes;

S. 1091. An act to provide for the striking of medals in commemoration of the bicentennial of the U.S. Coast Guard; and

S 1074. An act to extend the Tied-Aid Credit Program of the Export Import Bank, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that pursuant to sections 1928a–1928d, title 22, of the United States Code, as amended, the Chair on behalf of the Vice President, appoints Mr. PELL, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. WIRTH, and Mr. ROBB, as members of the Senate delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly Meeting during the first session of the 101st Congress, to be held in Rome, Italy, October 6–10, 1989.

REV. SAMUEL BILLY KYLES

(Mr. FORD of Tennessee asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Madam Speaker, we in the Memphis community are extremely honored to have in our midst, the Reverend Billy Kyles, pastor of the Monumental Baptist Church.

Reverend Kyles has touched the core of the community's social conscience, and will thereby affect the lives of many for years to come. His voice of compassion has always spoken out in an unyielding manner for the community's less fortunate. Under his guidance, Monumental Church has emerged as a forerunner in the defense of individuals rights.

Thanks to Reverend Kyles' insistence, Monumental is headquarters for the local chapter of Operation PUSH [People United to Save Humanity]. His leadership of this group, along with his aggressiveness in working to eliminate the injustices present in the lives of people in the community, has served as an inspiration to us all. I commend Reverend Kyles for his dynamic leadership in the city of Memphis, and for the work he has done in making his goals a living reality for many people.

Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you the Reverend Billy Kyles.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Other 1-minute speeches will be postponed until conclusion of the legislative business of the day.

OMNIBUS RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1989

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 245 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3299.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3299) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 5 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1990, with Mr. MAVROULES in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Wednesday, October 4, 1989, the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PANETTA] had been disposed of.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 9 printed in section 2 of House Report 101–261.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(By unanimous consent Mr. PANETTA was allowed to speak out of order.)

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I do this for the purpose of advising Members where we are heading.

We have a point of order that will be raised by the Committee on Ways and Means against an item included in the package from the Committee on Education and Labor. That will take some 30 or perhaps 40 minutes to dispose of. It is a long point of order and a controversial one.

We will then move to the child care provisions, and the Edwards amendment will be first up for 2 hours and then the Stenholm amendment for 2 hours. Then it is our hope that we can proceed to final passage.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against section 3201 of the bill, beginning on page 151.

Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against section 3201 on the grounds that it is a tax measure which is in violation of paragraph B, clause 5 of House rule 21.

Mr. Chairman, section 3201 imposes fees on the filing of certain forms required to be filed annually in connection with maintaining pension and benefit plans. The authors of the provision argue that these fees are user fees because they are paid out of plan assets to finance the enforcement of Federal pension laws. They argue that plan assets are the deferred wages of employees, and hence, the fee is a user fee paid by the employees as beneficiaries of increased enforcement of the fiduciary standards of title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 [ERISA].

Mr. Chairman, while the payment of taxes is mandatory, user fees are generally voluntary payments made in return for additional governmental services. It is hard to imagine how the mandatory filing of a form can be associated with the sort of voluntary activities we have come to associate with user fees.

In addition, I raise the question of whether proper enforcement of our pension laws is a "use" that should be subject to a "fee" imposed merely for proper enforcement of duly enacted statutes. Often when laws are enacted, certain classes of individuals are particularly benefited. Occupational health and safety laws, employment discrimination laws, and pension fiduciary laws fall in this category. But is the enforcement of the laws that protect these individuals a special benefit or special use? I would argue that proper enforcement of these laws is both an expectation and a basic right. I believe it would set a very troubling precedent to acknowledge that individuals might be assessed user fees for nothing more than the enforcement of the laws enacted to protect them.

Mr. Chairman, this provision is clearly a tax and I urge the Chair to sustain my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other Members who wish to be heard on the point of order?

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY].

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the point of order.

The issue before you is whether the fee required by section 3201 is a tax. We believe that the fee is clearly not a tax, but rather is a user fee as you have described such a fee in your ruling yesterday on several points of order against provisions in H.R. 3299.

You stated in your ruling that user fees or regulatory fees are "paid by choice in that the party paying the fee has the option of not utilizing the governmental service or avoiding the regulatory activity * * * Furthermore, fees are collected merely to compensate the governmental entity for providing the service, or in the case of regulating activities, for the expenses incurred in regulating the activity * * *" The fee in section 3201 fits squarely within your definition of a user fee.

Section 3210 imposes user fees on a pension plan for the filing and processing of certain forms with the Department of Labor. DOL uses the forms as the principal means of insuring that those who have filed the fee are meeting the fiduciary standards of ERISA which help assure the fiscal integrity of the pension plan. This regulatory function performed by DOL directly benefits both the employer who sponsors the plan and the employee participants in the plan. All of the fee is to be used by DOL in their handling of the required forms.

The fee required is also clearly a voluntary one because no one is required by law to have a pension plan. The decision to establish a plan is purely a voluntary one worked out between employers and employees. However once the decision is reached, the provision requires the payment of a fee to pay for government regulation which benefits those who have made the decision to establish a plan. The voluntary decision to have a plan triggers the requirement to pay a fee. The fee is then used exclusively for a government service that benefits those who have paid the fee. In every respect the fee required by section 3201 meets the definition of a user fee as articulated by the Chair yesterday. It also has the same characteristics of numerous other existing fees that have long been considered user fees not taxes.

Some have argued that it is a troubling precedent to acknowledge that individuals might be assessed user fees for nothing more than the enforcement of the laws enacted to protect them. We might agree that the need for user fees to fund essential government services is indeed troubling. But funding government activities is what user fees by definition are always used for. The question before you Mr. Chairman is whether the fee proposed in section 3201 is a tax. Whether or not user fees should be utilized to fund government activities is a wholly separate policy issue.

We believe the fee created by seciton 3201 fits squarely within the definition of a user fee and is clearly distinguishable from a tax. The point of order should be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the point-of-order against section 3201 as a violation of clause 5(b) of House Rule 21.

As ranking Republican on the Committee I acknowledge that there is an element of turf here. Most often I support my Committee's jurisdiction but in this instance the interpretation is not sustainable.

These provisions to impose so-called user fees on pension and welfare plan reports required to be filed with the Department of Labor and Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation are indeed taxes, within the meaning of this House rule. It is clear that this provision cannot be characterized as a user fee for existing enforcement efforts. The amounts exceed cost of enforcement by 14 times. The outlays for such efforts of enforcement are currently about $40 million. The $580 million raised by this fee is over 14 times that amount.

Undoubtedly the offices of my colleagues, like mine, have been inundated with constituent letters asking that these user fees be deleted from budget reconciliation. They should be, not only because they were added just to pay for other revenue losers, but because they are insidious on their own, represent new taxes, not germane to reconciliation, and will discourage pension and health plan coverage.

Added solely to make up for revenue losses of $1.6 billion over 5 years which would result from another title III provision prohibiting excess asset reversions, this second Member of what I have called the pension gang-of-three would levy over a half billion dollars annually on the Nation's 5.4 million pension and welfare benefit plans. As emphasized by the gentleman from Minnesota these charges are not user fees because the required filings under ERISA are not voluntary and the sponsors of such plans derive no specific benefit from such filings. These taxes, in another name, increase plan costs while doing nothing to enhance retiree security.

Because these provisions, among others, pose a serious threat to the viability of the Nation's voluntary private pension system, the administration also strongly opposes their inclusion in budget reconciliation.

In conclusion, I support my colleague's point of order because it is a tax measure that raises revenues 14 times the amount that can be spent for its stated purposes. Because the effect on plan participants of any plan is completely disproportionate to the fee paid, for example since plans with thousands of participants pay almost the same fee as the plans with a few. And because the benefit of the enforcement of this Nation's laws, in this case as in any other is a public benefit spread among the citizenry, and not confined to those whose protection is the object of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other Members who wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the point of order against section 3201, under clause 5(b) of rule 21, raised by my colleague from Minnesota Mr. FRENZEL.

Clause 5(b), of course, provides that "no bill * * * carrying a tax or tariff measure shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction to report tax and tariff measures * * *." Section 3201, reported out by the Education and Labor Committee, requires pension and employee benefit plans to pay what the section calls a user fee to the Department of Treasury when filing a form 5500 annual report, a summary plan description, a summary of material modification, or a notice of qualified transfer of express pension assets. These so-called user fees would range from $100 to $500. The first three forms are required to be filed under current law; the fourth would be required to be filed under the retiree health transfer provisions at section 3052 of the bill. None are optional. The amounts generated by these fees are to be transferred by the Treasury to the Department of Labor for enforcement and will be considerable—over $580 million, according to the Congressional Budget Office.

Well, is this so-called user fee actually a fee or is it a tax, reported in violation of clause 5(b)? The gentleman from Minnesota has already raised compelling arguments on this point but perhaps it may also be useful to lay out some basic definitions concerning the key terms involved here. Blacks Law Directory—1979 edition—citing case law, defines a "fee" as a "recompense for an official or professional service or a charge * * * or compensation for a particular act or service * * *." I think this fits what most of us believe a fee is, a payment in return for something specific or compensation for some direct government service; an entrance fee to use a park would be a common example. Under section 3201, of course, no service is being offered at all—the forms are required under law and must be filed and will ostensibly be used to check employer compliance. To say this is a service would be an interesting twist in Orwellian newspeak, and a problem which has required the authors of the provision to make the rather bizarre argument, as already suggested by my colleague from Minnesota, that the service being provided here is the enforcement of laws Congress has already provided for. Let's call this what it is—a tax. Again, Black's is helpful here, defining a "tax" as a "pecuniary burden laid upon individuals to suggest the government and is a payment exacted by legislative authority * * *. Essential characteristics of a tax are that it is not a voluntary payment or donation, but an enforced contribution, exacted pursuant to legislative authority." The alleged user fee—a required payment on a required form—for which no service is provided squarely fits within this definition and, therefore, violates clause 5(b), in that the charge did not originate from the committee with jurisdiction over tax measures; that is Ways and Means.

Fortunately, Jefferson's Manual refers us to helpful, if not directly on point, precedents. In one case, at pages 10749-10751 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 29, 1972, an amendment to an environmental bill was being considered. The amendment required that entities which discharged waste effluents be charged a sum calculated according to a certain schedule based on the discharge; the "charges"—the term used by the legislation—were to be paid to the Treasury which was then to place the money in a fund for the use of the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] to asist water control programs. Sound familiar? A point of order was raised on the grounds that the charge was a "tax on effluents and raises revenues" and was, therefore, solely within the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee. The Chair upheld the point of order, rejecting an argument that the charges were basically user charges, ruling that the charge was, in fact, a "provision for collecting revenues or taxes." While the Chair was specifically addressing an issue of germaneness at the time—5(b) of rule 21 was not promulgated until 1983 and was thus unavailable as a point of order—the reasoning that the charges required to be paid by law were revenue raisers and, thus, taxes—remains on point.

On September 12, 1984, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page H9407, a point of order was also raised under 5(b), against an amendment to expand the authority of the Customs Service to seize and use the proceeds from the sale of contraband to defray operational expenses on the basis that the amendment would "result in a significant increase in Customs revenues." The point of order was conceded and sustained. Can any one doubt that the nearly $600 million raised by section 3201 is a significant increase in revenues?

Of course, true user fees can also generate funds—but in those instances, as already discussed, and unlike section 3201, a direct service—the value of which generates the fee—is provided.

Section 3201 imposes a required fee for a required activity for which no service is provided. It, therefore, cannot be called a user fee, it is a tax, and its inclusion in this bill violates clause 5(b) of rule 21.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MAVROULES). Are there other Members who desire to speak on the point of order? If not, the Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] makes a point of order against section 3201 of H.R. 3299 on the ground that it carries a tax measure in a bill reported by a committee—the Committee on the Budget—not having jurisdiction to report tax measures, in violation of clause 5(b), rule XXI.

Section 3201 of the bill would impose certain fees incident to the filing of various employee benefit plan reports required under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 [ERISA]. Funds so received would be transferred from the Treasury to the Department of Labor for the enforcement of title I of ERISA.

The point of order is grounded on the fact that the payers of the filing fees in question would not merely be providing recompense for some Government activity that they occasion. Rather, the revenues gathered by such fees would be applied to more General Government activity of broader benefits, to wit, the enforcement of title I of ERISA, generally.

The Chairman believes that a provision gathering revenue to finance such a General Government activity is properly characterized as a tax within the meaning of clause 5(b), rule XXI. Accordingly, the point of order is sustained against section 3201.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. EDWARDS OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma:

Strike subtitle E of title III of the bill.

Strike subtitle I of title XI of the bill and insert the following:

Subtitle I—Child Care Provisions

SEC. 11901. EXPANSION OF EARNED INCOME TAX CREDIT.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsections (a) and (b) of section 32 (relating to earned income tax credit) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an eligible individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this subtitle for the taxable year an amount equal to 17 percent of so much of the earned income for the taxable year as does not exceed $5,714.

"(2) LIMITATION.—The amount of the credit allowable to a taxpayer under this subsection (without regard to subsection (b)) for any taxable year shall not exceed the excess (if any) of—

"(A) 17 percent of $5,714, over

"(B) 12 percent of so much of the adjusted gross income (or, if greater, the earned income) of the taxpayer for the taxable year as exceeds $9,000.

"(b) SUPPLEMENTAL YOUNG CHILD CREDIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an eligible individual with a qualifying child, the credit allowable under subsection (a) (without regard to this subsection) shall be increased by the credit percentage of so much of the earned income for the taxable year as does not exceed $10,000.

"(2) CREDIT PERCENTAGE.—

If the taxpayer has:	The credit percentage is:
1 qualifying child	10
2 qualifying children	13
3 or more qualifying children	15.

"(3) PHASEOUT OF SUPPLEMENTAL CREDIT.—If the adjusted gross income (or, if greater, the earned income) of the taxpayer for the taxable year exceeds $17,000, the credit allowable by reason of this subsection shall be reduced (but not below zero) ratably between $17,000 and $24,000 for each $100 by which such income exceeds $17,000."

(b) QUALIFYING CHILD DEFINED.—Subsection (c) of section 32 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) QUALIFYING CHILD.—The term 'qualifying child' means any child (within the meaning of section 151(c)(3)) of the eligible individual if—

"(A) such individual is entitled to a deduction under section 151 for such child (or would be so entitled but for paragraph (2) or (4) of section 152(e)),

"(B) such child has the same principal place of abode as such individual for more than one-half of the taxable year, and

"(C) such child has not attained age 5 as of the close of the calendar year in which or with which the taxable year of the taxable ends.

An individual shall not be a qualifying child for purposes of this section for the taxable year if credit is allowed to the taxpayer under section 21 for such year and employment-related expenses with respect to such individual are taken into account in computing the amount of such credit."

(c) ADVANCE PAYMENT PROVISIONS.—

(1) PAYMENT BASED ON NUMBER OF QUALIFYING CHILDREN.—

(A) Subsection (b) of section 3507 is amended by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (2), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting ", and", and by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) states the number of qualifying children (as defined in section 32(c)(3)) of the employee for the taxable year."

(B) Subparagraphs (B) and (C) of section 3507(c)(2) are amended to read as follows:

"(B) if the employee is not married, or if no earned income eligibility certificate is in effect with respect to the spouse of the employee, shall treat the credit provided by section 32 as if it were a credit—

"(i)(I) of not more than 17 percent of earned income not in excess of the amount of earned income taken into account under subsection (a)(1) of section 32, which

"(II) phases out between the amount of earned income at which the phaseout begins under subsection (a)(2) of section 32 and the amount of earned income at which the credit is phased out under such subsection, and

"(ii)(I) of not more than the credit percentage under section 32(b) of earned income not in excess of the amount of earned income taken into account under subsection (b)(1) of section 32, which

"(II) phases out between the amount of earned income at which the phaseout begins under subsection (b)(3) of section 32 and the amount of earned income at which the credit is phased out under such subsection, and

"(C) if an earned income eligibility certificate is in effect with respect to the spouse of the employee, shall treat the credit provided by section 32 as if it were a credit—

"(i)(I) of not more than 17 percent of earned income not in excess of ½ the amount of earned income taken into account under subsection (a)(1) of section 32, which

"(II) phases out between amounts of earned income which are ½ the amounts of earned income described in subparagraph (B)(i)(II), and

"(ii)(I) of not more than the credit percentage under section 32(b) of earned income not in excess of ½ the amount of earned income taken into account under subsection (b)(1) of section 32, which

"(II) phases out between amounts of earned income which are ½ the amounts of earned income described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(II).

"For purposes of this paragraph, the determination of the credit percentage under section 32(b), and the determination of the amounts referred to in subparagraphs (B)(ii) and (C)(ii), shall be made on the basis of the information specified in the earned income eligibility certificate."

(C) Clause (i) of section 3507(e)(3)(A) is amended by inserting before ", or" the following: "(or changing the percentages applicable to the employee under section 32(b) for the taxable year)".

(2) EXPANDED PARTICIPATION IN ADVANCE PAYMENT PROGRAM.—Subsection (e) of section 3507 (relating to furnishing and taking effect of certificates) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) EMPLOYERS REQUIRED TO COLLECT CERTIFICATE OR STATEMENT OF INELIGIBILITY, ETC.—On or before the date of commencement of employment with an employer, the employer shall require the employee to furnish to the employer a signed earned income eligibility certificate or a signed statement that such employee does not meet the requirements of paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b). As of the beginning of each calendar year, the employer shall require each employee with respect to whom an earned income eligibility certificate is in effect to determine whether there has been a change in circumstances requiring a new certificate or revocation of such certificate.".

(3) REPEAL OF CALENDAR YEAR LIMITATION ON EFFECTIVENESS OF CERTIFICATE.—

(A) Subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 3507(e)(1) are each amended by striking "had been in effect for the calendar year" and inserting "is in effect".

(B) Paragraph (2) of section 3507(e) is amended—

(i) by striking "for any calendar year", and

(ii) by striking "during such calendar year".

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (2) of section 32(f) is amended—

(A) by inserting "under subsection (a) and" before "under subsection (b)" each place it appears, and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"Separate tables shall be prescribed for taxpayers with no qualifying child, I qualifying child, 2 qualifying children, and 3 or more qualifying children."

(2)(A) Subparagraph (B) of section 32(i)(1) is amended by striking "begins," and all that follows and inserting "begins by substituting for 'calendar year 1987' in subparagraph (B) thereof—

"(i) 'calendar year 1984' in the case of the dollar amounts referred to in clauses (i) and (ii) of paragraph (2)(B), and

"(ii) 'calendar year 1989' in the case of the dollar amounts referred to in paragraph (2)(B)(iii)."

(B) Paragraph (2) of section 32(i) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) APPLICABLE CALENDAR YEAR.—The term 'applicable calendar year' means—

"(i) 1986 in the case of the dollar amount referred to in clause (i) of subparagraph (B),

"(ii) 1987 in the case of the dollar amount referred to in clause (ii) of subparagraph (B), and

"(iii) 1991 in the case of the dollar amounts referred to in clause (iii) of subparagraph (B).

"(B) DOLLAR AMOUNTS.—The dollar amounts referred to this subparagraph are—

"(i) the $5,714 amount contained in subsection (a),

"(ii) the $9,000 amount contained in subsection (a)(2)(B), and

"(iii) the $10,000, $17,000, and $24,000 amounts contained in subsection (b)."

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

SEC. 11902. ELIMINATION OF CHANGES IN TREATMENT OF EARNED INCOME CREDIT IN DETERMINING CERTAIN AFDC BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (A) of section 402(a)(8) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking clause (viii) and by adding "and" at the end of clause (vi).

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to payments under title IV of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning on or after January 1, 1991, without regard to whether regulations to implement such amendments are promulgated by such date.

(2) DELAY PERMITTED IF STATE LEGISLATION REQUIRED.—In the case of a State plan approved under section 402(a) of the Social Security Act which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines requires State legislation (other than legislation appropriating funds) in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendment made by subsection (a), the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of its failure to meet such additional requirement before the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

SEC. 11903. PHASEOUT OF DEPENDENT CARE CREDIT AND EXCLUSION FOR DEPENDENT CARE ASSISTANCE.

(a) DEPENDENT CARE CREDIT.—Subsection (a) of section 21 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) PHASEOUT OF CREDIT FOR TAXPAYERS WHOSE ADJUSTED GROSS INCOMES EXCEEDS $70,000.—If the taxpayer's adjusted gross income for the taxable year exceeds $70,000, the applicable percentage shall be reduced

(but not below zero) by 1 percentage point for each $1,000 of such excess."

(b) EXCLUSION FOR DEPENDENT CARE ASSISTANCE.—Paragraph (2) of section 129(a) is amended by redesignating subparagraphs (B) and (C) as subparagraphs (C) and (D), respectively, and by inserting after subparagraph (A) the following new paragraph:

"(B) PHASEOUT OF EXCLUSION FOR TAXPAYERS WHOSE ADJUSTED GROSS INCOMES EXCEEDS $70,000.—If the taxpayer's adjusted gross income for the taxable year exceeds $70,000 ($35,000 in the case of a separate return by a married individual), the dollar amounts in subparagraph (A) shall be reduced (but not below zero) by $250 for each $1,000 of such excess."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

Conform the table of contents of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] will be recognized for 60 minutes in support of his amendment, and the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] will be recognized for 60 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time be equally divided between myself, representing the Education and Labor Committee and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] representing the Ways and Means Committee.

□ 1000

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the Republican substitute on child care represents a well-reasoned, consistent, and manageable solution to the child care needs of low-income working Americans, especially families with young childen.

Before discussing what the Republican substitute does for the working poor, let me tell you first what it does not do:

It does not set up a New Federal bureaucracy to oversee paper shuffling between daycare providers and Government agencies as the Hawkins bill does because that doesn't help working families.

It does not force States to establish handwashing regulations for childcare providers as both Hawkins and Downey do because that doesn't help working families.

It does not regulate isolated individuals who, in their private homes, care for a child that does not live with them as the Downey/Hawkins bill does because that doesn't help working families.

It does not set up a national advisory committee on model child care standards as Hawkins and Downey do because that doesn't help working families.

It does not authorize over $200 million a year—that's more than $1 billion over 5 years—to be spent on coordinating activities, as Hawkins and Downey do because that doesn't help working families.

The way to help working families meet their child care needs is to give them more money and let them use it in the way that best addresses their particular child care needs and that is what the Republican substitute is all about. No fancy matching grant programs or regulatory requirements; no new authorizations or advisory committees; the Republican plan relies on a simple tax cut for working families with kids, leaving to families the choice of how to use that additional income to meet their personal child care needs.

The Edwards amendment on child care funnels every dollar to the people who need it—the low- and moderate-income mothers and fathers with children, especially preschool children, who are having a tough time making ends meet. Not a dollar goes to bureaucrats, but over the next 5 years the Edwards amendment would put $15.1 billion into the pockets of families with children.

Families with qualifying incomes who earn over half their child's support are not discriminated against just because only one parent works outside the home or because the family does not pay for child care services. If their income qualifies them for the credit, they get it.

For families that owe taxes at the end of the year, we reduce their tax burden and allow them to keep more of what they are already earning. Because the credit is refundable, parents who don't owe taxes still receive the benefit, in regular installments in their paychecks if they choose.

In short, the Edwards amendment stands for using the Tax Code to identify the neediest families with children, and, without discrimination, helping them meet their personal child care needs by supplementing their income through lower taxes.

Under the Edwards amendment, low-income working families receive special assistance in two specific ways: First, through a general increase to the earned income tax credit; second, through an additional, more generous tax credit to families with preschool children.

In the first place, we raise the standard credit available under the earned income tax credit from 14 to 17 percent for any parent who is the head of a household and earns more than half the support for a dependent child. Families earning the maximum credit now would receive a credit worth $216 more should the Edwards amendment pass.

In the second place, we add a new, more generous supplemental credit for low- to moderate-income families with one, two, or three children under 5 years of age. Families earning between $10,000 and $17,000 in 1991 qualify for the maximum supplemental preschool child credit. This credit affects an even broader population of working families than the standard EITC which is fully phased in at the $7,150 income level and begins phasing out for families earning over $11,270.

The supplemental young child credit gives families with incomes between $10,000 and $17,000 an additional $1,000 tax credit if they have a child under 5. They receive $1,300 if they have two children under 5 and $1,500 if they have three children under 5.

The Standard EITC is estimated in 1991 to phase out completely for families earning more than $21,280, but the supplemental preschool child credit in the Republican package continues to benefit families earning up to $24,000.

Families are eligible to receive both the enhanced earned income tax credit and the supplemental credit, and they can opt to forego the supplemental young child credit for the dependent care tax credit if the DCTC nets them a higher benefit.

By focusing 100 percent of our benefits on the poor and moderate income families, we can put $15.1 billion back into the pockets of deserving working families, but the Republican plan still spends almost $8.6 billion less than the Downey-Hawkins bill over 5 years, and $3.1 billion less than the Stenholm bill.

By phasing out and reducing tax breaks for the rich, we save an additional $1.1 billion over 5 years.

Mr. Chairman, the difference between the approach taken in the Edwards amendment and the approach taken by Hawkins-Downey is not hard to understand. It is the difference between, on the one hand, approaching the child care problem by establishing new HUD-style influence peddling bureaucracy best suited to writing reports, issuing regulations, and setting up elaborate systems to trickle down benefits to the people who really need them, or on the other hand, solving the child care problem by putting $15.1 billion directly into the pocketbooks and checking accounts of working families with children.

Instead of giving bureaucrats a choice, let's give parents a choice.

Maximizing family choice in the area of child care in not only the best way to help those families in the greatest need, it is also the best way to monitor the quality of child care services being provided. No government regulator or annual inspector will be more effective at monitoring the quality of child care standards than a parent, paying for services, who observes the quality of care his or her child receives on a daily basis. To the extent that basic health and safety concerns must be addressed, the States already do that. Like any other business, child care providers who fail to meet the expectations of their clients will either improve or go out of business.

The Republican substitute stands for targeting all benefits to families in the greatest need, adding no new regulations, not asking the taxpayers to subsidize new advisory committees. It stands for giving parents greater freedom in child care options. I urge my colleagues to support the Republican child care package.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Ms. KAPTUR). The gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. HAWKINS. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Edwards' substitute.

Today, we are considering a proposal to address the child care crisis confronting our Nation. What Mr. EDWARDS offers is not child care. Rather, it is assistance provided by tax credits. It is income that can be used for living expenses, but not necessarily for child care.

This is not to say that the supporters of H.R. 3299 are opposed to tax credits. We are not. However, we favor a comprehensive approach which combines direct services for child care with tax credits. In addition to direct services and tax credits, our proposal also includes an expansion of Head Start, an early childhood education component, before- and after-school care, and business incentive grants.

Our proposal addresses quality, affordability and availability of child care. The Edwards substitute addresses none of these critical issues.

The supporters of H.R. 3299 are committed to a national child care policy. We certainly support tax credits as an integral part of such a policy. However, make no mistake about it: Tax credits alone do not constitute child care.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the Edwards substitute. It does not adequately address the child care crisis facing America today.

Mr. BARTLETT. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Madam Chairman, my question is to try to clear up what may be misinformation going on.

Madam Chairman, I serve on the Committee on Education and Labor with the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], and the Committee on Education and Labor placed into H.R. 3, three explicit prohibitions against religious activities in child care centers using these funds. There are rumors all over the House floor suggesting that it would be the intention of the leadership to drop those three provisions in the conference committee. Those rumors seem to be very explicit at this point, and I wonder if the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] could tell us whether that is so or not so, or just for the purpose——

Mr. HAWKINS. Madam Chairman, I have no knowledge. I cannot speak to that. I can only say categorically that under the proposal which we crafted no church is denied the opportunity to participate in the program which we have recommended.

We have in addition to that offered through the combination of EITC with the Committee on Education and Labor the opportunity to provide funding for everyone who qualifies as a provider.

Obviously there are viewpoints that must be reconciled. We must reconcile our viewpoint with the Committee on Ways and Means.

Now how we do that will eventually be left up to a conference. I would only say that, unless the package in reconciliation is one which is adopted today, we will not have an opportunity even to move either direction when the eventual conference is held. The adoption of Stenholm eliminates the Committee on Education and Labor, and it also eliminates child care. It eliminates education and child care. It eliminates the opportunity of providers to benefit under any program. That is the end of the road, and so 3 years of work will have gone down the drain. Now that is the only thing.

Madam Chairman, what we do in conference is another matter. A conference consists of a compromise. Obviously there will be some movement, and I think that we can get together with the Committee on Ways and Means, reconcile our differences with them and also reconcile our differences with the Senate which has a proposal quite different from ours.

Mr. BARTLETT. Madam Chairman, if the gentleman will further yield——

Mr. HAWKINS. Madam Chairman, I am limited to time, may I indicate? I think that I have stated already that the ones who have in the last 30 hours surfaced were not the ones who asked to be heard before the committee. They have surfaced in support, not necessarily of the Edwards substitute, but another substitute, the Stenholm, so-called Stenholm substitute, which has not been heard by any committee, which has originated in a few hours within the last 3 weeks. We do not know where it came from. We do not know who wrote it, and we do not know where it is headed.

Mr. HENRY. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKINS. Madam Chairman, if time has not been allocated, I would yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Madam Chairman, I will certainly yield 30 seconds of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HAWKINS. Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HENRY. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] for this dialog.

Let me simply point out, first of all, that the opposition is very visible. The reason it surfaced only in the last several weeks is we only got the rule in the last several weeks. When we considered this bill in the Committee on Education and Labor——

Mr. HAWKINS. Madam Chairman, is the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY] talking about Edwards?

Mr. HENRY. Stenholm as well, and the reason the procedure was made necessary is when we discussed this bill in committee the chairman very generously historically has argued for open rules, or fairly open rules, for Ed and Labor bills, but it came to us through reconciliation, thereby eliminating our opportunities to consider and revisit matters we considered in committee and assumed we could bring on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY] has expired.

Mr. HENRY. Even the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] went to the Committee on Rules, and he was turned down an opportunity to present an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY] has expired.

Mr. HAWKINS. Madam Chairman, I would like to be informed of what time has been credited to me, and what time to the other side.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] has 23 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] has 51½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] has 30 minutes remaining.

Mr. HAWKINS. Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DOWNEY. Madam Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Edwards substitute for child care. This proposal would do little to address many of the needs for more child care, and it does even less to improve the quality of child care.

The earned income tax credit is a very good mechanism for providing assistance to poor Americans. That is why the Ways and Means Committee has included a substantial increase in the EITC in this budget reconciliation package. However, tax credits alone cannot provide adequate resources for the very poorest Americans to pay for child care. The maximum tax credit under EDWARDS' proposal is $2,700 for a family with three preschool children. The average child care slot is estimated to cost $3,000 per year, so a family would need an estimated $9,000 to provide day care for three children. This gap is too large for us to say that we have provided child care through the EITC alone.

In addition, tax credits do not efficiently reimburse a family's expenses until after the family has paid for child care. Thus a parent who does not have the cash up front will not be able to benefit from this approach at all.

This tax credit bill leaves out improvements to Head Start—a program which we know works—and to school-based care, which means we are not tapping into an easily available resource which is education oriented.

Tax credits do not address standards, which means our children could be warehoused with too many children being looked after by too few caretakers. At worst, our children will be in actual physical danger. At best, they may fail to receive the care and attention they need to develop and grow into healthy, productive citizens. It is a very short-sighted approach.

On top of all this, the EITC which is described in both Representative EDWARDS' and Representative STENHOLM's substitute amendments is not the same as that which we approved in the Ways and Means Committee. The EITC included in these substitutes would be counted as income, affecting the eligibility of poor families for AFDC, for Medicaid, and for public housing. Thus, our attempt to assist poor families by helping them to pay for child care could backfire to a point where children lose their homes, their health care, and even their daily sustenance. This certainly is not what we intended when we started working on child care proposals 5 years ago.

Madam Chairman, I oppose this amendment. Tax credits alone do not fulfill our promise to the American people that we will provide relief for their struggle to find adequate child care. After 5 years of hard work, after the expectations and momentum which we have built up over that time, we can do better than this. We must do better than this.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Madam Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCHULZE].

Mr. SCHULZE. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Oklahoma for yielding me this time.

I would like to pay tribute to the leadership of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] and that of our whip, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH], as well as the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HOLLOWAY] for trying to find a workable solution to child care. Their dedication and concern about the American family is preeminent.

We have before us today two very different approaches to address the child care needs of American families. One approach, as outlined in H.R. 3, creates a new bureaucracy within the Federal Government, institutes regulations, and necessitates Federal and State intervention. The better approach, the Edwards-Holloway-Schulze substitute, uses tax credits and returns hard-earned money to families to defray the costs of child care. A pure tax credit proposal avoids problems created by government intervention, maximizes parental choice, and solves the true crisis facing young families—overtaxation.

Without the adoption of the Edwards amendment, H.R. 3 would require States to impose a litany of regulations on grant-receiving child care providers. For example, H.R. 3 would dictate that States train every child care staffer at least 15 hours annually. This requirement would apply to grandmothers, and mothers and fathers operating local child care centers. H.R. 3 would require States to train inspection personnel. It would require States to establish a committee on licensing which would issue reports and more standards. H.R. 3 would even require States to issue regulations on the number of times child care workers must wash their hands during the course of a day.

In these times where money is scarce and national deficits are threatening, the Government cannot squander money in this manner. Imagine spending Government money to train a grandmother how to change a diaper. This is a true example of wasteful spending.

Without burdensome regulations and bureaucracy, our proposal solves the real problem faced by families with young children—overtaxation. Around 1950, families paid only 2 percent of their income in Federal taxes. Today, families pay on average up to 24 percent of their income to the Government—a 1,200-percent increase in that time period. As taxes have increased, so have the costs of rearing children. In 1950, Johnson's baby soap cost 49 cents. Today it costs $2.29.

Inflation and heavy tax burdens strike continual blows against young and low-income families. In most every family situation, the Republican proposal gives more tax relief to more families than H.R. 3.

Since Republicans first initiated the idea of expanding the earned income tax credit, studies have shown that this approach is one of the most effective incentives in keeping people employed. The earned income tax credit is the only program which effectively links Government benefits to work incentives. The earned income tax credit fits nicely with the proposal to cut the capital gains tax. New jobs created by the cut in capital gains taxes will mean more low-income people will receive the earned income tax credit.

Finally, votes for H.R. 3 are votes for huge increases in Government spending, much of which are not scored under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget rules. While H.R. 3 will increase the deficit significantly, it does not score for meeting budget targets a $2.5-billion increase for Head Start, $2.4 billion in school grant money, $2.1 billion for administrative purposes, $310 million for incentives for standards, and $98 million for a business grant. These hidden authorizations are enormous increases in Government spending and are clearly an overt attempt to deceive American taxpayers. Additionally, history has shown that these new grant programs explode in out years. This translates to more Government spending in future years and everlasting deficits.

A tax credit for families as proposed in the Edwards amendment is the cleanest and best approach to ensure affordable, equitable care for America's children. Tax credits avoid needless regulation and Government Bureaucracy and will help to offset the unfair tax burdens on today's young families. Let's help families care for their own children and keep the Government out of our homes.

Mr. HAWKINS. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE].

Mr. KILDEE. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Edwards substitute to the child care provisions in H.R. 3299.

The child care challenge facing our Nation defies simple answers like tax credits alone.

Testimony before the Education and Labor Committee clearly indicates that parents face three barriers to obtaining child care.

These are: First, affordability, second, availability; and third, quality of care.

Certainly, families benefit from more favorable tax policies, and tax changes have been included in H.R. 3299.

However, many families facing high child care costs will still need additional help.

The average cost of child care in the United States is $3,000 a year. While assistance received through a tax credit may make care marginally more affordable, the actual cost of care will remain beyond the reach of many low-income families.

H.R. 3299 assures parents that the actual cost of child care will be met by basing assistance on the total cost of child care.

A Lou Harris poll released last week illustrates the difficulties parents face in locating child care across the Nation. It found that parents use an average of three different types of child care each week.

Tax credits do nothing to expand the supply of child care providers.

H.R. 3299 expands the supply of child care by providing grants to child care providers to expand and improve their facilities, to improve the quality of their services, and to businesses for the establishment of child care facilities.

Finally and most importantly, tax credits alone do nothing to improve the quality of care available to families.

Last week's Lou Harris poll reported that the dissatisfaction among parents with the quality of child care has risen 13 percent between April and August of this year.

The April poll reported that 85 percent of those questioned felt the Federal Government should address issues related to the quality of child care.

Not only does the substitute not address quality, it eliminates provisions of H.R. 3299 that call on the States to do so.

The Federal Government does not rely on tax credits to meet the health care needs of our country, we have the Medicare and Medicaid Programs.

We do not rely on tax credits to meet the income needs of the elderly, we have created the Social Security Program. Families, too, need more assistance with child care than a tax credit alone can provide.

Do we really want the IRS to be the Federal agency with primary responsibility for our children.

Madam Chairman, I believe that a tax credit in combination with a comprehensive child care proposal will address each of the barriers families face in obtaining child care.

This substitute does not address those barriers and I urge its defeat.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HOLLOWAY].

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, let me address a couple of issues which have already been brought up by the other side.

First of all, the gentleman, the chairman of the committee, brings up that we do nothing for child care. Who in the world thinks that government can take care of children better than parents? I think he is really slapping the parents of this country in the face when he says that the Government can take care of their children better than they can. I resent that very much and feel that we should think of the 93 percent of the people who do not use commercial child care.

They say this bill does nothing for child care. This bill benefits 100 percent of the American families between zero and $24,000. The other side of the aisle only benefits 7 percent of the day care needs of this country, so to me the bill that we offer today is so much more practical for this country and good for this country that they do not compare.

The only part of H.R. 3 that they have funded at this point, that the Committee on Ways and Means has made available, is for tax credits. All the rest of the money that we see is only authorized, and we know the problems we have today with trying to find money for the war on drugs. What is going to take second place? Where are we going to come up with the money to fund the agencies and the $27 billion that they are saying that they are going to spend?

The only money that they are going to spend is the money on tax credits, and I think that our bill offers much more tax credits for this country.

Why do we always make things so complicated? You say that things are not as simple as we want to make them sometimes. This is a simple bill, a very practical bill, which meets the needs of the people of this country, the family, which the gentleman before said were taxed 2 percent in 1950 and are now taxed at 24 percent.

To me, the issue is very simple. The Edwards substitute is a much better bill for us to vote for.

I want to touch on one thing real quickly and that is very important to us at this point, and that is the religious argument. Titles II, III, and IV of the Hawkins-Downey bill states that no child care provider shall receive financial assistance under this subchapter who shall engage in sectarian activity, including sectarian worship and instruction, and in the program for which assistance is received. I think that states that a religious day care center is going to go out of the day care business. They are there for a service. They are there to help the community. The inner cities in this country receive the best child care there is available through the religious community. One-third of the organized day care in this country is handled through religious providers. To take it away from them, I think, hurts us in more ways than we can ever say.

Studies show that youths with religious influence in the inner city are 47 percent less likely to drop out of school, 54 percent less likely to use drugs, 50 percent less likely to engage in criminal activities, and to me if we take day care away from the churches, we destroy probably the best child care that a family can turn to.

When considering single mothers today, 75 percent of their children are cared for by a family member, 75 percent are cared for by family. The other side does nothing for that group. We give single mothers the same benefits as other mothers.

I encourage the Members very strongly to look at the Edwards substitute. It does address child care, because it targets the money to preschool children who are in the greatest need of child care in the country today.

I urge the Members to support the Edwards amendment.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am taking this 1 minute to follow up on an exchange I had with the chairman of the committee earlier and to correct a couple of things.

First, it is true that if the Edwards substitute passes, the Committee on Education and Labor will not be involved in the conference, but if the subsequent Stenholm-Shaw substitute passes, the Committee on Education and Labor will very much be a part of the conference, because Stenholm-Shaw includes Head Start and other Education and Labor provisions.

Second, the opposition to the religious-provider prohibition was heard at the committee. It was heard from, among others, by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] and others who eloquently pled the cause of permitting, of permitting religious providers to be part of this bill, but we lost at the committee. We had sought the opportunity, as I know the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] had to bring an amendment to the floor to correct that on the floor.

One could say that the correct vote today for people who want religious providers included in child care would be to vote for Edwards or the Stenholm-Shaw and then suggest to the Committee on Education and Labor that they bring back the ABC bill under an open rule so the House floor can consider that issue squarely and forthrightly. I think that would be a better approach.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me first try to address the religious question and explain how, for purposes of explanation, we did it in the Committee on Ways and Means and how I think it is both appropriate constitutionally and operationally effective.

What the Committee on Ways and Means attempted to do was to be silent on the church-state issue. There are some here, and I do not imagine any of them are on the floor, who would like to use this to sanctify the role of religion in child care, and there are some, probably not here either, who want a definitive statement with respect to whether vouchers are constitutional or unconstitutional and to have the House or the Senate make those statements.

This process is either constitutional or not. What we say or do here will not make it constitutional. We have, as we all know, the presumption of constitutionality when we pass our acts, but that does not mean that it is not subject to review by the court later on.

We in the Committee on Ways and Means sought to channel the additional money for child care through title XX of the Social Security Act, and we chose that mechanism for several reasons. First, we chose it because it is an existing body of law, and the States have wide experience with delivering services including child care. They have, the States, this prospect of dealing with church-state conflict in front of them all the time. And the States, and I see the gentleman from Texas standing, have very effectively dealt with these issues.

They are sensitive to the issue of discrimination and nondiscrimination, sectarian use and nonsectarian use, and without, I am not a constitutional scholar, getting into the various requirements of the establishment clause of the first amendment, the court has left open some intervening factors; namely, whether or not the money goes to a parent who ultimately makes the choice.

It would be my hope, and I believe it is the position of our leadership, that when we go to conference that the position that the Ways and Means Committee has taken, that the position of the Senate providing the widest possible latitude, the existing order that the States have created, would be continued.

Mr. Chairman, I will not yield to the gentleman at this time, but am happy to yield on this point because I understand the gentleman from Texas is anxious to find some conflicts, because in the conflict he might be able to find some votes.

Let me make it clear to the gentleman as we debate this, the position of the Ways and Means Committee is to use title XX and to use the law as it exists so that if there are child care providers currently receiving them in the State of Texas where there are sectarian purposes that are not specific, but there are intervening factors in the case of the money going to the parent in the form of the voucher, that will continue. It is inappropriate, incorrect, misleading, and demagogic to suggest that what we have attempted here is in any way inimical to the established order. We do not seek that. We do not seek to undermine what in fact is working today.

So much for religion. Let me now address some of the questions of the Edwards substitute. I will be happy to have a dialogue with my colleague in a moment.

The Edwards substitute, as far as it goes, is not a bad idea. It is not a bad idea because it recognizes that we need to put some money into the pockets of working poor people so that they are empowered by this additional money to make some choices. As far as it goes, it is a good idea.

But it does nothing about the quality of child care. It does nothing about the affordability of child care. It does nothing to create child care.

The Edwards approach, it has been the mantra of the Republican Party, is that the marketplace will decide this issue. We will send our children into the marketplace and the parents of all our children will suddenly be empowered with the knowledge and the ability to select healthy environments, well-regulated environments for our kids.

Oh, that that would be true. The fact is that some of the States do a fine job for our children and some of the States do not. Our children, whether they are from the State of Louisiana, from the State of Texas, or New York, or California, deserve the absolute finest and best care we can provide for them.

What does that mean? Well, what it means simply is that in this panoply of regulation that exists in our country, where we regulate the type of food we eat, the quality of drugs we ingest, the type of beverages we have, that the Federal Government has found it appropriate for us to have clear and convincing regulations so that our health is protected.

Clearly our health is important, and so are our children. All we are saying, whether it is in H.R. 3 or in the Ways and Means provisions of the bill, is that we want to make sure the child care providers are educated, have some sense of nuturance, have some ability to like the teachers that we have educating our children. That does not seem to me to be an onerous requirement, 15 hours of education and training for our children.

The Edwards approach is silent on this. It says no, the marketplace will take care of it. The marketplace has not taken care of it. Others will say well, if we have some regulation that will not guarantee that we will not have Jessica McClures falling down into a well because there was an unregulated situation, one poor woman attempting to care for nine children.

Maybe Members would prefer to have a situation where we take that risk. I do not. I do not want to risk any child in this country.

The gentleman says Federal regulation will not solve that problem. I say it may. I would prefer to err on the side of safety. With me are not only many colleagues in my party, but about 85 percent of the American people who do not think it appropriate for us not to have regulation for safety, for health, for training. That is an appropriate Federal response.

We lament, do we not, the fact that our children have varying standards of education in this country. We should further lament the fact that certain numbers of our children who are young and the most vulnerable can be put in positions that may threaten their life.

No, no, my friend. This is a classic example of two different forms of approach. Not burdensome regulation, but safety and health and education versus the vulgarities of the marketplace.

The Edwards substitute is going to fail because the American people do not want to risk their children. The reason that the Democratic provision hopefully will prevail is because we understand the important role of the Federal Government in this critical matter.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I am seeking an understanding of what is in the bill.

The gentleman is correct it seems to me about what he said on the Ways and Means portion of the bill on title XX as far as it goes.

The question is then is the gentleman going in conference to intend to eliminate the education and labor portion of the bill which we are voting on today contained in the legislation of three explicit prohibitions against sectarian activities by child care providers receiving these funds? That is the issue, not what the Ways and Means Committees did with the vouchers.

Mr. DOWNEY. The gentleman from Texas has no quarrel I assume then with the approach that the Ways and Means Committee has taken with respect to the delivery of services under title XX and is silent on this issue?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I have less quarrel with the Ways and Means approach. My quarrel, and I think it is a quarrel shared by Members of the gentleman's side of the aisle on the Education and Labor Committee, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. KILDEE, for example, with the Education and Labor Committee language. What is the intent of the gentleman from New York with respect to those prohibitions which stay in the bill as of today?

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, let me try if I may in a friendly manner to pin down the gentleman from Texas a bit on this issue of remaining silent on church-state matters.

If, for instance, the conference were to address this issue and say that neither the Senate nor the House language was appropriate, but that we will deliver the services of child care through title XX, the gentleman would accept then, would he not, the fact that the State of Texas would have additional money through title XX and would continue to operate as it currently operates. The gentleman would have no problem with that, would he?

Mr. BARTLETT. As far as that goes, that is correct. We are seeking the States to be able to set their own rules within the bounds of the Constitution. But H.R. 3 does not say that.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, that would be my preference and what I would work for in conference.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes, I yield to the gentlewoman from Connecticut.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman absolutely and I know how hard he has worked for this. I support the gentleman in his effort to put the money for services into the system through title XX and through Head Start. But in fact the Education and Labor Committee bill does not say this and the Education and Labor Committee foundered on this very issue in the last session. It was this issue that prevented the bill from coming to the floor.

I have no confidence that those provisions can be stripped out of the bill in conference unless action is taken on the House floor here today, because the interest groups that back H.R. 3 are very adamant on this matter. It is one of the reasons why the gentleman's side would not allow his amendment to H.R. 3, which would have provided a very healthy policy.

Mr. DOWNEY. The interest groups I would say to the gentlewoman, will not be arguing in conference. The Members of Congress will be arguing in conference.

I think for further clarification so that we can argue on the competing ideologies of how we want to deliver child care and set aside this issue, the leadership will come forward, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] at some point to further address this issue, because it is my desire very firmly to allow the States to continue to do what they are doing today and to make sure that is clear in the law. That would be my intention when I go to the conference.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. I appreciate that. Does the gentleman think he could get that provision to govern the new programs in H.R. 3?

Mr. DOWNEY. I also want to be clear with respect to the Senate language, which I do not want to torture us with here, which attempts to make certain activities constitutional that may not be. So I think unless we are anxious to pick a fight over this, and I sense the gentlewoman is not and we are not, that we have to do some work with the Senate to make sure that the States can continue to do what is currently being done.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Certainly. I am not anxious to pick a fight on this issue, but I am convinced from attending a forum on this very issue at Harvard with the lawyers who have been doing the litigating on this matter that the only way we can avoid it is in fact through sending our money down through title XX where there are established pathways. By establishing new grant programs under H.R. 3 we will be entrapped in this very issue. The money in H.R. 3 will not be allowed to go to religious institutions.

Mr. DOWNEY. If I may say to my friend and colleague, the gentlewoman from Connecticut, I am happy to engage and continue this dialog, but I would prefer to do it on her time.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] has consumed 12 minutes of his time and has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON].

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, it indeed is satisfying to me that the day care debate has generated support for a natural family support policy in America. In this time when we have often anguished over the reality of the lives of an increasing number of America's children who are growing up in poverty, we are doing, through adopting an expansion of the earned income tax credit that specifically reflects the number of children in low-income families, a policy that goes to the heart of the issue of children living in poverty.

We have seen what a difference it has made to have Social Security for our seniors and how the poverty rate among seniors has dropped as a consequence of Social Security.

I see us today as taking a giant step forward on the issue of children in poverty by adopting an income support policy that was proposed by my Republican colleagues and supported by a Republican President.

Indeed, I think this is an important day for women and children in America.

But adoption of an income support policy is important for another reason: If you read the polls carefully, people want more day care options and they want quality care, but they also want the right to take care of their own children.

Increasingly, women and men are making the decision to change the patterns of their work life in order to be able to care for their own children.

Indeed, with the expansion of day care has come the realization that parents provide a quality of care that is irreplaceable. What is important about this policy, the expanded EITC, is that it will allow many parents, particularly where there are two parents, to work part time and to, through this income expansion, have the liberty of working only nights or weekends or in some way maximizing their time to care for their child, maximizing their mate's time to care for their child and minimizing out-of-home care for children in America.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] has 39½ minutes remaining, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] has 19 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. LOWEY].

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the substitutes by Mr. EDWARDS and Mr. STENHOLM.

We have an historic opportunity today to vote for a comprehensive child care plan that responds to the real child care needs of families across the Nation.

That plan is already contained in the reconciliation bill. It is the Hawkins bill, H.R. 3, along with the Downey amendment. And every Member of this body who wishes to respond to the real needs of America's families should support the provisions of the reconcilation bill and vote against the Edwards and Stenholm substitutes, which simply do not promote sound child care policy.

Why is the Hawkins-Downey bill a superior approach? Because our Nation's child care crisis is not only a question of supplemental funding for the families in need of care. It is also a crisis of availability, of quality, and of safety.

The Hawkins bill contains essential provisions that will not only put additional dollars in the hands of parents, but also expand the availability of care, improve the quality of care, and ensure the safety of our children. And it contains essential incentives for enhancing business involvement in providing child care services.

The American people understand full well that our children are our most precious resource. And if we are to preserve and protect that precious resource, the Federal Government must do more than enact a simple tax credit. We must expand the successful Head Start Program for disadvantaged youth. We must promote child care programs in our schools. We must support child care in centers, churches, synagogues, and family day care settings. We must ensure that our children's health, safety, and development are fully protected by essential quality assurances. And we must support our nation's employers who are seeking to provide child care benefits for their employees.

The Hawkins-Downey bill accomplishes these important tasks. But the substitutes do not. They do not expand Head Start. They will not increase availability, improve quality, or ensure safety. They do not adequately support our Nation's employers. These substitutes amount to an abandonment of our children in their time of need. They will not protect and nourish our most precious resource, and they deserve to be defeated soundly and overwhelmingly by this body.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support sound child care policy. Support Hawkins-Downey. Defeat Edwards and defeat Stenholm.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI].

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Edwards amendment. Frankly, if this were my amendment, I would structure the details of its tax credits slightly differently. But the basic principles behind this amendment are much more important to me, and I believe those principles are clear, sound, and supported by most of the public.

The first principle is that any additional Federal money for child care should go 100 percent directly to parents, and zero percent to bureaucrats. A second principle is that the money should be concentrated on low-income families, where the need is greatest. A third principle is that the money should be distributed fairly across all eligible families in the relevant income range. A fourth, and crucial, principle is that we should not discriminate against families which care for their own children. The cleanest, most efficient way to advance all these principles is a pure tax credit approach to the issue as found in the Edwards amendment.

The "ABC" type approach embodied in the bill before us violates all these principles. It proceeds from a totally different philosophy. Its philosophy is that parents cannot be trusted to decide what kind of care is best for their children; that an assortment of Government officials, interest groups, and social engineers should decide what's best; that the type of care to be favored is regulated center-based child care with no religious association; and that parents who make sacrifices, often the biggest economic sacrifices of anyone, in order to take care of their own children, should get no help. Granted, the Ways and Means Committee EITC reform provisions in the bill do not proceed from that philosophy, but the rest of the reported provisions do, for the most part.

From the beginning, the Republican approach to this issue has been vastly different. It has been first to ask what the problem is that we are trying to address. The problem is not availability—the child care market is alive and well and meeting increased demand in a myriad of ways. And similarly there is no quality problem that parents and the States cannot solve better than the Federal Government.

No, the basic problem is that children cost money. It costs money to feed, clothe, house, and provide activities for them, and it costs a lot of money to take care of them all day, whether parents pay others to do that, or whether parents diminish their own earnings in order to stay home and do it themselves. Either way, the children need to be looked after and a real cost is borne by someone to do that. Because of that cost, and the others associated with raising children, low-income families especially are having a hard time making ends meet.

The problem, then, is too little income for low-income working families with children. And the solution is to supplement their incomes directly, according to need as determined by family size, through reform of the EITC. For me the choice is clear, give the money to the parents.

It's really the same problem we talk about in the minimum wage debate—except in that context we are concerned about all the costs of raising children, while in the child care context. we talk about just one of the major costs.

In any case, today we are debating how to spend a pot of new Federal money labeled "child care" money. We can give it all to low-income parents as the Edwards amendment would do. Or we can give much of it to bureaucrats and providers, and wreak havoc in the child care marketplace at the same time, as the reported provisions would do.

For me, the choice is clear. Give the money to the parents. Let the parents decide how to spend it. Let the parents decide what kind of care their children need. Let the parents care for their own children, if they so wish, and get the same support as anyone else.

Vote for the Edwards amendment.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALLON].

□ 1100

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Edwards and Stenholm substitute, and in strong support of the Hawkins-Downey bill.

Mr. Chairman, today I am proud to support the child-care provisions in the 1990 budget reconciliation package without amendment. This commitment to the children of America is long overdue. Providing quality affordable day care to all children is not a public assistance program—it is a national necessity.

This commitment means that the Government recognizes that each child is an individual citizen to be nurtured and cherished. It is the difference between recognizing a child's potential and treating some of them like common cattle.

If we cannot think of them as our most silent and meekest constituency then at least we can see that these young ones hold the very key to our future.

National security, the technology deficit, and the drug problem will become permanent characteristics of American society if so many of our children spend every day in an understaffed and overcrowded environment that denigrates the value of the individual.

It is simple injustice if we wait until our children drop out, fail an SAT, become illiterate adults or arrested for selling drugs before the Government will pay any attention to them.

Moreover, it is fiscally irresponsible for our Government to wait. Let us look beyond fiscal year 1991 or 1992. Let us look 20 years ahead to fiscal year 2009. What we are honestly giving to our children now that gives us any hope that they will be more productive or competitive than their Japanese, Soviet, or even Chinese counterparts in the year 2009?

Families today cannot ensure America's future alone. They need tax assistance. Once they get that money, they need the assurance their children will be cared for in a safe and a productive environment. Neither of these components have been provided on a private or local government level to combat the magnitude of the problem.

In Congress, we take risks all the time in the name of preserving our democratic future. Food aid to Poland, the freedom fighters in Nicaragua, even grain trade with the Soviet Union. The stakes go even higher. Surely, America's children are worth at least two of our Stealth bomber fleet—regulations and all.

The child-care provisions in reconciliation are only a drop in the bucket to what we should be building for our children but it is a giant step in the right direction.

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TALLON. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Does the gentleman know what this will do to the cost of South Carolina child care in South Carolina, with the regulations, and what will happen to this, that the value that Members will be giving these people is going to be down the well because the cost will go to the sky?

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BALLENGER].

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Chairman, let me just say to the gentleman from New York, that in North Carolina, the marketplace is working. In my own county we have founded three new corporate day care centers, and I would like to speak about one I founded 10 years ago.

Pure and simple, we needed workers in my part of North Carolina, with an unemployment rate of less than 3 percent. We set up a day care center for welfare mothers, using CETA workers. Obviously, none were high school educated, most of the students were black. Even my own grandson went there. We were educating kids as well as babysitting for them. We now have 100 students, 60 of them are supported by welfare. We receive aid from the State, United Fund, local businesses, and Federal Government's title 2. The reason for all the additional funds that we get is to hold our costs down so welfare mothers, if they want to go to work, can leave their children with the center for $30 a week.

At the present time, we have enough regulations that make it almost impossible for the center to continue at the rate of $30 a week. We think we will have to raise our rates. The Federal Government, because of title 2 and because of the funds that we get for feeding their children, paperwork is unbelievable. It costs the center so much to operate, but even at that, the students that we have turned out have gone to our school systems, and they are mostly black students, and we believe that the guidance counselors and principals of the schools say they can recognize kids from our day care center when they get to school.

We skate on the edge. Our little daycare center skates on the edge of closing every month. We have to review all of our regulations and our costs and so forth. With another 170 new regulations, it will close the center by just exploding our costs. I have a feeling that when this is all over, and this passes, the rich will still have day care but the poor will lose whatever they have. We do not need more Federal regulations in North Carolina day care.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] has 33½ minutes remaining, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] has 17 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MARTINEZ].

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to Mr. EDWARD's amendment and any other amendment that moves to promise everything and deliver very little.

Mr. Chairman, in the minds of some, earned income tax credits are the panacea for all social needs. When in reality it benefits only those who earn enough to pay taxes and that is good but it is a subsidity to those who do not at the expense of the tax payer. Further, poor people will spend that money for their highest priority, which may or may not be childcare. H.R. 3299 provides EITC in a way that it will be used for child care. On the otherhand, the Edwards proposal does not provide parents with enough money to make any real difference when it comes to child care, although the money might help with groceries or an occasional babysitter. The Edwards amendment does nothing to increase the supply or the quality of child care.

I urge my colleagues to strongly support H.R. 3299 because it is the only measure before us today that: First, increases the supply of child care; second, provides local and state-based consumer protection; third, supports church participation without locking our churches up in litigation; and fourth, extends the EITC to help poor parents. It creates real choices rather than forcing parents to choose between no child care and bad child care. H.R. 3299 builds on what works. It helps parents who stay at home, and it assures safe educational care for children whose parents work.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentlemen from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON].

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the provisions in the bill and to the pending amendment.

However, I rise in support of the Stenholm amendment to the reconciliation bill. This amendment takes a common sense and responsible approach to child care, and minimizes the amount of Federal Government involvement in this area.

In rural America, families depend on a variety of day care sources, such as religious facilities, head start, and elderly providers. The Stenholm amendment allows for parental choice in child care services, without discimination against those who are able to stay at home with their children. This amendment is also good for small business, as it encourages these businesses to establish child care for their employees.

Mr. Speaker, I think most of us would agree that each State is better equipped than the Federal Government to determine the child care needs of its citizens. Each State is also better prepared to establish its own standards, rather than having strict regulations handed down by a newly created child care bureaucracy.

Child care is not a Democratic or Republican issue, and a number of groups along the political spectrum have endorsed the Stenholm amendment as sound, responsible child care policy. The Stenhom amendment is good for families, small business, government, and rural America, and I strongly encourage my colleagues to support it.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the child care provisions included in the budget reconciliation bill and in opposition to the Edwards and Stenholm amendments. Both the Edwards and Stenholm amendments fall short of providing a diversity of programs needed to ensure that families have choices in selecting quality child care.

The Stenholm substitute would drastically reduce funds available for child care and eliminate the expansion of preschool education programs provided in the reconciliation bill. It also would deny parents any assurance that their children would be safe and well-cared for while they worked.

The Edwards substitute would delete all direct funding for child care and preschool education in the reconciliation bill. As an alternative, it would provide tax credits that would not assure decent child care or access to preschool education for America's most vulnerable children.

Mr. Chairman, as a father and former teacher, I feel it is very important to provide maximum child care for America's youth. Work demands and family responsibilities have increasingly come in conflict as mothers have become a large and permanent part of the work force. It is no longer a luxury in many families to have both parents work, it is a necessity to say nothing of the millions of American families led by single parents. Our children are the future of America and it is important for the Government to provide them with educational and developmental opportunities.

The child care provisions included in this bill offer a comprehensive plan that builds on the diversity in available child care programs. I urge my colleagues to vote against the Stenholm and Edwards amendments and support the child care sections included in the Hawkins-Downey budget reconciliation bill.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE].

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Chairman, we have heard many of the proponents gush on about how wonderful the child care provisons are in this package. I am reminded of a debate we had on catastrophic health care just a year ago. But that is another topic.

When I served in Arizona's Legislature, I remember very well tackling these very issues of child care in committee and on the floor. I think we did a good job of setting State requirements and enforcement procedures. But, we did it based on conditions in Arizona—not New York or California. It is ludicrous for the Federal Government to force, yes, force States to adopt its list of recommended standards.

Any claims that this bill will create more child care slots are just plain false. The heavy doses of regulations and reports are all aimed at restricting current child care providers. Requiring States to set training and ratio requirements and requiring them to file reports on every possible infraction will shrink the number of current day care providers. All H.R. 3 will do is drive up prices and diminish the supply of care.

Another very wrong direction this package takes us is in early childhood education. Experts in early childhood development—and I don't pretend to be one—will tell you that the type of care needed in these years is very different than school age years. What this bill asks schools to do is to take on this new role. It is a role they are unprepared, untrained and ill-equipped to handle. Our school systems are already overtaxed with responsibilities.

Either schools will have to spend large amounts of funds to train and staff early childhood care or they will have to shift their focus from education to childrearing. Twenty-nine percent of the funds will be directed to this effort. With all of the problems facing our education system, this is another mandate the system can not handle. So let's not give it to them.

But the most important issue that is ignored in the committee's proposal is parental responsibility and choice. With all of the funds going toward administration, training and subsidies to large day care centers, parents are just plain left out of the process. Unfortunately, the backers of this measure have missed the boat in the national revolution toward parental choice in education. Or maybe not; perhaps they are trying to nip it in the bud.

We do have options available to us that would allow for parental responsibility and choice, less Federal mandates, and a retention of our education system. The Edwards amendment will allow the maximum choice for parents without restricting the child care market. Expanding the earned income tax credit puts more money into the pockets of all working poor, not the coffers of bureaucrats and administrators.

The Stenholm-Shaw amendment is the Edwards amendment plus more funds for the successful Head Start and Social Service Block Grant programs. This allows parents to exercise all of their options while encouraging State and local government to find ways to increase day care slots.

I urge my colleagues to seriously consider the options available. We can give parents responsibility and choice or we can subsidize another Federal bureaucracy. Let us not repeat the mistake of catastrophic health legislation by completely misreading the needs and desires of those we are trying to help. For surely if we pass this monstrosity we will be back a year from now attempting to fix it—or repeal it. We can save ourselves a lot of grief by adopting either the Edwards or the Stenholm-Shaw amendment today.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Edwards amendment and in support of the Ways and Means Committee's child care provisions.

I firmly believe that these provisions are far more responsive to the needs of low-income parents who work to support themselves and their children.

The Ways and Means Committee's provisions in H.R. 3299 expand the earned income credit, and adjust the credit so that it is larger for families with more children. These provisions reflect the fact that large families have a harder time making ends meet than do smaller ones. The Edwards amendment provides some expansion in the credit, but allows an adjustment for family size only in the case of children under the age of 5.

Under H.R. 3299, the maximum credit available to a family with three children over the age of 5 is $1,790. Under the Edwards amendment the maximum credit available to the same family would be only $1,120, or $570 less. I believe that expenses of clothing, feeding, and caring for children do not vanish when the children turn 5, and I urge the support of this House for the Ways and Means Committee's provisions in H.R. 3299.

In addition to the expanded, adjusted basic credit, the Ways and Means Committee's provisions of H.R. 3299 include an additional credit for families with any children under the age of 6; this credit is worth a maximum $430 in 1991. This supplemental credit reflects the fact that small children are not in school, and require a greater amount of supervision during the day than school-age children. The less expansive Edwards amendment ignores the fact that 5-year-olds in most States are not in school. The cut-off age of 6 in H.R. 3299 shows a more realistic evaluation of the day care needs of low-income working families.

H.R. 3299 provides the expanded credit in addition to the present law credit for dependent care assistance. I believe both of these provisions are important for the support of parents who work and have to provide for the care and safety of their children at the same time. The Edwards amendment gives with one hand and takes away with the other since under this amendment, parents who use the additional credit for very small children are not allowed to take the dependent care assistance credit.

In the Family Support Act of 1988, Congress decided that amounts provided to working parents under the earned income tax credit would not diminish a family's eligibility for AFDC. H.R. 3299 expands this approach, and provides that the credit would not affect a family's eligibility for housing assistance, food stamps, or any other State or local means tested assistance program. The Edwards amendment would take us backwards, and repeal the provision enacted in the Family Support Act, as well as strike the provisions in H.R. 3299.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge the House's support for the Ways and Means Committee's provisions in H.R. 3299. By enacting the earned income tax credit, we decided to encourage parent's decision to work to support themselves and their families.

I believe we should not undercut this encouragement by providing that the credit only takes away some other Government benefit.

I believe that wealthy individuals are not the only ones who are sensitive to the effect of high marginal rates on work effort. I urge you: do not agree to a provision that would continue to make parents weigh the rewards of working against the burdens of the loss of housing, food, and medical care.

Under H.R. 3299, as under present law, the dependent care credit is available for working parents in all income ranges. It is larger for lower income families, because of their greater need. But it is available to all working parents to reflect the fact that child care expenses are inevitably borne when parents of young children work outside of the home. The Edwards amendment phases out the dependent care credit for families whose income exceeds $70,000.

I strongly believe we should not eliminate our recognition of the special needs of all families with dependent children, and I urge the House's support of the Ways and Means Committee's provisions of H.R 3299.

I strongly urge a "no" vote against the Edwards amendment.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Edwards substitute and, more importantly, to oppose H.R. 3, which is the bill that we are considering.

I want to note for all the Members in the House that it is in the nature of the rule and in the nature of including a massive child care bill in a tax bill that tells us that in fact this is the only debate we can have, and indeed there is not an opportunity to debate or amend the specifics of H.R. 3. I would note that sometimes these issues have gotten fuzzied up in the last several days or several weeks, so I think it is important that we concentrate on the massive new and revolutionary changes in child care in this country as proposed by H.R. 3, which is what we are voting on.

Indeed it seems to me that the burden of proof of passing this bill ought to be on the proponents of H.R. 3 and not on the opponents. There are several things we know about it. The first thing we know is that it is new, and that it provides for a massive new Federal role in child care, which does not happen now. We also know that it creates at least three new programs, and we know that there is much in H.R. 3 that we know nothing about.

We also know that the only way to defeat H.R. 3 and send it back to committee and bring it back to the House floor under an open rule for free-standing consideration is to vote for the Edwards substitute and/or for the Stenholm-Shaw substitute, because the Members of this body will not get a free-standing vote on child care in this session. If we defeat either the Edwards or the Stenholm substitute, the result will be that H.R. 3 will pass.

There are several problems with H.R. 3. The first one is the cost. H.R. 3 creates three brandnew Federal programs that vastly expand the Federal role in child care in this country. Here we are in days of contemplating sequestration, of cutting NASA, of cutting drug funds, cutting Head Start, and of cutting education, and with a sequestration that may happen on October 15, and yet on the House floor, in a tax bill, in a budget reconciliation, we are proposing three new Federal programs. Here we are in the days when we cannot fully fund title 20, when we are not fully funding Head Start, when we are not fully funding WIC, and we are not fully funding chapter 1, and yet the Education and Labor Committee would propose that we create three new Federal programs, no doubt also to be not funded, and to take away funding of existing Federal programs.

The three programs are chapter 4, mandating 38,000 local development councils, with the mandating of a mandatory school-based child care program. Many Members in this body support school-based child care, and that is fine. The Stenholm substitute does it right. The Stenholm substitute permits the use of title 20 money for school-based child care, but H.R. 3 mandates a new school-based child care program by the Federal Government.

Last, there is a Federal regulatory child care day care grant system, originally called ABC. The second thing we know about H.R. 3 is that it imposes new mandates to the system.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] has expired.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Chairman, the child care provision in the budget reconciliation bill is no "Johnny" or "Charlie" or "Mickey-come-lately." This Budget Committee provision is the result of 3 years of hearings in two committees of this Chamber. Testimony was received from scores of witnesses, and it has the support of over 150 professional organizations.

Now we find that after those 3 years of extensive deliberations, there remains some who would prefer to do this otherwise. But let us look carefully at some of those proposals.

No simple tax provision by itself, however worthy for its own sake, and no repackaging of tax breaks under the rubric of child care will add to the supply of safe, affordable child care in this country.

Neither of the substitutes being offered today authorize any new funds for Head Start. Neither expand Head Start to full-day, full-year services, offer before and after-school care or give direct assistance to States to care for infants and toddlers or empower the States to set their own standards of quality and excellence, in addition to giving families in need the underlying support of an earned income tax credit.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us does this within the discipline of the budget authority for which the committee fought. I urge my colleagues to support the work of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE], and the gentleman fron New York [Mr. DOWNEY] and so many others who have worked so hard to make this bill one of quality and affordability. This is one provision in reconciliation that has been well considered and carefully deliberated. The genuine child care provision in the budget reconciliation bill deserves my colleagues' vote. It is a blend of responsible tax policy and supports the best child care and early child development programs in every community in this Nation.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. HERGER].

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Chaiman, who should choose the type of child care a child receives, the child's parents, or the Federal Government?

When we vote on child care later today, that is the choice we must make. The Edwards or Stenholm-Shaw alternatives provide most of the Federal child care benefits directly to parents, allowing the parents to choose the kind of care that will be best for their children.

The Downey and Hawkins approaches provide much of the funding to institutions and bureaucracy. They restrict the types of care parents can obtain for their children under the bill. I believe parents are a much better judge of what's best for their children than the Federal Government. I urge us all to keep this point in mind when we vote on child care today.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAHALL].

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3, the Education and Labor reported bill to provide for the establishment of a child care policy at the Federal level, and the tax credit provisions supplied by the Ways and Means Committee, both of which are included in H.R. 3299, the fiscal year 1990 budget reconciliation bill. No substitute intended to be offered here today is adequate to the Nation's needs. The country needs and wants the comprehensive approach to child care as provided in the Education and Labor Committee's bill, and it welcomes the added benefits to low-income families with dependent children provided through the tax credit provision added by the Ways and Means Committee.

H.R. 3, as reported by the Education and Labor Committee on which I serve, known as the Early Childhood Education and Development Act, is one of the most important domestic policy statements to come before the 101st Congress so far this year. It contains initiatives to help meet the desperate need of American parents for quality, accessible, affordable child care. H.R. 3 is the product of nearly 3 years of exhaustive hearings and intensive research by literally thousands of child care experts. Our bill was reported by the Education and Labor Committee with broad bipartisan support. The programs thereunder will improve the quality of programs for preschool children by expanding the Head Start program to day-long, year-round services for those qualifying for Head Start. Title II of H.R. 3 provides for schoolbased before and afterschool care for children of working parents. This will enable latch-key children to remain in a constructive, supervised educational setting until their parents return home from work, rather than going home to empty houses, into neighborhoods often dangerous, often drug-ridden, and totally unsafe for young, impressionable, and vulnerable children.

Title III of H.R. 3 provides money to the States to enable them to provide operating funds to existing, and to newly interested child care providers whether center based, family, or group homes, and would expand services to working families with infants and toddlers, a much more difficult child care service to find that is safe and affordable. This funding is intended to allow States to increase both the quantity and quality of available child care slots, making child care available to parents who seek it for children from infancy to school age and beyond in safe, affordable settings.

It is well documented that every day, 5,000 mothers turn down paid jobs because of a lack of adequate, affordable child care. Every day, 2 million children from working families spend another day alone and unsupervised, due to a lack of access to affordable child care. Every day, more than 3 million children are put at risk in unsafe day care arrangements.

H.R. 3 includes voluntary, not mandatory, standards for health and safety in child care, and offers incentives to States to see that these standards are met.

Members of the Education and Labor Committee have agreed with President Bush, that a tax credit for children of low-income families for child care purposes is a desirable goal. But we did not, in the first place, have jurisdiction in our committee over tax-related legislation. In the second place, we are adamantly opposed to enacting a tax credit in lieu of H.R. 3. The committee has reported a comprehensive means of providing care for the children of working parents, particularly low-income parents, and parents on welfare, many of whom will go off welfare and into paid jobs if adequate and affordable child care is made available to them.

We do not oppose a tax credit that will be used, where necessary, for child care purposes. But we must also have a well-structured program that does more than provide custodial care for young, preschool children who need the education and developmental opportunities that are embraced under H.R. 3.

After nearly 3 years in the making, working closely with child care experts, educators, early childhood development specialists, the National Governors' Association and others, the Education and Labor Committee has recommended to the whole House a bill which vastly expands the child care network nationwide. The Federal role must be a major one—one of discerning a national need of overwhelming human significance, but a need that regrettably has not and cannot be met solely from State and local resources. Child care is unquestionably an unmet socioeconomic need of national significance.

H.R. 3 is a bill that is flexible in its approach to providing child care, and has a great capacity for change that will allow State and local governments and the people they serve to adapt the several approaches embodied in the bill to their own special needs and demands. We have given States and localities the opportunity, and financial incentives through a combination of the involvement of business, public schools, and private providers—along with the continued involvement of churches which now provide more than a third of day care the Nation has to offer—through which the Federal Government can help assure the availability of child care at affordable costs for the working poor.

H.R. 3 does not create or cause unwarranted Federal intervention in State child care standards through over-regulation. What it does do is to create a national environment and atmosphere in which the improvement and enhancement of child care can occur, through the Federal Government's generous financial commitment to excellence.

I have reviewed the 54-page licensing requirements for day care centers for the State of West Virginia, and I daresay the State has in place strong requirements for health, nutrition, safety, child-staff ratios, personnel preservice and inservice training requirements, and other licensing approval requirements, including announced and unannounced site inspections of licensed facilities. West Virginia's child care standards would require very little, if any, changes or upgrading to meet recommended child care standards contained in the bill. I believe the State of West Virginia has imposed rigorous requirements for the knowledge and skill base of the people who provide child care in the State in licensed facilities. This is a great source of reassurance to me, and to working parents, that their children are in safe and happy environments, and those standards are strengthened through well-planned parental involvement in the day care services provided. H.R. 3's early childhood education and development programs will, in turn, reinforce the State's care standards and encourage broad-based parental involvement.

I believe the programs contained in H.R. 3 signify the Federal Government's major commitment to building a decent child care system for American workers and their children, and that the programs embody the characteristics of good, decent, safe, and affordable child care that have won the public's strong support for this legislation.

The recent education summit brought to light the collective belief of the Governors of the 50 States that the Federal Government ought to take over and be responsible for making certain that every 5-year old entering our public school system will be a healthy child, ready for a beginning career in education in every way, who have had a head start in gaining appropriate developmental, social, and motor skills necessary for successful, sustained learning experience in the public school system. The Governors recommended Federal assistance for programs such as these for all preschoolers. H.R. 3's comprehensive child care programs for preschool children will go far in assuring that those 5-year-old children will have had a structured head start in early childhood education and development before entering the school system.

It is my sincere hope that both substitutes for H.R. 3 will be defeated today, and that H.R. 3, along with the Ways and Means tax credit for child care will remain in the reconciliation bill so that we can go to conference with the Senate on its similar bill, which also contains a tax credit provision.

Establishing a child care policy in the United States is, for me, an exciting challenge and something I am proud to be part of. I believe this is an historical event and worthy of great notice.

I commend our esteemed chairman of the Education and Labor Committee AUGUSTUS HAWKINS, and the chairman of the committee's Subcommittee on Human Resources, Mr. KILDEE, first for their foresight, and then for their enduring patience, in working together in a spirit of true comity to bring the various and sundry supporting groups together, and for reaching an understanding that allowed this important legislation to reach the floor of the House. I am pleased to have had a small, but nevertheless a direct part in the development of H.R. 3 in our committee, and to have had the support of the committee for my amendment which included universities as eligible applicants to become providers of campus-based nonresidential child care centers.

Mr. Chairman, it is my hope that my colleagues will join me in defeating the two substitutes for H.R. 3 being offered today, and allow the child care programs contained in the budget reconciliation bill to be retained and sent to the House-Senate conference committee for resolution of outstanding differences between the two versions of this vital child care legislation.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I begin by complementing the efforts of Mr. EDWARDS in providing the leadership necessary to bring the Republican child care proposal to fruition. Mr. TAUKE, Mrs. JOHNSON, Mr. PETRI, Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. GOODLING, and Mr. FRENZEL were also instrumental in helping us shape this proposal. And I want to extend special compliments to Mr. HOLLOWAY and Mr. SCHULZE whose advocacy of tax breaks for families is having more and more influence in our party.

When the child care debate began nearly 2 years ago, the only proposal on the table was the ABC bill. For us, the ABC bill has continued to serve as a model of child care policy that should be avoided at all costs. Its central flaws are: Creating several new grant programs that could mushroom into fiscal bombs in later years; imposing hundreds of severe Federal regulations on day care at the State and local level, thereby creating havoc in the day care market; favoring institutional child care as against small, family-based, informal arrangements; discriminating against families in which one parent stays home to take care of children; outlawing public support of sectarian care, including care involving no religious instruction or workship taking place in churches; and in general, putting child care in the hands of bureaucrats and professional child care providers.

Realizing our party's objection to all or most of these effects of the ABC bill, Republicans quickly countered by saying that the whole ABC approach was based on an incorrect diagnosis of the major problem facing families. Proponents of ABC said that families needed better out-of-home day care; Republicans responded by saying that families needed more money to raise their children properly.

For million of families, the major problem was taxation. Counting Federal, States, and local taxes of all types, it is not unusual for families to spend up to 40 percent of their income paying taxes. For low-income families, the tax burden is particularly onerous.

The solution we proposed was simple: reduce the tax burden on all families and expand tax credits for low-income families that have little or no tax liability.

And so it is that today we bring a stark and innovative proposal before the House. This proposal was formulated by a task force representing a wide range of views within our party.

I know that the vast majority of Members think the Nation is experiencing a child care crisis. Many also believe that the Federal Government should intervene and fix things up. But there are many in our party who believe that the so-called crisis in day care is exaggerated, and that the States are moving aggressively to improve the supply and quality of child care.

The proper role of the Federal Government, then, is not to disrupt either the private market or the public effort at the State and local level. Rather, our role is to make sure that parents have enough money to effectively use whatever type of care they think most appropriate—including maternal care in the home.

And for my friends who want to pour billions of dollars into formal, institutional forms of child care, I want to call one undisputed fact to their attention. For all the fuss about day care and day care centers, only a little over 10 percent of America's preschool children are in day care centers.

The advantages of our approach are numerous: We would provide direct benefits to at least 13 million families with over 20 million children; some working families that have preschool children will receive as much as $2,500 in cash to improve their standard of living; all of this money will go to families with a minimum of bureaucratic jumble and the income supplements will go to families either in their regular paychecks or in a tax refund at the end of the year—the efficiency of this approach is unmatched; and families that make the financial sacrifice to have one parent stay home with the children will not be discriminated against.

And finally, I want to call the attention of Members to what I regard as the most important achievement of this legislation. For the second time in 2 years, the Congress is taking crucial steps toward changing the direction of American social policy. The Family Support Act of 1988 signaled the intention of Congress to spend a great deal of money on helping welfare families achieve independence by preparing for work in the private sector.

Now, with this vast increase in the earned income tax credit, we are telling the low-income citizens of this country that we want to spend tax dollars to help people who participate in the work force.

Make no mistake. Times are changing. Federal social policy is changing. And Republicans are leading that change by designing policy the old-fashioned way: We help those who help themselves.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OWENS].

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Chairman, those of us who care about children will put aside our considerations of our positions on the church-state issue as we vote on this critical legislation. As we have pursued our own political agendas, we have raised the visibility of the church-state relationship to such a point that the probability is that no matter which program passes, it is going to be bogged down in court suits. This matter is going to be thrown into the courts and the courts are going to have to decide the issue of church-state relationshps.

We should recognize, however, that the cornerstone and the foundation of our educational program in this Nation starts with early childhood education. Everybody agrees to this. There is no controversy about it.

H.R. 3, in contrast to the Edwards amendment and the Stenholm amendment, which I oppose, H.R. 3 is sound legislation, structured in consultation with experts, with experienced providers, and with parent groups.

We have deliberated on it for quite some time. We have come to conclusions that are sound, based on what already exists. It is not revolution. It builds on existing programs, like Head Start. For the first time, it calls for an expansion of Head Start, which will allow Head Start to become all-day programs better suited for working mothers.

There is nothing new and revolutionary about this approach. It does include taking care of youngsters after school, older youngsters, which is something not included anywhere else.

There are a number of things done which need to be done in H.R. 3, and only in H.R. 3.

Those who would recommend the earned income tax credit approach are abandoning the children who need it most. The children who need it most will not be benefited by an earned income tas credit approach.

Also, no matter how you play with those formulas for any tax credit, it cannot pay for decent day care. Certainly in New York it will not pay even half the cost of decent day care in New York State. I know that for a fact. I doubt seriously if any place in the country the earned income tax juggling, no matter how you bring it out, will pay for decent day care.

We also have created new bureaucracies to take care of the savings and loan associations. I do not know why the creation of a few new Government regulations to take care of this situation is not acceptable.

Mr. Chairman, let us give the money to those who need it the most, the children.

Mr. Chairman, for the past several years, the American people have heard politicians from both parties and from across the ideological spectrum loudly boast of their commitment to quality child care. Today is the day that they will find out who in this House will keep those promises and who will not.

As the Education and Labor Committee has tried to fashion comprehensive child care legislation over the last few years we have found time and time again that there were an awful lot of ifs, buts, and other exceptions made in those otherwise enthusiastic expressions of support for a child care bill. Many of our colleagues told us they would support a bill if only we'd change this, or amend that, or ask for less money, or throw out the standards, or include a tax credit and on and on. And so very carefully and deliberately the leadership of the Education and Labor Committee has tried to respond to each and every one of those concerns, compromising on some points and completely capitulating on others. No other legislation considered here in recent memory has been developed with such openness and willingness to compromise and respond to each and every objection and concern that was raised. Some of us think we might have given too much away. But we did it because we took you at your word. You said you wanted a child care bill you could support and we tried to give you one.

There are no more ifs, buts, and exceptions to hide behind. Either you support quality child care and you vote for H.R. 3 as reported or you don't. It is that simple.

The rationales being offered for the destructive Edwards and Stenholm substitutes cannot withstand close examination. They just do not make sense.

We are told, for example, that H.R. 3 spends too much money on child care. Yet the proponents of the killer amendments know full well that the committee slashed the authorization for H.R. 3 by 50 percent during its deliberations to address the concerns of fiscal conservatives. What are we left with, even if fully funded, will scarcely make a dent in the Nation's child care crisis. It represents an investment of less than one-half of 1 percent of what we sink into the bottomless pit of national defense every year. It is just 1 percent of what we voted to spend this summer to bail out the bankrupt and corrupt savings and loan industry. It is but a token contribution to meeting the needs of working families. Yet even this, we are now told, is still too much.

The leaders of the efforts to destroy and derail this child care initiative have also rationalized their opposition to H.R. 3 with the fatuous argument that the bill discriminates against families in which both spouses do not work and others who do not need child care. It is worth noting that most of those who are now leading the charge against this so-called discrimination against traditional families are the same ones who, during last year's welfare reform debate, were ridiculing women on AFDC who wanted to stay home with their preschool children as lazy and demanding that they be forced into work fare almost the moment they first emerge from the maternity ward. This discrimination complaint is just too inane to take seriously. If we cannot enact a child care program that working parents need because it would discriminate against those who stay home, then we will have to reconsider our policies in other realms as well. Subsidies for farmers would have to go; they discriminate against people who don't have farms. Pell grants would be out; they discriminate against people who don't go on to college. And on and on; taken to its logical conclusion, this argument would mean that just about any Federal program that is not universal would go out the window.

Supporters of the killer amendments have also claimed that H.R. 3 would prohibit parents from placing their children in programs run by churches and synagogues. This, too, is a falsehood. Over the past 2 years, the committee has worked closely with representatives of all of the major religious denominations in the development of this bill to assure that the superb child care programs provided in many of the Nation's churches and synagogues would be eligible for funding under the act. Representatives of most of the major denominations strongly support H.R. 3. A vocal minority, however, does not support it, but for reasons which have nothing to do with child care. Their complaint is not that the bill would not support church-based child care programs; it most certainly would and they know it. Instead, their complaint is that the bill would not permit Federal funds to be used to subsidize religious worship and other sectarian activities. Without even getting into the obvious unconstitutionality of such an approach, I think most taxpayers would agree that the Federal Government has enough problems trying to address compelling unmet needs in our communities without now getting into the business of subsidizing the operating costs of every synagogue, mosque, and church in America.

Another complaint we have heard is that buried somewhere in H.R. 3 is a virtual mountain of redtape and restrictive regulations. But read the bill closely—it's not there. The bill did have Federal standards to protect the health and safety of children at one time, but they were taken out months ago. All that's left now is a requirement that the States have at least some standards, but does not specify what they should be. All but a handful of States already do have standards in most of the areas specified in the bill. The suggestion that even this minimal requirement is too intrusive is absurd.

The complaints and the carping we hear today do not hold water. Each of them has already been addressed in the development of this bipartisan compromise. For the good of our children, painstaking efforts have been made to forge a real consensus, to settle all our differences, and bring this urgently needed legislation forward. The question before us now is not how we will respond to the child care needs of our constituents. The question now is whether we will respond at all.

I urge my colleagues to defeat the killer amendments offered by Mr. EDWARDS and Mr. STENHOLM.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, it is my privilege to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE], one of our newest parents, whose wife gave birth to a 7-pound baby girl.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's kind remarks. There is nothing like being a new parent to become an instant expert, is there?

Mr. Chairman, on the issue of child care, I am happy to say that Robert, our son, is in child care now. His young sister, Alexandra Stewart, will be shortly, and in that spirit I rise today in favor of the committee bill, the committee version, the reconciliation version, and in opposition to the Edwards and Stenholm substitutes.

I want to speak particularly in my limited time to one issue, and that is the church-state issue, because my State depends heavily upon religious institutions to provide child care. In fact, 80 percent of the child care in my State is provided by religious institutions, the Nazarene churches, the Catholic churches, the Baptist churches, other religious institutions heavily provide child care. We appreciate it. We are grateful for it. They have been the leaders in it. So therefore, I am not going to vote for any version that challenges that or that could undercut that. That is why I oppose the Edwards amendment and the Stenholm amendment, because I know that the protection for those churches is in the existing bill.

The committee version does not forbid them to continue doing what they are already doing and doing well.

Indeed, the language in the Senate bill, which our leadership has indicated will accept in its concepts, the language in the Senate bill goes further to guarantee that religious institutions will continue doing what they do well.

I look at this bill to make sure that the church on the corner can still operate and operate as effectively as it has already. Nobody has to take religious symbols off the wall. Nobody has to provide totally neutral settings.

I see this brings so many to their feet, but you all will have to wait. I have got them all on their feet.

The law that permits these facilities to operate will now still be in effect.

The simple fact is that churches that provide child care now will be able to do this in the future. Thank goodness, because we need that child care, but we need it with the flexibility that the bill and the reconciliation measure provides.

You all are just talking about child care, nibbling around the edges, a few dollars here to look like you are for children. Your child care manual sounds like something Charles Dickens wrote. So that is why I support the measure over here. I support real child care.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I wonder, if this bill was so freely and widely debated in the committee, why it was not just brought to the floor as a free-standing piece of legislation?

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Edwards amendment, and if it should not pass, the Stenholm-Shaw child care substitute. I believe these substitutes effectively address the child care situation in the United States, without creating burdensome Federal regulations and oppressive, overlapping Federal and State bureaucracies.

As I have stated in the past, the best child care policy evolves from the bottom up, using Federal funding to support and involve parents, religious groups, businesses, and local government in day care. In the 19th District of California, and around the Nation, innovative ideas in child care are being conceived and implemented. The Federal Government should assist and nurture these innovative ideas, rather than create demanding Federal policy which will hamper creativity, limit flexibility and restrict freedom of choice among families and child care providers.

By expanding the current earned income tax credit [EITC] and creating a new EITC, the Republican substitute provides needed tax relief for families while equalizing treatment, regardless of the employment status of the mother. By combining flexible grant programs such as Head Start, title XX, and child care for small businesses, with an enhanced EITC, the Stenholm-Shaw substitute includes the programs needed to provide adequate child care, while excluding those provisions which take child care decisions away from families and child care providers.

At the Federal level, we must allow those closest to child care issues to make essential decisions on local child care problems. Parents should have the right to make choices. These substitutes recognize individual child care needs rather than create stringent Federal standards pertaining to hand washing and training of day care employees.

Mr. Chairman, our children are our most precious resource, and deserve the best caring environment we can offer. I believe the substitutes we are considering today will provide the resources and direction needed to provide essential care for our Nation's youth.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the good news today is that I think all of us have recognized that there is a legitimate role for child care at the Federal level.

The bad news is that unless we pass one or both of the substitutes, we are not going to have a new child care bill. We are going to have the new Paperwork and Bureaucratic Expansion Act of 1989.

I want to call the attention of my colleagues very quickly, get a copy of the reconciliation bill, look at chapter 4. You are going to find 37 pages of child care and early childhood development coordinating activities.

Now, I want you to take a look at those activities, because one of the first ones you will find on page 223 is that for the first time in the history of the Federal Government we are going to require a ratio of State inspectors to child care centers.

Now, I have heard of parent-teacher ratios and all those kind of things. When have we heard of a ratio of inspectors to centers, as we see in this particular bill?

Then I want you to go on a couple more pages and go over to page 228. They have local Child Care Development Councils. Do you know what, we talk about the availability of child care in this bill, the reality is that for any State that participates in the child care provisions of the legislation in the bill, all local municipal governments in that State must create a Childhood Development Council. They must do all these assessments. They must file all these reports with the United States.

We are talking about 38,000 municipalities with new paperwork requirements under this bill.

Finally, we talk about the religious section, and my good friend, the gentleman from West Virginia, was referring to the Senate language on religion. May I say to my friends, the Senate language on religion only affects vouchers, and there are no vouchers in your program. There are not even vouchers in our program. So the Senate language on religion is irrelevant.

If you want to pass legislation today that truly provides your child care centers the opportunity to have any kind of a little prayer or learn "Away In The Manger," you have got to vote for the two substitutes.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY].

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Edwards substitute. As I do that, I would like to take a moment to commend by colleague, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HOLLOWAY], who was one of the first people who proposed dealing with this problem through tax credits.

He has certainly been tenacious for the past 2 years. It is a tribute to his good work that every proposal that we will examine today includes some element of tax credits.

Mr. Chairman, the Hawkins-Downey plan, which the Edwards substitute would replace, creates or expands seven grant programs that will cost $22.7 billion over 5 years, and that increase in costly programs and service to special interests will exist by discrimination against the majority of American families.

Before we commit that kind of excessive spending and discrimination against the majority of American people, we ought to look at the facts. The notion that this child-care shortage exists comes from the sensational juxtaposition of two unrelated facts, one, that there are 12.6 million children in need of child care in America, and, two, there are about 2.1 million spaces in formal child care centers, and then upon that assertion that every family ought to care for their children in child care centers.

This assertion discriminates against the vast majority of the American families. Of all the children we have in America, over half of them are cared for at home or by relatives and neighbors. Thirty-three percent of them are cared for by nonrelatives in a private home. Eight percent are enrolled in nursery schools. There are 2.1 million in formal day care centers. Millions of Americans are exercising their responsibility and their prerogative as parents to choose their own best-favored way to care for their children.

It turns out that as we look at the child care centers, there is no shortage relative to the need. Child care centers have increased in the last 10 years from 18,300 to 39,429. From 1976 to 1988, the number of slots have doubled from 1.2 to 2.1 million. In addition, national child care chains such as Kinder Care, Gerbers, and La Petite report average vacancy rates of 25 percent. The National Child Care Association, representing 50 percent of the formal day care market, reports average vacancy rates of 18 percent. No, there is no shortage of formal child care centers.

What there is, is a shortage of take-home pay and purchasing power on the part of families, because they are overtaxed.

Mr. Chairman, if we believe in the rights of parents and the welfare of children, leave the power to decide and the money to implement with the parents.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, let me just say to the House that this debate is a long time coming. We have confronted and we have aired these issues over the past decade in almost every committee of the Congress, in special forums and seminars. All across the country this debate has been raging.

The question that we are going to confront here today in a little while is whether or not the children of America deserve the very best we can give them, whether or not we think our children are so very valuable and so very important to this Nation and so very important to their parents that we are going to give them first-class quality child care. If we believe that, then I believe that we will support the Hawkins-Downey proposal and that we will repudiate the notion that we can give our children a second-class system by buying into the Edwards proposal or the Stenholm proposal.

The question is whether or not we are going to have comprehensive quality care. That is all the debate is about. It is expensive. It is also worthwhile.

Mr. Chairman, we could fill the well of this House with study after study that tells us that the children who have quality, comprehensive child care do better. They do better within their families. They do better with their friends in socialization. They do better in school, and they do better later on in life. Why? Because we cared enough to surround them with quality. That quality ought to be available to every child who because of their family circumstances needs child care.

Why do people need it today? Because families are struggling to make it in the American economic system like they have never struggled before. We have sent women into the workplace to try to hold families above the poverty line so that families could educate their children, so that they could buy a home, so both spouses are working, and that requires that those families be provided some support and some rewards for being out there and trying to support their families.

One of the things that we know we can do, one of the things that we know that makes individuals more productive is knowing that their children are safe, is knowing that they have quality child care. Our committee, the Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families, has listened to parents describe to us the trauma of having bad child care, of worrying about whether their child is with a decent person who will provide the protection, about not having the availability of child care, about the stress of they may lose their job because they are running around the neighborhood trying to find child care and they are going to be late for work and they do not have a very good job to begin with, so the employer does not really care about their child care problems, and he may fire them.

Let us relieve that stress from our families, from our families who are out there working.

I must tell the Members that neither the Edwards bill nor the Stenholm bill do that. They are part of the puzzle. They are part of the answer. But why do we not have the courage and the conviction to go all the way and provide a comprehensive quality system? That is what the Committee on Education and Labor and that is what the Committee on Ways and Means are asking us to do here today.

I have listened to so many of my colleagues come into this well and tell us that the children are the future of this country, who tell us that the children are the most important resources in this country, but we have never followed through. We have never had the courage of that conviction to invest in those children. This is the chance today to take a major stride on behalf of this Nation's children. We ought to do it. We ought to do it with our heads up high and facing the proud fact that for the first time we are saying our children are important to us, to our future and to our Nation.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE].

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, since the Human Resources Subcommittee began hearings on child care some 2 years ago, we have come a very long way, and in all seriousness, I say to my colleagues let us not spoil it now. We have a tremendous opportunity to be in a position to get child care legislation enacted into law.

Frankly, if we go to conference with the Hawkins-Downey position, we are not going to be able to get a piece of legislation that will be signed by the President. If we are interested in actually enacting law rather than making political points, it appears to me that we will look seriously at the substitutes that are being offered.

Mr. Chairman, as we look at those substitutes, however, more than politics must come to mind. We also have to look at the substance, and the first major question that faces every Member of this body is: Who is better able to make good choices about child care for children, parents or the bureaucracy?

Do we as Members of Congress want to empower parents to make decisions for their children, or do we prefer to empower a bureaucracy to make those decisions for children?

My judgment is that parents are better able to make judgments about appropriate care. That is reflected in the substitutes that are being offered.

The second question that we need to ask is: Is it wise to say to parents that they must work, have both parents working in order to be able to receive any kind of assistance? My judgment is that sometimes parents are the best child care providers, and if we can empower them to be child care providers, and they choose to do that, my goodness, we ought to take that pro-choice position.

Third, it seems to me that it is very important that we understand that we want to include the entire current child care infrastructure in the legislation we enact. The Hawkins-Downey approach excludes churches from being able to offer child care services by the mechanisms that are contained in the legislation.

In my State, 40 percent of the child care is offered by churches. In many of the inner cities, three-quarters or more of child care is being offered by the churches. How can we exclude them from the infrastructure with this policy?

There are other problems as well with Hawkins and Downey. It is very poorly targeted. The money goes to the nonpoor. It distorts the Head Start Program, trying to make it a child care program instead of a program of development for the young people who need that assistance.

It establishes a huge bureaucracy with five new grant programs and a distortion of title XX. As a result, it is not nearly as cost effective.

Mr. Chairman, substantively the substitutes are better. But in addition, I would say they offer the best opportunity to actually get a major new piece of child care policy enacted into law.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself my remaining time.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to respond to my friend, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE]. With all due respect, what the gentleman has said simply is not true. The fact is what we intend to do with this legislation when we go to conference is to move through the Ways and Means Committee provision which says that there shall not be anything new with respect to requirements on the States than they already impose on themselves. So if the State of Iowa chooses to use a voucher, and I do not know offhand what the State of Iowa does, it can continue to do that.

We have surveyed 20 States attempting to find out whether there is a problem under the social service block grant for child care with respect to vouchers in particular. There is no problem. Let us not create one. We do not want to create one, and I know the gentleman does not want to create one.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, the problem in the bill is, first of all, the parent does not have absolute freedom because the State provides and contracts directly with the vendors. The language is only permissive, so it does not promise in any way a voucher of choice to the parent. The parent is limited only to those agencies the State contracts with.

Mr. DOWNEY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that he take a look at the Ways and Means Committee provision on this. If the State of Michigan has imposed requirements that the gentleman does not like for the State of Michigan, then he can address the State assembly and the State senate.

It is our intention, I will say again ad nauseum, to move toward language and move toward a provision that funnels the money through the existing title XX grant, so that the State of Michigan and all of the other States of the Union can continue to do what they are currently doing.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] has expired.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have to comment on the fact that we keep being asked to rely on what is going to be done hopefully in conference. We are not talking about the conference, we are talking about legislation that is here on the floor. That is what we have to deal with, not vague promises of what we hope will happen in conference.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, nearly everything in the media about day care in recent years has been negative. Children are injured, or abused. Children are ignored. Children are exposed to communicable illnesses. Child care providers are inadequate or worse. Because people's major sources of information about day care are TV, newspapers, and magazines, they are likely to conclude that America's children are in great jeopardy.

We are not engaged in a policy debate about the Federal responsibility for day care. Many Members on both sides of the aisle are entering this debate assuming that the conventional wisdom on quality of care—namely, that it is lousy—is correct. They assume that there is a big problem with quality and that the Federal Government should make sure its money is spent to improve quality. The rhetoric on this point knows few limitations.

Because Members assume there is a big problem with poor quality care, and because they think it is a Federal responsibility to do something about it, many now support the idea that the Federal Government should intervene in the day care market and tell States and parents how to regulate care.

There is no doubt that both the Downey bill and the Hawkins bill are full of regulatory provisions. Both biils are jammed with regulations and mandates on State and local governments. I shall place in the RECORD a 5-page summary of these mandates.

Members may think we have a crisis in the quality of child care. They may think children are in danger. And they may now support a bill that would impose burdensome mandates on States to save the children. Before voting today, Members are invited to consider the following.

First, anecdotes are not evidence. Hearings in both the House and Senate are full of anecdotes about risks children are exposed to in day care. And yet there is not one single systematic survey or study showing that children in day care are at greater risk of these bad conditions than children in other settings, or that children in unregulated day care are at greater risk than children in regulated day care. If anybody has such a study, I hope he or she will produce it for the rest of us to see. Without such evidence, the Congress doesn't even know there is a problem we need to fix—let alone by imposing five pages of onerous mandates on the States.

Second, the Congress has little or no evidence that these new regulations and mandates would even solve the problem that may or may not exist. Can any Member tell us about studies, surveys, or other evidence from their States that regulations solved any of the quality problems with day care? Any legislative remedy ought to have a reasonable chance of success before Congress enacts it. It is a truism that Federal regulations are frequently counter-productive. Therefore whoever wants to regulate should provide some evidence that regulation will do some good. Hard evidence on positive values for these regulations is miniscule to nil.

Third, it is also well known that regulations increase prices. Day care is no exception. A recent study by day care advocates in North Carolina estimated that the price of child care would approximately double if regulations and standards similar to those in the Hawkins-Downey bill were to become law. As always, price increases will fall most heavily on the very people we are trying to help—the poor.

Fourth, Members should know that in approving the Downey-Hawkins bill, they will be directly interfering in an area that the legislatures of every State have addressed. All 50 States have regulations that apply to day care centers, and all but four States have regulations that apply to the smaller, informal family day care homes. In mandating new regulations, we are telling State legislators and governors that we in the Federal Government know better than they do what is needed to protect children in their State.

Fifth, there is some interesting evidence that the quality of day care provided now is not bad. First, the largest study ever done of day care homes—where about half the Nation's out-of-home child care is provided—was published by HHS in 1981. It was based on scientific observations and interviews of about 800 regulated and unregulated day care homes in three American cities. The scientists who conducted the report concluded that even unregulated care is "stable, warm, and stimulating" and that it "catered successfully to the developmentally appropriate needs of children in care." That's not a bad endorsement. So far I have not been able to find any study of comparable magnitude that says unregulated care is dangerous.

More recently, we have had two careful studies of how much children attending day care are at risk. In one study, conducted by scientists at the University of New Hampshire, a national survey found that children were about twice as likely to be subjected to sexual abuse in their homes and neighborhoods as in day care settings. In the second study, released just last week, medical researchers at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta found that children are more than twice as likely to be injured in their home as in day care.

All in all, reasonable observers will conclude that the problems with day care reported incessantly in the media and congressional hearings are not as bad as previously thought. A review of the evidence shows that day care seems to be in pretty good shape. Parents and States ought to continue their own, apparently successful, efforts to insure that America's children are in safe day care arrangements. If we pass the Hawkins-Downey plan, we will undoubtedly only make things worse.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] has 12 minutes remaining and the gentleman for California [Mr. HAWKINS] has 9½ minutes remaining. For the information of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS], has requested that he be given 4 minutes of his 12 minutes' time to close debate.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE].

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to talk long now. I am going to talk perhaps a little longer on the Stenholm amendment.

Let me make a couple of things clear. Title III of the Education and Labor Committee provision does not exclude church participation. Let me repeat that. Title III of the Education and Labor Committee provision does not exclude church participation.

I prefer and I support the approach of the Senate in this and the approach on church-state relations of title XX. But some Member has said that title III excludes churches. It does not exclude the partipation of churches.

Let me also say that with regard to the Governors, we have a Governors' conference here whose executive secretary apparently sent out a letter saying that the only bill that fit the Governors' criteria for child care was the Stenholm bill. Many Governors have disavowed that letter, with great embarrassment to separate Governors and to the Governors Association. They have sent a letter out saying that this did not express the views of the Governors. Governor Clinton, who is in charge of the Child Care Division of the Governors' Association, said this was done without his knowledge, and did not in any way give the views of the Governors' Association on this.

We have Governors who have written to us individually; the Governor of Ohio, the Governor of Maryland, the Governor of Michigan has disavowed this, the Governor of Minnesota.

Again, I think it is very important. You will find DALE KILDEE in agreement with many of you on the church-state issue. But let us not confuse the situation by misinterpreting what title III does. Title III, again, does not exclude participation of the churches. I want even a greater participation, but it certainly does not exclude them at all.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute and 15 seconds to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, there has been a good deal of debate about whether this bill includes Federal mandates on States. I have prepared and will enter into the RECORD a list of 182 new separate specific mandates that would be imposed on States, local governments and child care providers.

I list this in a roll that I would offer to the House debate. These mandates are very specific. Some mandates are not very burdensome at all individually. Other mandates are quite burdensome in terms of the cost and lowering of quality which would be added. The one thing you can say about these mandates is there are 182 of them. Each one of them will result in its own separate set of regulations which would make these 182 pale by comparison.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentlewoman from Connecticut.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the issue of mandates is a very serious one. One of them says that if States change their regulations of day care in a way that could be perceived as a reduction in standards, they have to get the permission of the Secretary of HHS. The directions to the Secretary are so narrow that they could not in fact get an exception. In Connecticut this would have denied us access to Federal funds every one of the last 3 years even though our standards are much higher than most any other State.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentlewoman is correct.

The list referred to follows:

REGULATIONS IMPOSED ON STATE GOVERNMENTS BY THE HAWKINS-DOWNEY CHILDCARE BILL CHAPTER IV

Sections 659D and 659F

1. Requires that the state establish a local child development council in each local general purpose government. (There are 38,000 such local governments.)

2. Requires that the state lead agency shall provide funds and support services to each local child development council.

3. Requires that on each "local child development council" at least 25 percent of the members will represent Head Start programs.

4. Requires that on each local child development council at least 25 percent of the members will be directors of child care programs or child care workers.

5. Requires that on each local child development council at least 25 percent of the members shall be representatives of labor, business, government, or child service organizations.

6. Requires that on each local child development council at least 25 percent of the members shall be early childhood development teachers or school board members.

7. Requires that on each local child development council, among the above specified council members, one quarter must also be parents in addition to meeting the previous criteria.

8. Requires that each local child development council shall prepare a written assessment of child care needs.

9. Requires that each local child development council shall include in the written report an assessment of the effectiveness of existing childcare services.

10. Requires that the report be revised every four years (for a total of nearly 120,000 separate reports by the year 2000).

11. Requires that the council, in preparing the report, address the following areas: Needs of low income children; needs of migrant children; needs of foster children; needs of disabled children; needs of children of adolescent parents; needs of homeless children; needs of children who are not native English speakers; and needs of children receiving protective services.

12. Requires that the state "collate" all the "local needs assessments" (an average of 760 per state) produced by the local child development councils into a single state document.

13. Requires that a copy of the document be sent to HHS.

Section 659E

14. Requires the state to submit an application to HHS for Chapter 4 funds including all information the Secretary may require and assurances that the state will comply with all regulations.

15. Requires that Chapter 4 funds be administered by a designed state "lead agency."

16. Requires that the state must provide Chapter 4 funds to local "resource and referral" systems.

17. Requires that the state provide Chapter 4 funds for training in early childhood development.

18. Requires that the state provide Chapter 4 funds for monitoring and enforcing daycare regulations.

19. Requires that Chapter 4 funds be provided to raise the salaries of staff in government daycare programs.

20. Provides that extra funds under Chapter 4 shall be used for the option of: Improving early childhood development resources in public libraries; daycare grants to business; and grants or loans to non-profit daycare providers who meet federal, state, and local daycare standards.

21. Requires that the state provide training in child development, health and safety, child abuse, disability needs, and program management for all daycare inspection workers.

22. Requires that the state impose personnel requirements on daycare inspectors so that, to the maximum extent possible, they are responsible only for childcare services.

23. Requires that inspectors make at least 1 visit to each daycare center annually.

24. Requires that at least 25 percent of regulated family care providers be inspected each year.

25. Requires that the state maintain inspection staff sufficient to perform the above functions.

26. Mandates state regulations requiring that all regulated or registered child care providers receiving government funds including those caring for only one child must provide written policy and program" goals to parents.

27. Mandates state regulations requiring that all regulated or registered child care providers receiving government funds including those caring for only one child must provide access by parents to the daycare facility or provider's home.

28. Mandates state regulations requiring that all regulated or registered child care providers receiving government funds including those caring for only one child must provide complaint procedures concerning daycare.

29. Mandates state regulations that prohibit daycare employers from taking any adverse personnel action because an employee has provided information on regulatory non-compliance. Employees could thus effectively insulate themselves from any discipline by informing officials of any lapse in regulatory compliance.)

30. Requires the state to make consumer information available to parents concerning daycare regulations.

31. Mandates the state to establish regulations requiring that any registered daycare provider receiving government funds including those caring for only one child must post the telephone number of the regulatory agency on premises.

32. Mandates that states maintain a record of all parental daycare complaints.

33. Requires that the state make the record of complaints available to the public.

34. Requires that the state submit to the Secretary information on how the childcare needs of children of different ethnic groups, disabilities, and language groups are being fulfilled.

35. Requires that the state submit to the Secretary data on the type and number of childcare programs within the state.

36. Requires that the state submit to the Secretary data on the type and number of childcare providers, care givers, support personnel within the state.

37. Requires that the state submit to the Secretary data on the cost of childcare services.

38. Requires that the state submit to the Secretary data on the salaries of childcare staff.

39. Requires that the state submit to the Secretary data on the extent of growth in childcare services.

40. Requires that funds for raising salaries of childcare workers under Chapter IV shall be divided, in specific ratios stipulated in the bill, among staff in Head Start programs, early childhood development workers under Chapter II, and staff daycare programs funded under Chapter III.

41. Requires the state to report to the Secretary in 2 year intervals on how funds under Chapter IV were allocated.

42. Requires the state to justify, to the Secretary at 2 year intervals, why the Chapter IV money was allocated as it was.

43. Requires the state to identify for the Secretary at 2 year intervals those state funds which were allocated to: Resource and referral; training; regulatory enforcement; daycare needs assessment; and raising daycare staff salaries.

Section 659G

44. Requires that each state receiving funds establish a "State Committee on Child Care Licensing."

45. Requires that 1 member of the committee be a representative of the state department of health.

46. Requires that 1 member of the committee be a representative of the state department of human services or social services.

47. Requires that 1 member of the committee be a representative of the state department of education.

48. Requires that 1 member of the committee be a representative of the different types of providers (including care givers and directors) of child care services, including providers who serve school-age children.

49. Requires that 1 member of the committee be a representative of resource and referral programs.

50. Requires that 1 member of the committee be a pediatrician.

51. Requires that 1 member of the committee be a parent of children receiving or in need of child care services, including parents whose children are receiving or are in need of subsidized child care services.

52. Requires that 1 member of the committee be a representative of fire marshals and building inspectors.

53. Requires that 1 member of the committee be a representative of child protective services.

54. Requires that 1 member of the committee be a representative of local educational agencies and teachers involved in providing child care services.

55. Requires that the committee shall review child care licensing and regulation.

56. Requires that the committee submit a report to the state executive officer covering current daycare regulation and enforcement and an assessment of the need for further regulation and regulatory personnel.

57. Requires that the committee provide written comments on the model national child care standards.

58. Requires that the committee provide recommendations for standards for local educational authorities receiving childcare funds.

59. Requires that the chief executive officer of the state shall submit the report of the State Committee on Child Care Licensing to the Secretary of HHS along with a plan for correcting deficiencies or making improvements identified by the Committee in childcare services and regulations.

60. Requires that the state reimburse members of the licensing committee by standards established by the Secretary of HHS.

61. Requires that the state provide sufficient funds to the committee to undertake its tasks.

Section 659H

62. Requires that the state establish or designate an official resource or referral agency in each local area within the state.

63. Requires that the state fund the local resource and referral agencies to collect data and identify existing child care services.

64. Requires that the state fund the local resource and referrral centers to provide childcare training.

65. Requires that the state fund the local resource and referral centers to collect information on childcare demand in the area.

66. Requires that each state-selected resource and referral agency must provide parents with a checklist for identifying quality childcare as defined by the referral agency.

67. Requires that each state-selected resource and referral agency in a locality be a public agency or community-based organization.

68. Requires that the resource and referral agency have a database on childcare in the area and respond in a timely fashion to requests for information.

69. Requires that each state-selected resource and referral agency shall coordinate with other government agencies carrying out activities under the Education of the Handicapped Act.

Section 569I

70. Requires that each state receiving Chapter IV funds shall set up a lead agency clearinghouse to collect and disseminate materials on childcare training.

71. Requires that each state also shall make grants to public agencies, non-profit organizations, and universities to develop childcare training programs.

72. Requires that each state shall make grants to public agencies, non-profit organizations, and universities to provide childcare training.

73. Requires that each state receiving funds shall make grants to non-profit organizations to enable such organizations to develop and carry out training for family day care providers (providers caring for children in their own homes).

74. Requires that non-profits receiving the above grants train family daycare workers to: provide night time childcare services, care for sick children, and care for infants.

75. Requires that non-profit organizations receiving funds provide curriculum materials.

76. Requires that non-profit organizations receiving funds provide grants to selected family day care providers to pay for new equipment.

77. Requires that the training provided by local agencies, government agencies, resource and referral agencies, local nonprofit agencies, and universities shall be divided as follows: 29 percent to Head Start staff; 29 percent to staff who provide services under Chapter 2; and 42 percent to providers who receive funds under Chapter 3.

78. Requires that states distribute information to businesses on model child care programs or undertake other activities to encourage businesses to provide childcare services for children of different socio-economic backgrounds.

79. Requires that states shall promote the involvement of public libraries and elementary school libraries in developing improved childcare services.

80. Requires the state to make grants to public libraries and elementary school libraries to purchase early childhood development resources (including the option to create "early childhood development bookmobiles").

81. Prohibits the use of funds to renovate any facility unless the recipient organization promises to reimburse the state if it ceases providing designated services.

82. Requires that states receiving Chapter IV funds must also receive Chapter II or III funds.

CHAPTER III

Section 658C

83. Requires the state to establish a lead childcare agency.

84. Requires the state to assure HHS that all childcare providers receiving government funds comply with state childcare regulations.

85. Requires that state regulation be imposed "uniformly on providers who give care in similar childcare arrangements."

86. Requires that the state establish procedures to insure that all chidcare providers required by the state to be registered or regulated comply with state regulations whether or not government funds were received. (Nearly all states regulate "family daycare providers", eg., women who care for one to four children in their own homes. In general these women care for one or two children and are friends of the parents of the child they care for. Half the states require that a woman caring for even one neighbor's child in her own home must be registered and/or regulated. But few of these informal providers actually comply with these requirements. For a state to be eligible for federal funds, it must establish a gargantuan "daycare police" to ferret out and regulate hundreds of thousands of mothers providing "illegal" childcare to neighbor's children. Many of the 1.6 million unregulated mothers providing care in their own homes will stop providing childcare because of the regulatory intrusion.)

87. Prohibits the state from ever reducing the types of childcare providers regulated in the state.

88. Permits the state to make daycare regulations stricter, but once regulations have been increased, it prohibits the states from ever lessening those regulations.

89. Requires that states provide funds in a "timely fashion."

90. Requires that providers who receive funds shall wherever possible provide services to a mix of children from different socio-economic background.

91. Requires that childcare services are available to children identified in the "local needs assessment."

92. Requires that services be provided to parents who work non-traditional hours.

93. Requires that funds be provided to a variety of types of childcare providers.

94. Requires that services provided shall be reimbursed at the "market rate."

Section 658D

95. Provides that the state shall provide funds only as "grants" or "contracts" to providers or local governments. Providing funds directly to parents is not permitted.

Section 658F

96. Requires the state to demonstrate to HHS that all regulated childcare providers who receive public funds are required to be regulated and comply with state minimum standards specified in Chapter 4.

97. Requires the state to establish a minimum training requirement of 15 hours per year for daycare workers who receive public funding.

98. Requires the state to establish a sliding fee scale to determine fees paid by parents under Chapter III, adjusting fees for income, family size and extraordinary medical expenses.

99. Requires that the state shall establish minimum group size limits on centers that receive public funds and are regulated.

100. Requires that the state shall establish minimum child-staff ratios on centers that receive public funds and are regulated.

101. Requires that the state shall establish minimum personnel qualifications on centers that receive public funds and are regulated.

102. Requires that the state shall establish minimum in-service training requirements on centers that receive public funds and are regulated.

103. Requires that the state shall establish health standards on centers that receive public funds and are regulated.

104. Requires that the state shall establish nutrition standards on centers that receive public funds and are regulated.

105. Requires that the state shall establish safety standards on centers that receive public funds and are regulated.

106. Requires that the state provide standards for family care providers concerning group size.

107. Requires that the state provide standards for family care providers concerning age of caregivers.

108. Requires that the state provide standards for family care providers concerning health.

109. Requires that the state provide standards for family care providers concerning nutrition.

110. Requires that the state provide standards for family care providers concerning safety.

CHAPTER II

Section 8003

111. Requires that funds under this section must be given to programs operated 5 days per week.

112. Requires that funds cannot be used to extend regular academic programs.

113. Requires the state to submit an application for funds.

114. Requires each local education authority to submit a 2 year plan to the state.

115. Requires that the children served by the childhood development program must be within the local area.

116. Requires that children served by the childhood development program must have working parents.

117. Requires that early childhood development programs be provided at no cost to low income families.

118. Requires a sliding fee scale for children in families between the poverty level and $33,000.

119. Requires full cost fees from children in early childhood development in families above roughly $33,000.

120. Requires that programs for school age children must be at such times of day when regular instruction is not provided.

121. Requires that the programs shall provide an educationally and culturally enhancing environment (thereby begging for very detailed federal regulations).

122. Requires that school age children in programs have employed parents or parents in training.

123. Requires that the program for school age children be provided at no cost to families at poverty level.

124. Requires that children in school age programs from families with incomes between the poverty level and $33,000 be charged on a sliding fee basis.

125. Requires that school age children in programs in families with incomes above roughly $33,000 be charged at full cost.

126. Requires that programs for school age children be available for the full working day.

127. Requires that programs for school age children be available for a full calendar year.

128. Requires that children in private schools shall be eligible for before and after school programs run in public schools.

129. Requires that the state shall not provide tests to evaluate the early childhood development program.

130. Requires that the program for school age children shall be "developmentally appropriate" (which will call for even more detailed federal regulation.)

131. Requires that programs provide nutritious meals (calling for more federal regulations).

132. Requires that the program provide accompanying social service.

133. Requires coordination with other agencies on health services.

134. Requires coordination with other agencies on social services.

135. Mandates referrals to all other government social service programs to which a child in early childhood development program is eligible.

136. Mandates referrals to all other health programs to which the child enrolled in the early childhood development program would be eligible.

137. Requires instruction and programs be provided to parents in native language where possible.

138. Requires that the local education agency receiving funds shall coordinate with other public and non-profit agencies.

139. Requires that a local educational authority in providing grants for early childhood development programs shall give priority to public schools.

140. Requires that a local educational authority in providing grants to operate a before or after school program shall give priority to public schools.

141. Requires that a non-profit organization receiving a grant to provide early childhood education has a history of enrolling linguistically diverse children or that the non-profit will give assurance it is willing and able to do so.

142. Requires that a non-profit organization receiving a grant to provide early childhood education has a history of enrolling ethnically and economically diverse children or that the non-profit will give assurance it is willing and able to do so.

143. Requires that a non-profit organization receiving a grant to provide early childhood education has a history of enrolling children with disabilities or that the non-profit will give assurance it is willing and able to do so.

144. Requires that a non-profit organization receiving a grant to provide before or after school programs has a history of enrolling linguistically diverse children or that the non-profit will give assurance it is willing and able to do so.

145. Requires that a non-profit organization receiving a grant to provide before or after school programs has a history of enrolling children of ethnically and economically diverse backgrounds or that the non-profit will give assurance it is willing and able to do so.

146. Requires that a non-profit organization receiving a grant to provide before or after school programs has a history of enrolling disabled children or that the non-profit will give assurance it is willing and able to do so.

147. Prohibits any provider receiving funds for before or after school services from including any religious activity in the program.

148. Prohibits any provider receiving funds for early childhood development programs from including any religious activity in the program.

Section 8004

149. Requires that the state to be eligible for Title II funds meets the requirements of paragraphs 2 and 5 of the General Education Provision Act establishing accounting procedures.

150. Requires that the state establish group size standards for early childhood development programs which receive any funds under Chapter 2.

151. Requires that the state establish child-staff ratios standards for early childhood development programs which receive any funds under Chapter 2.

152. Requires that the state establish staff qualification standards for early childhood development programs which receive any funds under Chapter 2.

153. Requires that the state establish health requirement standards for early childhood development programs which receive any funds under Chapter 2.

154. Requires that the state establish nutrition requirement standards for early childhood development programs which receive any funds under Chapter 2.

155. Requires that the state establish safety requirement standards for early childhood development programs which receive any funds under Chapter 2.

156. Requires that the state establish parent involvement standards for early childhood development programs which receive any funds under Chapter 2.

157. Requires that the state shall establish standards for staff training for before or after school programs which receive any funds under Chapter 2.

158. Requires that the state shall establish standards on health for before and after school programs which receive any funds under Chapter 2.

159. Requires that the state shall establish standards on nutrition for before or after school programs which receive any funds under Chapter 2.

160. Requires that the state shall establish standards on safety for before and after school programs which receive any funds under Chapter 2.

161. Requires that the state shall establish standards on parental involvement for before or after school programs which receive any funds under Chapter 2.

162. Requires that the state submit to the Secretary of HHS that it has complied with all the above regulatory requirements.

163. Requires that the state distribute not less than 97 percent of Chapter 2 funds to local educational authorities.

164. Requires that any local educational authority seeking funds under Chapter 2 submit a 2-year plan describing how the authority will carry out the objectives of the chapter.

Section 8005

165. Requires that the state establish a sliding fee scale system adjusting fee size by income, family size, and extraordinary medical expenses.

Ways and Means Regulations on Social Service Block Grants (All regulations that are simply duplicative of regulations under Chapter 3 of the Education and Labor bill are omitted below)

166. Requires that the state establish daycare standards for centers receiving public funds similar to Chapters III and IV, but in addition the state must regulate for the prevention of infectious disease.

167. Requires regulations on injury prevention and treatment for centers receiving government funds.

168. Requires regulations on child abuse for centers receiving government funds.

169. Requires regulations concerning children with special needs for centers receiving government funds.

170. Requires regulations on building standards for centers receiving government funds.

171. Requires separate regulations on family daycare providers receiving government funds concerning control of infectious disease.

172. Requires separate regulations on family daycare providers receiving government funds concerning injury prevention and treatment.

173. Requires separate regulations on family daycare providers receiving government funds concerning building requirements.

174. Requires separate regulations on family daycare providers receiving government funds concerning health.

175. Requires separate regulations on family daycare providers receiving government funds concerning nutrition.

176. Requires separate regulations on family daycare providers receiving government funds concerning children with special needs.

177. Requires separate regulations on family daycare providers receiving government funds concerning prevention of child abuse.

178. Requires separate regulations on family daycare providers receiving government funds concerning parental involvement.

Section 2011

179. Requires the state to demonstrate to HHS that all childcare providers who receive government funds are licensed or regulated as required by state law.

180. Requires the state to demonstrate to HHS that all childcare providers who receive government funds comply with state minimum child care standards as required by state law.

181. Requires the state to demonstrate to HHS that all childcare providers who receive government funds are subject to regulatory enforcement provisions in the act.

182. Requires that the state spend not more than 20 percent of funds under the chapter on administration, training, and enforcement.

Ways and Means Provisions (Title VI)

183. Requires that the state government, in order to receive funds under this chapter, must submit an application to the Secretary describing: current status of childcare regulation; projected improvements of regulation; expected use of funds; and any other information HHS may want.

Ways and Means Title VI (Regulations on local agencies receiving demonstration grants)

1. Public or private agencies receiving demonstration funds under Title VI must must demonstrate that they will establish a "child development model".

2. Public or private agencies receiving demonstration funds under Title VI must must provide a detailed plan for recruiting, training, and supporting family care satellites.

3. Public or private agencies receiving demonstration funds under Title VI must provide a detailed plan for evaluating child care satellites.

4. Public or private agencies receiving demonstration funds under Title VI must provide a plan detailing expenditures which will be made.

5. Public or private agencies receiving demonstration funds under Title VI must provide an assurance that resource materials will be available.

6. Public or private agencies receiving demonstration funds under Title VI must provide an assurance that support services will be available to satellites including a "toy lending library" and regular visits from a resource specialist.

7. Public or private agencies receiving demonstration funds under Title VI must provide an assurance that at least one satellite will provide care to ill children.

8. Public or private agencies receiving demonstration funds under Title VI must provide an assurance that at least one satellite will provide care to handicapped children.

9. Public or private agencies receiving demonstration funds under Title VI must provide an assurance that at least one satellite will provide care to non-English speaking children if such need exists.

10. Public or private agencies receiving demonstration funds under Title VI must provide an assurance that the agency will provide child development training.

11. Requires that each agency evaluate family care satellites by 10 detailed criteria.

12. Requires that each agency report to the Secretary on the above evaluation.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I think this debate has gone on long enough.

Due to the confusion that has been created by those who are opposed to child care, they are opposed to the welfare of children, they are seeking to confuse the issue by saying things that do not——

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has had his time.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Not to say things like that, I did not.

Mr. HAWKINS. Well, we can document the fact.

The gentleman does not in any way advocate in his proposal any child care features. It is purely a tax feature, and we agree with that. I would hope the gentleman would agree with us that the children of America and their working parents deserve more than just an addition to their income. They deserve both. For those who come up here and say they are for Head Start and then bring up all the problems that Head Start has restrictions in it, we did not put them in there. The gentleman says they are for it. Then he comes up and says, "We don't want restrictions," Well, it means you do not want Head Start.

I think this stuff has gone on long enough.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a comment?

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. May I yield out of the gentleman from California's time? I do not have any extra time.

Mr. HAWKINS. I will be glad to. I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY].

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] reclaiming his time?

Mr. HAWKINS. I reclaim my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California reclaims his time.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I want to stipulate to the fact that I believe the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] and my Republican colleagues feel as deeply about the children of America as do I and that this is a matter of the best way to approach how to help all our children. That we argue and debate is good for our country, and I welcome it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, let us be explicit first of all: The key contention between us, first of all, is freedom of choice for a parent to choose what is best for his or her child.

We will give you and we will concede anything you want on regulation and standards. We will even accept your interpretation of church and state issues. But we say that mother knows best, father knows best, not that Uncle Sam knows best in terms of where our children should be placed.

But let us talk about the church-state issue. Do not tell us you do not interfere with established rights of religious organizations, because you do.

The bill is not silent on this question. It imposes new language in the Jontz language which overrides the Kendrick decision, overrides the Lemon decision and establishes new criteria for any church-affiliated or vended child care.

That is the issue.

Sure it allows churches to provide child care, but under new restrictions than those already permitted by the courts.

Why did you not simply remain silent and let existing constitutional law prevail? Why did you not reference every existing constitutional court case and every existing statutory provision and put it in? But you did not. You added new language which fundamentally attacks the ability of church groups to offer child care.

Listen to the Catholic Conference letter to us as representatives to this Nation.

> Most child care offered by religious groups for qualifying families would be ineligible unless they significantly altered their programs to conform to rigid and unwarranted standards of complete secularization. To exclude these religious providers in this much needed program would significantly reduce the options for families.

The issue here is freedom. It is freedom for the parent to choose the vendor under whatever restrictions you want to put in. Put in your restrictions, but let the parent choose.

But why put in these restrictions? There are thousands of people fleeing statism, fleeing on freedom trains from East Germany in revolt against statism. They are taking their children with them.

We will not allow our own parents with their children to ride that freedom train here in the United States of America.

That is what this issue is about. The issue is about choice of for the parent. Father knows best, mother knows best, not Uncle Sam.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HOLLOWAY].

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I probably come from a more common background than most Members of this House. But for someone to say that my mother or the mothers of this country do not best understand what child care is all about is the most ridiculous statement ever made.

I am so tired of bureaucracy, bureaucracy, bureaucracy. It seems to be all the other side knows sometimes, to create more bureaucracy.

The gentleman from New York says we do nothing for the low-income people. Every dollar of our money goes to low-income people.

Our credit goes to families that make under $24,000. Under our credit, a family with a $10,000 income, with one child, would receive $2,200.

How can you go back to your district and say we do nothing for the low-income families of this country?

To the gentleman from West Virginia who said he has 80-percent religious day care in his district. I would fear for my job if I had 80-percent religious day care in my district and I was supporting the bill that is on the other side.

I close today in saying that our bill is a bill for the families of this country. We represent the people.

I ask a vote for the Edwards substitute.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the Republican whip, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, let me first of all say that a great deal of credit is due to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] and to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HOLLOWAY] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCHULZE] for having developed this substitute. I think this substitute represents a very fundamental choice.

I was, frankly, concerned when my good friend from California suggested that there is anyone in this House who does not care about children. I think that both sides are concerned about children, and both sides are concerned about child care. I appreciate the gentleman from New York's comments. However, the liberal side believes that bureaucracy deserves the money. Well we believe that parents deserve the money. The liberal side believes the bureaucracy is smarter than parents and would shift power to the bureaucrats. The fact is, we believe that parents are smarter, and we would shift resources directly to parents so that parents would be empowered to exercise their choice for their children. The liberal side discriminates against mothers who want to stay at home, and for the very first time sets up an educational program which openly says only mothers who go to work can have access to that program. Clear, explicit discrimination against those who stay at home. We think that mothers who decide that they can provide the best care should also have an equal chance to get help from their government. The liberal side believes that religion is somehow inappropriate.

There are three places in the bill, three places where Members specifically say that no provider of a program shall engage in any sectarian activity. Three different places, not just one. Now, what does that mean? The Justice Department said the following:

> We believe that the broad proscription in these provisions would certainly be construed to prevent day care center staff from leading, encouraging or assisting children in any religious activities whatever—even prayers of thanks before meals, or at any other time during the day. The legislation would thus effectively deny the children attending day care centers any opportunity for prayer. Additionally, such provisions would prohibit any and all encouragement, endorsement, assistance or formal accommodation of the religious needs or wishes of children attending day care centers. We do not believe that such sweeping prohibitions are compelled by the Constitution.

The saddest thing about this debate is very simple: Your side has not been able to stand up and openly defend the language that, in my judgment, the House has not been accurately informed about the meaning of the language. In fact, there has been a consistent effort to evade the real meaning of the bill as written. This bill is essentially against mothers who stay at home, against parents being empowered, against freedom of religion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inform the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] has one remaining speaker.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, to conclude debate, I yield the remaining 4 minutes to the Republican leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, expansion of the earned income tax credit, an original proposal of Republican Members of the House, in my judgment, is the best way to assist low-income families.

It says to people that if you work, but are earning a relatively low wage, we will financially assist you through the tax system to enable you to better provide for your families. There are no strings attached; there are no dictates from the Federal Government on how the money is to be used. It can be used for day-care or for other necessities if care is provided in the home.

That is the beauty of the EITC approach. It preserves maximum choice for the families themselves. It is based on a fundamental idea: freedom works. It is a far better approach to helping the working poor than a major minimum wage increase, because it preserves jobs rather than the possibility of losing them.

It is encouraging to see that many on the other side of the aisle have to come to recognize the value of the EITC approach, and that it is included as part of the other alternatives before us.

However, the Edwards amendment is the only option providing a straight earned income tax credit. It is not encumbered by a lot of heavy-handed regulations, that has been alluded to so many times by our friends here in support of our position, or a number of narrowly focused grant programs. It keeps things simple, thereby keeping down excessive administrative costs, and most importantly maximizing choices for low-income families themselves.

They, not the Government, will be able to make the decisions on how the resources are to be utilized.

In summarizing the positive aspects of the Edwards amendment, there are several points that should be made: It provides the greatest amount of funding for the EITC of all the alternatives available to Members today; it provides the highest benefit for families with preschool children, those with the greatest child care needs; and it does the best job of redirecting resources from the wealthy to those with the greatest need.

It caps the existing dependent care tax credit and child care flexible spending account. Under present law, such benefits are available to the wealthy, regardless of income. I guess people earning half a million a year are eligible up to $960 in dependent care tax credits. Well, the wealthy hardly need Government assistance to pay for child care. However, the Hawkins-Downey Democratic proposal would retain that plum. We cap it, and redirect the savings to low-income families.

The Edwards amendment provides tax credit for low- to moderate-income families earning up to $24,000 in income, higher than any of the other alternatives.

The Edwards amendment does not impose new regulations on families, day-care centers, or the States.

There is no "big brotherism" involved. We do not take the attitude that we know better than the people at the State or local levels as to whether new standards need to be established. The Edwards amendment costs far less than Hawkins-Downey approach. The Edwards amendment, I guess, is at roughly $14.1 million over 5 years, a significant amount, no small change, to be true. However, that is compared to $22.7 billion for Hawkins-Downey, and maybe $3 billion less than the Stenholm-Shaw proposal. This reconciliation bill supposedly was designated to cut the deficit. This should be no small consideration.

So for all these reasons, the Edwards amendment, clearly, in my judgment, outshines the others. I would urge my colleagues to vote for it, as I intend to.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, after literally years of thinking and talking, the day has finally arrived when we in the House of Representatives have the opportunity to put our words into action and pass legislation which would provide for a responsible approach to alleviating the critical shortage in child care for American families. I urge my colleagues to delay no longer in our response to this desperate need among our Nation's working families and to pass the comprehensive child care package incorporated into H.R. 3299, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, without any substitutions or weakening amendments.

Today few would argue against the demonstrated need for Federal support of child care opportunities nationwide. Right now, 60 percent of all mothers with children under the age of 6 work outside the home; and by the year 2000, it is estimated that four out of five infants under 1 year of age will have mothers in the work force. The estimated number of preschoolers requiring care is expected to grow from 6 to 14.6 million in just the next 6 years. The need for improved and expanded child care alternatives is already critical for most families and will mushroom dramatically in the years to come.

The child care provisions presently embodied in H.R. 3299 have been thoughtfully crafted and championed by the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor, Congressman AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS, and by the distinguished chair of the Human Resources Subcommittee, Congressman DALE KILDEE. Emerging from years of studied deliberation and refinement, these provisions successfully address the three critical areas so vital to child care that will really work for American families: accessibility, affordability, and quality. The child care component of H.R. 3299 builds on effective, proven programs such as Head Start, early childhood education programs, and other State initiatives. It also combines a tax credit approach with a direct services approach, offering the best compromise to the myriad options evaluated over the past few years.

A number of proposed amendments would serve only to weaken the bill. For example, the Republican substitute would provide only for tax credits without a comprehensive approach to expanded and improved services. Another substitute, offered by Congressmen STENHOLM and SHAW, lacks any education or early childhood development component, would eliminate quality assurances, and would also eliminate the provisions providing for parental involvement and access. It would also cut out $1.75 billion allocated directly for child care assistance and would substitute instead only $200 million under title XX social services block grants for child care.

The bottom line is that we need to provide affordable, accessible, quality child care services that will allow parents to work without fear for the well-being of their young children and which will provide opportunities for our children to become well prepared to succeed in school. The child care provisions in H.R. 3299 would be a giant step forward toward accomplishing this objective. I urge my colleagues to pass these provisions without amendment.

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Hawkins-Downey child care language of the budget reconciliation, H.R. 3299 and urge our colleagues to vote against both the Edwards and the Stenholm substitutes.

Mr. Chairman, opponents of Hawkins-Downey contend that they do not want Government raising their children. They argue that Americans do not want their children raised by Uncle Sam. Opponents of the current language offered by the Education and Labor Committee chairman claim that the expansion of the earned income tax credit [EITC]—the Edwards substitute—is the most effective way to maintain parental choice in child care. Supposedly, lower income families will have additional funds for child care, additional funding, and the freedom of choice in selecting the type of care their children will receive.

I believe that the expansion of ETIC's is an entirely inadequate response to our Nation's child care crisis. The Education and Labor/Ways and Means provision is a comprehensive plan which can improve the quality, availability and supply of child care facilities. The expansion of EITC's are just a small fraction of an appropriate child care package for our Nation. Under the substitute offered my Mr. EDWARDS, the amount of credit a family would receive would drop dramatically when a child reaches the age of 6. Am I assume, Mr. Chairman, that the Edwards substitute was crafted with the naive notion that children over 6 years of age, whose parents are gainfully employed, do not need child care services?

Additionally, there is no guarantee that the tax credit income will be used solely for child care. One of my greatest fears is that such a windfall my force hard pressed lower income families to apportion the funds to other household necessities.

With respect to the Stenholm amendment, I wish to raise a special point of clarification. First, the Stenholm amendment is a stealth amendment. Meaning that it simply came out of nowhere, virtually overnight. There have never been any hearings on this measure and quite frankly I personally have problems with some key provisions.

Mr. Chairman, our colleague, Mr. STENHOLM, tried his best to combine the Republican substitute with other acceptable child care provisions. However, the substitute does not meet the needs of the American family. Hawkins-Downey, not the Stenholm or Edwards amendments protects parental choice. By eliminating funds for school-based programs and State grants for child care, the inducements to increase the supply of child care and assistance to lower income families is critically undermined.

Regarding the church/state controversy, the Hawkins-Downey language permits funding of church sponsored child care, but the bill restricts discrimination based on religion as stipulated in current law. Hawkins-Downey also respects first amendment prohibition against the establishment of religion. The bill language disallows child care providers from receiving funds if they are engaged in sectarian activities, including worship and instruction.

In closing, Congress needs to move quickly on our child care crisis for the benefit of working parents and America's children. I again urge all of our colleagues to accept the Hawkins-Downey language and vote down both the Edwards and Stenholm substitutes.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Edwards amendment to the child care provisions included in the Budget Reconciliation Act. This Nation's child care crisis is not going to be solved by pumping Federal dollars into programs which restrict parental control of their children's day care. What we need is an increase in earned income tax credits for working poor families and incentives on the State level in order that parents can choose which means of child care works best for them.

We are faced with an overwhelming demand for quality child care in this country. There is no question about the seriousness of the need for available, affordable day care. With 54.4 percent of all mothers of young children in the work force, child care has become an increasingly important issue for families. The current lack of child-care options, especially for those in the low-income category, often keeps women from finding gainful employment.

The Federal Government, however has neither the authority nor the ability to provide for this country's needs in that respect. Expanding Government programs and appropriations seems like an overly simplified answer to a very difficult problem. The need for parents across the country are too diverse for the Federal Government to start dictating standards, require schooling for young children, and caring for the Nation's young people.

Where in the Constitution does it say that the government has a role as parential overseer and the body which fills the gap in parental shortcomings. Public education is failing and yet the only answer this Government seems to give is more money, expanded programs, and national standards. This rhetoric is no longer the answer to our problems, and it is time that we tried something innovative without reaching into the taxpayers pocketbooks.

The provisions contained in this reconciliation bill discriminate against parents who have chosen to work out of their homes and care for their children at home. I heard from one woman this morning, Mrs. Donna Lucas of Claremont, CA, who called imploring me to work against legislation that would discriminate against her choice to care for her children at home. Her request is one of hundreds that I have received from the silent thousands who will be affected by this discriminatory legislation.

What about parents who choose to let their parents care for their children? Are we going to regulate Grandma in order for her to care for her own grandchildren. I am certain that most Americans would disagree with this type of invasion of personal and individual choices.

The child care provisions also discriminate against religious schools which produce students well above the national average in academic achievement. They are merely a bandaid to a problem that appears to suffer from hemophilia. It is time for the Federal Government to start encouraging programs which give power back to the parents when making individual choices about child care and early child development. Earned income tax credits and education vouchers allow parents to make those choices at a lower cost to the taxpayer without creating programs which are impossible to monitor on the Federal level.

Mr. Chairman, I wholeheartedly support Mr. Edwards amendment. Programs which assist all parents, and not discriminate against others, are necessary for solving this Nation's child-care crisis.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, today we vote on legislation that will affect the emotional, social, intellectual, physical and possibly even the spiritual well-being of millions of young children in America. Our votes will influence these children's sense of security, their self-esteem, their ability to have compassion for others and to cooperate, their ability to assimilate and apply intellectual concepts, their wellness, their reaction to authority and their ability to differentiate between right and wrong.

Nurturing the development of a child is an awesome task. In a sense, all 435 of us here in the House of Representatives have temporarily assumed the role of godparents to the Nation's youth. What this Congress approves will affect the choices available to many of America's biological and adoptive parents to nurture their children.

Congress has been hard at work, spending great time and energy to fashion the child care legislation that is now before this House in the budget reconciliation bill. It is obvious to me that those who have tried very hard to meet the child care need challenge, have done so with great dedication. However, I fear that this bill with its formula for the Nation's child care needs, overlooks the fact that children are complex individuals for whom a formula for care cannot be devised and dictated by Federal regulations.

Amazingly, children's personalities often emerge within weeks of their birth. Some parents quickly discover that while one infant may thrive in a highly tactile and stimulating environment, others may withdraw from such stimulation. As a toddler, one such child will flourish in an institutional day care setting while the other youngster will do better in a quieter and more nurturing home setting. With this in mind, I think you will realize that there are no pat formulas for children and that the regulations for child/teacher ratios, group size, parent interaction, as contained in this reconciliation bill, should not be things that we as legislators should dictate to parents and children.

I believe the greatest gift we can give hardworking parents and their children is the opportunity to choose the kind of care that is best for the child. I believe the Edwards child care proposal for tax credits and advances will make it possible for working, low-income families to make the best choices for their children. The proposal expands the earned income tax credit and creates a new earned income tax credit for preschoolers. Such tax credits could be put toward different kinds of care whether it be provided in a home by mom, or dad, when one parent works while the other parent forgoes income to raise the child or by a relative or neighbor, or in a church-affiliated setting, or in an institutionalized day care setting. I like this approach because it does not promote a national bias toward institutional care, rather than care at home or in a church-affiliated children's program.

The Edwards child care proposal has my support because it will give working families the best chance to choose a child care setting that will give children a good developmental basis for life.

Mr. PAYNE of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, today I rise in support for child care provisions currently included in the reconciliation measure now before the House, and stand in strong opposition to the substitute amendments that threaten to exclude many of the essential improvements in Federal support for child care carefully crafted by the Education and Labor Committee.

We are facing a child care crisis in America that cannot be addressed merely through tax credits or modest increases in title XX block grant funds. I believe that it would be irresponsible for Congress to approve measures that simply throw money at the problem without providing real solutions. We need a mechanism for providing direct assistance to low and moderate income families, we need expanded investments in successful national programs like Head Start and preschool education and we need protections for parents and children to assure safe and quality child care. The substitute measures before this House today would strip the reconciliation package of substance, leaving parents who are struggling to obtain safe, affordable child care simply twisting in the wind.

In my State of New Jersey alone, more than 15,000 children would be denied direct and adequate assistance by the exclusion of the Hawkins-Downey provision. But, for the Nation as a whole, help for more than three-quarters of a million children and their parents is at stake by the adoption of any of pending substitutes.

America's hopes to build a strong and competitive work force for the next century begins by providing our children with a safe and healthy start in life, and its response to the new realities and pressures posed to working parents can only be achieved through adequate funding of quality programs. Absent the Education and Labor's provisions, however, Congress would fail to accomplish this task at the expense of millions of parents and children alike. Mr. Speaker, it is a price too high to pay. I therefore urge my colleagues to summarily reject the substitutes offered today, and vote to adopt the child care provisions currently included in budget reconciliation.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, today we face a choice among three plans to address America's child care needs. Each of these plans represents an honest effort by Members of this House to help America's families. And each plan proposes a Federal role in child care. The critical question we must address today is, what should that Federal role be? In other words, where does Federal "guidance" end and Federal interference begin?

Our emphasis in this debate should be on helping working families meet their child care needs. That requires us to accept the fact that these needs vary among States, among rural versus urban areas, among communities, and even among families. We are cheating America's families if we don't allow maximum flexibility in any Federal role in child care. A national policy isn't fair. Worse, it won't work.

Consider this: 90 percent of all families depend on home-based or church-based care for their children. How will we help this group at all if we shift the responsibility for child care to Federal- or State-administered centers? In fact, we won't. There is no reason to radically alter the way American families care for their children in order to conform to new Federal policy. Shouldn't the process work the other way around? Shouldn't we tailor the policy to meet the desires of America's families?

H.R. 3, the Democratic proposal, puts total emphasis on a Federal response for child care. It sets up a new bureaucracy at every government level, requiring a committee to establish Federal model standards, another committee at the State level to establish licensing standards, and a council to assess child care needs at the county level. How much child care money will go to providing child care, and how much will go to maintaining a child care bureaucracy?

The Democratic plan also establishes five pages of regulations the States must impose on every child care provider; regulations requiring minimum training for all child care workers, including grandparents and parents providing neighborhood care, and unannounced inspections of day-care centers, even if in private homes. the plan even requires States to set a policy on how many times child care workers must wash their hands each day. Is this the kind of guidance on child care American families are looking for?

Also under H.R. 3, those parents who count on their community churches for child care help are abandoned under this proposal. In effect, we would be telling these parents, "If you want Federal assistance, find a new child care center." Imagine the stress on families, especially those in inner urban areas, where parents count on the church as a primary source of child care outside the home.

Finally, this Federal plan discriminates against the mother who chooses to stay home and care for her children. Under H.R. 3, she will only qualify for assistance if she gets a job outside the home and lets someone else care for her children. This simply makes no sense. Why should a family making $30,000 with two parents working outside the home get more assistance than a family making the same amount, but with only one income? In my mind, caring for children is a full-time job, at least worthy of the consideration we give to any other job. Any policy that penalizes a mother for caring for her own children should be seriously questioned.

Two other proposals offered meet our child care needs without building new bureaucracies, without placing onerous burdens on child care providers, and without stripping parents of the flexibility to place their children with the care provider of their choice. The Republican substitute to H.R. 3 simply expands the earned income tax credit [EITC] to provide cash in hand for low-income parents to meet their child care needs. The EITC would be expanded for those with incomes up to $24,000, providing a maximum benefit of $1,500 per year. This concept should be a cornerstone to any final package passed by Congress. It allows parents more money, through tax breaks and refunds, to apply to child care expenses of any kind—including church- and home-based care.

The middle ground between H.R. 3 and the Republican substitute is a bipartisan package designed to incorporate the EITC concept with State-based programs. The Stenholm-Shaw approach maintains maximum flexibility for parents. Where H.R. 3 places two-thirds of its grant funding in school-based and institutional care, the bipartisan package increases title XX funding—under the Social Services Act—to allow States to choose among the many child care options available. The difference here is, States won't be forced to adopt federally mandated programs which may not work best for them, though nothing in H.R. 3 is disallowed under the Stenholm-Shaw plan. Also, this package pours over $4.5 billion into an expanded Head Start Program—compared to $3.3 billion under H.R. 3—over 5 years to include child care services. It also matches H.R. 3 in a grant—$1.75 billion over 5 years—to business for providing on-site child care. Finally, it virtually matches the EITC concept adopted in H.R. 3 by returning to families $12.5 billion in taxes over 5 years—compared to $13.5 under H.R. 3. The bipartisan package accomplishes all of this while still saving $6 billion over the Democratic proposal—an important fact given the current budget crisis.

The bottom line is, a Federal response to America's child care needs shouldn't come at the expense of a parent's right to place children where he or she sees fit. Let's not assume the Government knows better than parents what's best for their children. We have an opportunity to help families afford child care without forcing them to give up freedom of choice. Let's not supplant parents for another bureaucracy. It wouldn't be fair, and it's not the best solution.

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to see that there is so much interest in child care today. Ten years ago, when I raised the issue no one listened.

Finally, everyone has seen the statistics. Finally, the link between child care and employment opportunity is understood. Finally, it is realized that child care is not so much a "woman's issue" as a "national economic issue." Finally, legislation has reached the floor of the House of Representatives.

Considering the past decade of my involvement in child care, this is a most gratifying moment. Over the years, I have called for an expanded Government role in increasing the availability, quality and affordability of child care for middle-class families as well as the poorest of Americans. Through the Subcommittee on Government Activities and Transportation, which I chair, I have stimulated the General Services Administration to offer child care services in Federal facilities across the country, including Chicago. Also, I have successfully encouraged the Department of Defense to broadly expand child-care services to their military and civilian employees, both in the United States and abroad.

However, most notable among my child-care initiatives has been my legislative proposals. I have introduced bills since 1981 enunciating my views on the Federal Government's role in the child care effort and offering specific recommendations. I am extremely pleased to see that the principal features of my legislation are some of the key features of the Education and Labor Committee's language in the Budget Reconciliation Act. These include the focus on: Priority of services to children from needy families; a sliding payment scale based on family income; high-quality standards for child care services, including training requirements for child care personnel; and coordination and sharing of information with the States, including linkage with the child care clearinghouses of individual States.

I am also pleased to see the tax credit provisions in the Ways and Means Committee's title. As I have indicated in my child care bills, although tax credits are not sufficient by themselves, they are an appropriate augmentation to a broader child care approach.

I would like to compliment many of my colleagues in the House on their endurance and tireless commitment to child care, without which we would not be discussing this here today. Chairman HAWKINS, Representative GOODLING, Chairman KILDEE, and Representative TAUKE have all made tremendous contributions to the child care effort which cannot be understated. I would also like to thank my Chicago neighbor, Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI, as well as acting Chairman DOWNEY for further propelling child care to the forefront.

The national need for these services is well documented. Presently, over 55 percent of all women work outside the home and over 60 percent of them have children under 18. Nearly 50 percent of American mothers return to work before their baby's first birthday, and 70 percent of mothers who have school-aged children are working or looking for work. If current trends continue, in 1995, two-thirds of all preschool children will have mothers in the work force. According to a Department of Labor report released on April 15 of this year, in 1950, only 35 percent of women age 25 through 34 were working; now, that figure has doubled to 70 percent. In 1950, only 12 percent of mothers with children under the age of 6 were working; now, that figure has exploded to 57 percent. In 1950, the typical American family was thought of as the family where the father worked and the mother stayed at home with the children; now, only 10 percent of American families fit this description. Considering that the baby boom generation is having children now, these percentages translate to huge numbers.

In Chicago and elsewhere, employment opportunities multiply greatly with the presence of adequate child care services. Parents, with rare exception, cannot bring their children to work. So, if there is no place to bring the children, there is no way to go to work. This simple problem is one of the primary reasons that the welfare lists include so many parents of young children. Child care services that are easily accessible and affordable will give many people the liberty to find regular jobs and, in the process, uplift many of them out of the welfare system.

Child care services benefit the employer as well as the employee. Studies have shown that when parent-employees know that their children are being well cared for during working hours, those employees are less distracted and more productive. Similarly, absenteeism and tardiness are greatly decreased. In addition to these day-to-day benefits, recruitment efforts are greatly enhanced and worker turnover is reduced by a strong Company Child Care Program. The net effect is a national economic boost that will be concrete and substantial.

The language in the budget reconciliation bill is an appropriate, badly needed and long overdue Federal voice in the child care debate. Consequently, I must stress that any weakening of this language would be an obvious, disastrous regression. Any weakening would amount to an insensitive, inadequate answer to a compelling problem. The proponents of the weakening amendments suggest that the bill goes too far. My response to them is that the Federal Government is long overdue in acting on this and we must make up for past inaction. Leaving most of the discretion to the States, as they prefer, would perpetuate the problems. The States had their chance for leadership and passed it up. If a State has not taken significant measures so far, chances are that they will continue to resist. Strong Federal guidance and leadership is now imperative.

Mr. Chairman, today we are witnessing a landmark transformation. Today is the official recognition by the House of Representatives of child care's valuable place in American society. I urge my colleagues to be bold. I urge my colleagues to support the bill's language and defeat all weakening amendments.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong opposition to the Democratic child care bills proposed by Mr. DOWNEY and Mr. HAWKINS and in strong support of the Republican substitute.

Mr. Chairman, the last thing America needs is another Democratic federally subsidized nightmare. The Federal Government has no business interfering in what is the responsibility of individual parents—how to care for our children. The Republican amendment avoids this potential horror by offering freedom of choice for parents seeking child care by providing tax relief for low-income families with small children through increases in the earned income tax credit, or EITC.

The two Democratic bills, on the other hand, are destined to fail because they substitute the wisdom of the Government for the wisdom of the parent. Now the Democrats claim that their bill offers choice, but it is the Government which gets to choose, not the parents. In order for parents to get information about locations and programs they will have to call a referral service agency created as part of the $2.5 billion allocation. In other words, the Government will decide which agencies are suitable for subsidized child care, not the parents.

Moreover, under the Democratic plan, traditional families get no assistance at all. Yet, they will be forced to share in the cost of providing benefits to others. This is the sort of Robin Hood in reverse scheme for which the Democrats have become rightly infamous. They take money from families where the mother stays at home to pay for day care for yuppie couples. Indeed, the Democratic plans offer a substantial incentive for families not to care for their own children and will enhance the credibility of those who argue that "Traditional families are a thing of the past." Should this be our goal? Is this good social policy?

Not only are the Democratic plans antifamily, they are antichurch as well. Sectarian institutions will not be able to get, either directly or indirectly, funds to provide child care services. Thus, religious child care centers will have a choice to secularize their service or lose children to federally approved centers. However, Government-regulated centers are the least desirable and most expensive. The end result will be that church centers decline and the Government centers expand. Again, this is not good public policy.

And as usual, the Democrats have gone regulation crazy. Any center which accepts an eligible child will be held to all Federal and State regulations. But again the Democrats have missed the point. What does the height of sinks or the width of the doors in the centers have to do with the quality of care?

Last, Mr. Chairman, the Democratic proposals are an inefficient means of providing child care assistance. Consider that some 55 percent of children are cared for at the home by a parent, 14 percent are cared for by a sitter at home, 17 percent by a neighbor, 4 percent by the mothers while working, and 3 percent by religious centers. As you can see, the Democratic plan is catering to a small minority, whereas the Republican plan would target everybody with children, but especially those who can least afford the expense of child care.

Mr Chairman, it is important that any child care legislation contain three features. It must be targeted to those who need it most; it must offer parents choice; and it must promote competition in the provision of child care services. Parents are intelligent enough to choose the child care which best suits their children. And when given a choice, most parents choose a nonlicensed, informal center for child care. Democrats want to take this option away.

The Edwards Republican substitute, which I wholeheartedly support, is the ideal solution to the child care issue. It assumes, rightly so, that the best way to assist low-income working families meet their child care costs is to put more money into their pockets, and the best way to do that is to ease their tax burden. Expanded use of the EITC represents the most efficient way to target families which need financial help and the most effective way of getting the help to them. Over 5 years, the Edwards amendment would put $15.1 billion into the pockets of families with children through increased tax credits and refunds. Not a dollar would go to new bureaucracies or new national advisory committees for the purpose of developing new Federal standards. That is why I will be voting for the Edwards proposal.

Recently, Mr. Chairman, a gentleman from Pennsylvania, Richard Orloff, visited my office to discuss child care. He had wanted to testify at one of the many hearings on this issue but was unable to do so. He brought for me a copy of the testimony he intended to give and I think it addresses many of the concerns average Americans have with the Democratic proposals. I would like to submit that testimony for the RECORD and would urge all my colleagues to read it and consider its arguments when voting on this issue:

A CITIZEN'S TESTIMONY ON CHILD CARE

INTRODUCTION

The key question that faces our Nation today on child care issues is "Are our children better off being cared for in the home or are they better off in day care?" This question would have seemed absurd or ever abhorrent 25 years ago. Since the answer favors child rearing in the home, then lets have legislation that helps the home. This does not ignore the single parent. Legislation that supports the traditional family can:

(1) help prevent married parents from becoming single parents,

(2) build a network of neighborhood and relative home care that can provide safe, inexpensive quality child care for single parents and for those married parents who choose to work or have to work, and

(3) eliminate a costly bureaucracy that creates cost for the provider to be paid for by the parent.

In these assertions, I am in step with 88% of American mothers who agreed to the statement "That if I could afford it, I would rather be at home with my children." By almost two to one, women under age 44 said they did not view the increase of children in day care as positive.(1)

REASONS TO OPPOSE (H.R. 30-55)

(1) Regulatory Mess

ABC is being advertised as an assistance to parents with small children. In fact, the bill's 78 pages refer to the term license or similar terms at least 30 times.(2) The substance of the bill is an attempt by the Federal Government to regulate child care and child rearing through a myriad of laws and regulations on the Day Care Industry. It does nothing to alleviate the financial burdens on the family as I will explain later.

(2) No Bang for the Buck

Of the $2.5 billion allocated in the first year much of the funding would go to set up and fund an agency to regulate the state controlled day care centers. (I would like to know how much and so would the American people.) On the other hand, of moneys paid to parents through tax credits, virtually 100% goes directly to parents as benefits.

(3) Tax and Spending Nightmare

Because the bill authorizes "such sums as may be necessary" for fiscal 1991 and beyond, the program will grow in scope and dimension (much the same as Medicare and Social Security) to the point where the Federal Government will be forced to impose major new taxes to finance this program. Edward Zigler of the Center in Child Development at Yale predicts it will cost the U.S. $75-$100 billion to solve "this child care problem".(3) Zigler has been pushing for a nationalized system of child care (currently under legislative consideration in H.R. 3). This "Child Care Problem" is in Mr. Zigler's mind. Parents are capable of solving their own child care problems if the government stays out of their paychecks. Douglas Besharov of the American Enterprise Institute estimated that a full subsidy would cost $32 billion annually and perhaps more.(4) These price tags contrast sharply to the approximate $15 billion currently being spent on all forms of child care.(5)

It doesn't make sense to tax families for the purpose of providing child care then turn around and return that money in the form of Day Care Service with a Bureaucratic broker.

(4) Government Tax and Spending Deception

Of the $15 billion spent in the United States for child care, the Federal Government already spends in direct payments or foregoing tax revenues $5.6 billion or 37% of the cost.(6) All of this assistance goes for out of the home child care. The traditional family does not receive $1 in direct benefits, yet the traditional family shared in the cost of providing this benefit. The traditional family also only earns $.66 for every $1 earned by a two-wage earner family.(7) For every $1 in tax benefits received by a traditional family, $2 in tax and spending benefits are received by non-traditional families.(8) If ABC passes, this will rise to a $3:$1 ratio in the first year.(9)

Furthermore, government tax and spending policies are helping to fulfill the prophecy that the "Traditional Family" is a thing of the past. In 1948, the Federal tax burden was 2% of median family income. In 1988, the same burden is now 24%.(10) In 1948, the personal exemption shielded 42% of per capita income. In 1988, only 13% of per capita income is shielded.(11)

The growing use of daycare is a direct result of the government's tax and spending policy over the past four decades.

(5) Unreglated Centers Provide Higher Quality Care Than Regulated Centers

Overall, about 90% of the estimated 1.7 million family or home day care centers operate without regulation or license. The National Day Care Home Study conducted by the Department of Health and Human Services found no indication that unlicensed family day care was harmful. A conclusion of the report follows:

"Stable, warm, and stimulating * * * caters successfully to the developmentally appropriate needs of the children in care; parents who use in home daycare report it satisfactorily meets their child care needs * * * the study's observers were consistently impressed by the care they saw regardless of regulatory status."

The study further noted the following characteristics in the unregulated provider:

(1) Providers are primarily engaged in caring for their own children; they care for one or more neighborhood children as a modest means of supplementing the family income. Often the provider has been requested to perform the service.

(2) Over half of the parents with children in unregulated family daycare had known the caregiver for six months or longer before placing their children in the provider's care.

(3) One-third of parents with children in unregulated care stated that they had a close personal friendship with the caregiver; another third regarded the caregiver as a casual friend.

(4) Over half of the children in unregulated family daycare lived within a few blocks of the caregiver's home.

(5) Over three-fourths of parents said that their children had a "loving" relationship with the caregiver, and 22 percent said their children had a "friendly relationship.

(6) The child to caregiver ratio in the unlicensed setting is lower than that of a licensed setting.

By contrast large, licensed daycare centers are major transmission centers for hepatitis, severe diarrhea, and other diseases. According to Dr. Stephen Hadler, Center for Disease Control, about 14% of all infectious hepatitis cases in the U.S. are acquired through daycare facilities.

While the overall rate of meningitis among children in the general population is 40-60 per 100,000 each year, nearly one percent or 1,000 per 100,000 children in large day care centers under the age of one, suffer a meningitis attack each year. About 10% of those will die and 33% of those will suffer long-term neurological damage.

To conclude on this point, unregulated home care (whether by the mother or a neighbor) is superior than the large licensed and regulated day care. The bill seeks to increase licensure and regulation and will in fact reduce the quality of care and perpetuate the spread of disease among infants and contribute to the unnecessary death of some infants. (12)

(6) Regulated Centers Are More Costly

The prices charged by large regulated day care centers are higher than those in unregulated informal settings. (13) Historically, regulation adds to cost. ABC would enforce a myraid of law and regulation on the informal neighborhood setting and even make it more costly for the larger centers. The proponents of the bill claim it will reduce cost of care to the consumer, it will in fact increase cost by adding the cost of unnecessary regulation and driving the low cost providers out of business leaving only the high cost providers offering day care services.

(7) ABC Will Help Less Than 14% of the Pre-School Day Care Census

The parents of the other 86% in effect subsidize the recipient of ABC. Of the preschool child census: 54% have mothers who are not employed; 11% have parents that are a "tag team"; 4% have mothers doing double time; 11% are cared for by relatives or neighbors.

Only 20% of the pre-school census use large day care facilities. Of the remaining 20% almost 33% or one third are cared for out of religious or sectarian institutions. Under the provision of this bill, it is doubtful that religious or church-based day care centers will receive any benefits.

Therefore, only 14% of the pre-school children of parents would be eligible at the outset, before financial means tests are applied for one to receive benefits from ABC.

(8) Discrimination Against Church and Traditional Family

The bill is blatantly anti-family and anti-church. As previously noted, the Grove City Statute is attached to the ABC bill. Grove City in effect prohibits any sectarian institution from receiving funding either directly or indirectly. One of the ways it does this is to apply tests of discrimination against the entire institution with broad interpretation of what constitutes discrimination or violation of an individual's civil rights.

Over time this law will destroy of severely limit church-based day care while benefiting purely secularized day care. Since almost one third of the large day care centers are church-based and a good portion of those are in poor inner city neighborhoods, economically oppressed parents, in order to receive benefits, will move their children to government day care centers. The church-based day care center having fixed costs and a declining census will be forced to close. The secularized day care center having limited capacity and a rising census will be encouraged to expand.

The second amendment states that "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or preventing the free exercise thereof." The power to tax is the power to destroy. By taking public funds derived from the entire public's tax contributions and applying them to the exclusive benefits of nonsectarians, in effect Congress has passed a law preventing the "free exercise thereof." We all live in an economic continuum that is inescapable. A better law would allow the parents vouchers to be used at the institution of their choice.

The same dilemma faces mothers of preschoolers who choose to stay home with their children. The current ratio of government benefits given to families who sacrifice to have mothers stay at home as opposed to parents who place their children in day care is $1:$2. If ABC passes the ration will rise to $1:$3 against traditional families.

(9) Contradiction Within Itself

(A) In Section 670H of the bill, parental referrals are placed under government control. This means that parents must consult government approved referral services in order to get information about the location and program of a given preschool. Proponents of ABC claim the bill offers choice. If the government controls the referral service then the government is free to choose!

(B) The bill imposes the Grove City statute which makes it illegal to violate the civil rights of individuals on the basis of race, sex, handicap, religion or age. Sounds fair! However, under the broad interpretation of "sex" or "handicap" a drug addict, alcoholic, or homosexual would have to be hired. At the same time, the bill pushes for licensure and "nationally recognized child development credentials" (Page 47(C)(1)). Licenses and credentials are set up to insure safety, reliability, integrity and credibility. We would not let a pilot have a license if he was a drug addict yet the bill by being attached to Grove City would allow a drug addict to provide child care.

(C) About one third of the large day care centers are church-based. (15) The Senate passed an Amendment that allowed church-based centers to benefit from the bill. The same Senate then voted down an amendment which would have required the entire bill to be struck down if a court struck down that amendment. The Senate didn't have any confidence in it's own amendment. Therefore, a bill that purports to help expand the availability of day care will automatically strike down and impose economic hardship on almost one third of the available large day care supply. (The ACLU has announced it will seek to preclude church-based day care from receiving any aid. Church-based day care centers will not be allowed to say grace before meals, tell bible stories or do arts and crafts involving religious symbols).

ALTERNATIVES TO ABC (H.R. 30-S5)

(1) Expanded child care credit to all parents with pre-schoolers.

(a) Eligibility based on means only.

(b) Payment made to parents through Tax Returns regardless of total tax liability (i.e., even if a parent paid no taxes, they could still receive the credit).

(2) Eliminate Social Security Tax for low income parents with pre-school children and require the employers matching contribution be paid to parents. A one-year freeze or reduction of COLA would finance this.

(3) A number of stay-at-home mothers care for children of working and single mothers under the table and require that the working parent forego use of current child care deductions.

This network of providers should be legitimatized by allowing neighborhood care givers to earn up to $8,000 tax free and allowing the parents to still use their child care deductions. This would expand the supply of day care. Increasing supply and constant demand would lower prices.

(4) Tax incentives should be offered to employers for offering "work site child care" where economies of scale make sense.

(5) Rules for "Not for profit" status should be tightened and enforced. Large Day Care Organizations should be required to disclose financial results according to guidelines set up by the AICPA. Management and Administrative Salaries not connected with the direct cost of providing care should be reported separately. Related party transactions should be fully disclosed to the consuming public.

(6) Allow Senior Citizens who work in child care to earn income without a reduction in their Social Security Income.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, one of the central concerns of the American family, and of this Nation, is the care of our children. Today, we have a long overdue opportunity to address the child care crisis that threatens the development of the children of this country. The child care package in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 represents one of the most significant and urgently needed domestic programs before us in this Congress. I strongly support this plan, and I urge my colleagues to oppose any weakening amendments.

Few disagree that finding adequate child care is a serious problem for millions of Americans. The most common family situation for children today is that of both parents in the labor force. Yet many parents cannot afford child care. Others cannot find child care programs. And still others who can afford child care have difficulty finding quality programs.

The question is not whether there is a need for broad improvements in child care, it is how to best approach achieving this goal. I believe that the child care package in the reconciliation bill is the most comprehensive, carefully crafted proposal before us for meeting the needs of the child care crisis. These provisions reflect not only the tremendous effort, time and research on the part of Members of Congress and staff, but also the advice and experience of thousands of child care experts across the country.

Neither the substitute offered by Mr. EDWARDS nor the substitute offered by Mr. STENHOLM comes close to providing the breadth of services or assurance of quality set forth in the bill. In contrast to the piecemeal approach taken by both substitutes, the bill includes the essential components necessary for a complete, responsible child care policy. The bill not only builds on existing Head Start and school-based programs, it creates a number of new avenues toward increasing availability and accessibility of child care, such as grants to States for services, incentives for businesses to provide services, and increased tax credits for low-income families.

The amendment by Mr. EDWARDS is hardly a child care measure, as it simply expands the earned income tax credit with no guarantees that these increases in credit would be put toward child care services. And it does not even address the very basic issues of safety or quality in care. The expansion of the EITC is a sound idea for supplementing the income of low-income families, but it represents only a component of an adequate child care policy. In addition, the reconciliation bill already includes provisions to expand the EITC, and goes further than the Edwards amendment by providing an increase in credit for families with two or more children.

While more comprehensive than the Edwards measure, the Stenholm substitute nonetheless falls far short of the bill. One of the most troubling aspects of the Stenholm amendment is the language that expressly allows the use of Federal moneys for sectarian purposes. In contrast, the reconciliation bill language concerning sectarian providers was painstakingly drafted in order to avoid challenging the establishment clause of the Constitution. The Education and Labor Committee took great time and care in drafting the church-state provisions in the bill, and it would be irresponsible to simply throw this work out as the Stenholm amendment does.

Clearly, across the board, the child care package in the bill is superior to the substitute proposals. I urge my colleagues to take a step toward playing an active, positive role in the care of the Nation's children by supporting the child care provisions of H.R. 3299 and voting against the Edwards and Stenholm substitutes.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, the issue we are considering today touches the heart of every American family. For most parents, child care is the most important concern they face.

These days when two-income and single parent families are the norm, day care plays an integral part in American society. The question we now must face is to what degree the Federal Government should get involved in the right of families to choose how to raise their children. Should we set up federally funded centers with strict regulations or should we allow parents a choice of where to send their children? Should we only help those families who send their children to these mandated centers or should we recognize that raising children is a full-time job and help those who keep their children at home.

I believe that child care is a personal decision. Each family is a separate entity with distinct demands. Each parent should be allowed to decide what is best for them. It should not be federally mandated. Who knows better than a parent the needs of their children? Certainly not the Federal Government.

I am concerned that we are mandating a new policy without fully studying the situation. This can only lead to new programs which will not truly meet the needs of those we are trying to help. I am also concerned that the Federal Government may be taking on a major obligation when it cannot effectively fufill the heavy fiscal and social obligations currently facing the Nation.

In the final analysis, I believe that a family knows its own needs and it is better to leave the choice of child care to the parent.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 3, the Early Childhood Education and Development Act. I want to first commend my distinguished colleague, Congressman AUGUSTUS HAWKINS, for his leadership and tenacity in pulling together such a comprehensive and important piece of legislation. Of all the issues that captured our Nation during the past Presidential election, child care ranked among the top. This measure addresses our concerns in a significant manner.

As you know, there is a growing need for quality and affordable child care in the United States. This situation is a result of the growing numbers of mothers joining the workforce. Consequently, we find ourselves in a situation where we do not have adequate and affordable child care for our children.

This issue has involved the U.S. Congress in a major debate as to how to best provide child care assistance to America's families. The Early Childhood Education and Development Act has responded to this problem by incorporating all the elements that educators and child caregivers know to be effective and important in raising our youth.

Mr. Chairman, we must ensure that future generations are protected and nurtured into productive adults. Moreover, if we as a Nation are to meet our long-term economic and social goals, business, labor and the Federal Government must play a greater role in ensuring that family child care needs are met. Only with this cooperation and collaboration can we remove barriers that impede productivity and often prevent individuals from seeking work or that deter committed workers in an ever demanding and competitive workforce. Further, we make a commitment to the American family by safeguarding and protecting their children, as well as making a long-term investment in our children's, and our Nation's future.

Again, I commend the Chairman for the direction he has provided in offering this legislation and encourage my colleagues to vote in favor of this measure. Support our families. Let's take care of our kids.

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Edwards amendment. I believe that the school-based provisions of the child care package are one of the most important parts of the Education and Labor Committee's portion of the bill, and it is crucial that the committee's language be preserved.

Right now America is in a child care crisis. Mothers across the country are finding it necessary to work outside the home to make ends meet and their children need proper care.

The Education and Labor Committee's package includes school-based child care, expansion of Head Start, and funds for private child care. All three of these programs are necessary for us if we are to help develop a comprehensive national child care strategy.

Both of the amendments we are considering today cripple our efforts to give our children quality child care. The Stenholm amendment, in fact, would provide my State, Illinois, with barely a third of the title 20 funds which the Education and Labor Committee's version provides.

Mr. Chairman, America needs good child care and we need it now. The child care provisions reported to the House best meet the needs of the Nation and I urge all of my colleagues to oppose these amendments, and accept the good judgment of the committee. The bottomline is that the committee's language implements the critical educational component of child care that we have needed in this country for so long. Support the committee and defeat these amendments.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, today I rise in support of the child care provision included in the budget reconciliation bill. I commend my colleagues on the Committee on Education and Labor, Chairman HAWKINS, Chairman GEORGE MILLER of the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families and Chairman TOM DOWNEY on the Ways and Means' Subcommittee on Human Resources for their diligent work on the child care bill. They have devoted considerable time and energy to develop a good child care bill for America's families.

It has been 20 years since Congress had debated child care, and I am pleased to have the opportunity to vote in favor of this important legislation. In 20 years, we have witnessed democratic changes in the American family structure. We have seen over half of the mothers with young childrn leave the home to enter the workforce. The number of single parent families with children under 10 will have risen 48 percent during the 1980's alone. On average, in two-parent families with children, working mothers contribute 41.3 percent to total family earnings. Employment treads over the last decade indicate that families now rely on having both parents in the workforce to maintain family economic security.

These fundamental changes in the structure of the family require fundamental changes in our child care system. We cannot wait any longer to address these changes and to help our working families who defend on child care.

I have received letters from my constituents who are concerned with the constitutionality of the child care legislation and the issue of separation of church and state. I believe Chairman HAWKINS has provided us with child care legislation that addresses the separation of church and state. This child care initiative is similar to California State law and its Head Start Program. Since 1972, the California State Department of Education has funded many church-sponsored child care centers with Head Start funds, provided there was no religious instruction involved. In San Francisco, St. Patrick's Child Care Center has been under contract since 1972 with the California State Department of Education and serves a majority of the Filipino families in the city. In San Francisco, we have not had any problems with State funds being allocated to St. Patrick's Child Care Center and we are proud to have the services of St. Patrick's. I believe H.R. 3 addresses the important role churches can play in providing child care and also preserving the separation of church and state.

I urge my colleagues to support the child care bill in the budget reconciliation bill and oppose any weakening amendments. This child care reform is desperately needed if we are to have any long-term success in welfare reform. We need to be able to provide child care to working families so that women can further their education and improve their job skills to support a family. Unamended, this bill strikes a good balance providing both grant monies and tax credits. H.R. 3299 is the best choice for our families.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, today the House will debate what has come to be the biggest family issue of this decade—child care.

Since I came to Congress in 1979, helping to decide what the Government's role in child care should be has been a major concern of mine. I have long believed that the appropriate Federal role is to allow parents and families to make their own child care decisions, rather than to place decisionmaking authority and responsibility in the hands of government bureaucrats.

My vote today will be for the plan which I believe constitutes the most reasonable and responsible approach to the child care issue, that which takes the most constructive ideas from various child care proposals, and discards those whose actual effect would be to limit availability and creativity, flexibility, and freedom to choose. As I have said many times in the past, I strongly believe the success of developing a solid national day care structure relies on our ability to achieve these things.

Family choice can be preserved through an effective tax credit plan which would provide direct assistance to parents; and State flexibility can be ensured by limiting Federal regulatory mandates, such as regulation, training and enforcement of child care standards. States should be free to target child care money where it is needed, and not impeded by burdening restrictions that mistarget Federal funds.

Head Start should be expanded, as long as program increases are geared toward helping those families with the greatest needs—those with young children and the lowest incomes.

Parents should be allowed to keep church-based care as an option and businesses should be given incentives to provide creative care options for their employees.

All these things are critical to fashioning a practical, well-balanced solution to this problem. I have worked to see this accomplished and that is why, today, I will support the package that can achieve this.

Over the years, I have had the opportunity to share views with a number of individuals, from child care workers to legislators and concerned parents in and outside of my congressional district. I appreciated this exchange, it helped to shape my views and encouraged my interest and I thank all of these people for their interest in children and in promoting this issue.

As we continue the child care debate this year, and, in the years following, I look foward to continuing our work together, sharing common concerns and resolving differences.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, the Early Childhood Education and Development Act being debated today is based on three fallacies. First, there is a critical shortage of day care in the United States. Second, the Government, rather than parents, is a better judge of quality child care. Last, federally subsidized institutions provide the best form of child care. All of these statements are untrue and unfounded.

There is no critical shortage of day care in the United States. Day care is one of the most rapidly growing industries in the economy. Over the past quarter century, spaces for children in day care facilities has increased at a rate of nearly 10 percent annually. When shortages persist, it is usually due to excessive regulation, the type we will be debating today, not lack of willing providers. Between 1960 and 1986, the number of children in formal group care centers jumped from 141,000 to 2.1 million. The market responded and the number of centers grew from 4,400 to 39,929. Today, there are at least 1.65 million unlicensed, informal neighborhood day care providers. Critics of the current system would prefer to see children cared for in institutionalized day care centers.

Most Americans believe that the family itself is the best and most important child care institution. Approximately 70 percent of mothers state that they would prefer to remain at home with their children if they could afford to do so. By a ratio of 2 to 1, mothers under the age of 44 state that they do not regard the increasing use of day care centers as being a positive development.

A recent Harris Poll found that 82 percent of respondents felt that the best form of child care is that in which one or both parents or other family members care for their children. When parents themselves cannot care for their children and family members are not available, parents prefer to have their children cared for by a trusted neighbor. This care is more personalized, easily accessible and the cost is less prohibitive than a formal day care center. Nearly 95 percent of the Nation's 1.75 million neighborhood providers are unlicensed and unregulated.

However, the liberal policymakers in this country would have us believe that the highest qualify of care, where children experience a safe, healthy, and enriching environment, is in federally approved day care centers. Studies prove this is not true. Child psychologist Jay Belsky of Pennsylvania State University found that infants who spend 20 or more hours per week in substitute care are more likely than other children to avoid or ignore their mothers. This detachment, according to Belsky, reflects the baby's "underlying doubt or mistrust about the availability of the mother." Advocates of institutionalized day care believe that these discrepancies could be eliminated by mandating "high quality" day care. However, a recent study of children who attend the University of North Carolina's highly respected Frank Porter Graham Child Development Center found that these youngsters were much more likely than other children to hit, push, swear, tease, threaten, and argue.

Essentially, what this debate boils down to is, who will determine what child care arrangement is best for our children? The Hawkins proponents believe that the Government should determine what child care is best for your child. They believe that a licensed worker is a better caretaker than a trusted family friend. This reasoning reflects an antifamily bias. This type of Government intervention will serve to further erode the institution of the family.

Child care policy must recognize parental choice. It must adhere to the importance of providing parents the freedom to choose the child care arrangement best suited for their child's needs—whether that be informal care in the home of the parent, relative, neighbor, or friend, or in a formal day care center. It should minimize cost, and maximize relief. The substitutes being offered today by Representatives EDWARDS, STENHOLM, and SHAW would preserve parents' choice by providing funds directly to parents rather than to the Government or the day care industry. By expanding the earned income tax credit [EITC], it targets those most in need: low- to middle-income working families. I urge my colleagues to support these substitutes and thus support the family.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3299—and in strong opposition to the Edwards and the Stenholm amendments.

I am delighted to see Mr. EDWARDS working to increase tax credits for low income families under EITC, which is an old democratic program. H.R. 3299, also increases the EITC to help poor families whether parents stay at home or work outside the home.

But we must be absolutely clear that Mr. EDWARDS' spending proposal does nothing to provide childcare. It does not provide parents with enough money to make any real difference when it comes to child care—although the money might help with groceries, the rent or an occasional babysitter. EITC provides a maximum of $215 per year for children over the age of 6, and $645 maximum for children under age of 6. This makes little impact when most families face child care bills in excess of $3,000 a year. Let us be clear: The Edwards amendment does nothing to increase the supply or the quality of child care. It simply does not deal with the problems facing America.

The Stenholm amendment does not solve problems—it creates them. A recent docudrama told of a little girl in child care in Texas who fell down an uncapped well. We do not need near tragedies. We need local and State-based consumer protection. Stenholm does nothing; H.R. 3299 protects consumers.

H.R. 3299 supports church-based care, Stenholm drags it into court. Stenholm allows chruches to participate only by opening the door to endless litigation. HR. 3299 supports church-based care, allowing church participation under every one of its titles. This approach has been proven to work in supporting church-based care. In California, churches have participated in a similar program since 1972 without problem. H.R. 3299 is supported by the National Council of Churches, and many other churches and church groups, including the United Church of Christ, the Episcopalians, the Methodists, the Presbyterians, and many others.

What about Head Start which has such an excellent record of helping children develop to their full potential. While Stenholm slashes $400 million from Headstart, H.R. 3299 expands Head Start into a full-day, full-year program so that it will help working parents.

Finally, both Stenholm and H.R. 3299 expand the earned income tax credit. I support that extension, but we must recognize that it does nothing to provide quality child care. It does not even assure that the credit will be used for child care.

Stenholm makes EITC countable under means-tested programs. As a result certain low-income families could lose some or all their AFDC benefits, some could lose Medicare benefits and some could find their rent for assisted housing going up. H.R. 3299 expands tax credits to help all low-income parents—including those who stay at home. The Stenholm amendment would leave many parents and children worse off.

I urge my colleagues to strongly support Head Start as a full-time program. I urge my colleagues to strongly support local and State-based consumer protection. I urge my colleagues to strongly support the important role of churches in providing child care without locking up the churches in litigation. I urge my colleagues to support the extension of the EITC that does not leave poor parents worse off than before. I urge my colleagues to vote for H.R. 3299 because it is a balanced approach that builds on what has been proven to work.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the Hawkins-Downey child care measures that are in the budget reconciliation bill. This package is a comprehensive and sound approach to meeting the needs of America's families.

Our Nation's families have waited for almost two decades for legislation that addresses the needs of working parents. The failure to act, to provide parents with the assistance they need to care for their children has produced a situation where parents are unable to find decent, affordable child care for their children. As a result, the safety and well-being of children are jeopardized.

I have two grandchildren, both of whom will grow up in a society that is far different from the days of Ozzie and Harriet. These are the days of latchkey children, of single parents, of a generation that is growing up without the security that we had as children. Unless we act today, we will miss the opportunity to help a generation at risk.

The Hawkins-Downey child care provisions help parents pay for the child care of their choice and, importantly, provide parents with assurances of safe, quality child care.

The strong need to pass the Hawkins-Downey proposal is there not only for our children, but also for our Nation's future. Our work force cannot be productive and our Nation cannot be competitive if working parents face constant pressures of finding someone to care for their children as they work to feed and clothe them.

We need to give our children a good start in life. The Edwards and Stenholm substitutes are false starts in this effort. I strongly endorse the Hawkins-Downey proposals and urge my colleagues to defeat any substitutes.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, today the House of Representatives debates creating a new day care entitlement program. Yesterday, we repealed a major fiasco in the catastrophic health care bill. Let's make sure that we do not repeat a similar mistake.

Before this body are two different philosophies on how to address a divisive but critical social problem. As we all know, working mothers comprise a growing percentage of the labor force. Liberals believe that only the Government can insure adequate day care programs for our children. Creating structured environments and regulating everyone remotely associated with child rearing is their solution to the day care problem. This approach is reflected in the act for better child care services—the ABC bill—which has now been incorporated into an amendment introduced by Democrat Representative TOM DOWNEY of New York into the budget reconciliation bill that we debate today.

The Downey provision would give grants to States for expanded child care services to families earning up to 115 percent of the median family income, which for Montana is salaries up to $32,200. The projected cost is estimated at $22.7 billion over 4 years.

In addition, the ABC amendment creates four new grant programs in two Federal departments that will consume substantial resources for administrative and bureaucratic functions rather than actual child care services. Yesterday, I received a letter from the National Governors' Association imploring Congress to give the greatest amount of flexibility to States in creating child care policy. Many Americans do not know that every State already oversees day care centers and all but four States regulates even small child care providers. The Downey provison imposes unwanted "solutions" from Washington upon the States. This is another attempt to trample on States rights and ignore local conditions that may not be the same across America.

Finally, I am extremely concerned about the constitutionality of the ABC amendment. The first amendment to the U.S. Constitution guarantees freedom of religion, but under the Downey amendment religious day care providers would have to remove all references to their religious beliefs if they accept a certain level of funding from the Federal government. Here we go again, trying to force secular ethics upon people who choose to believe in God. This is one of the problems I predicted last year with the Grove City legislation, which forced a Christian college in Pennsylvania to adopt some programs in violation of their religious beliefs, and now the chickens are coming home to roost.

However, the other approach puts faith in the American people to make their own decisions regarding day care for their children. Parents know what's best for their children, and the Federal Government should be enacting policy that reinforces the greatest amount of choice among child care options.

Earlier this session, I cosponsored H.R. 2008, along with 118 of my colleagues, which would increase the dependent care tax credit. The revised tax credit, based on the poverty level, would go directly to needy families and not to a State bureaucracy or day care center. The family would then be given freedom of choice among various day care options—homemaker, family, neighbors, religious institutions, or secular child care centers.

I was pleased that the House leadership permitted a clear up or down vote on this tax credit alternative. Republican Representative MICKEY EDWARDS of Oklahoma has offered an amendment to the budget reconciliation bill similar to H.R. 2008, with a provision to increase the earned income tax credit [EITC] to 17 percent, which will actually put more money in the pockets of poor people. The cost of this amendment over 4 years is about 40 percent less than the Democract's day care bureaucracy alternative.

Mr. Chairman, I can think of no starker choice before this body than this vote—help the truly poor with day care assistance or appear to solve the day care crisis by shuffling kids off to massive Government run day care centers devoid of religious symbols or references. I encourage my colleagues to vote for the Edwards amendment. It promotes freedom of choice and directs day care funds to the most needy. Let's enact a sensible day care policy and avoid the pitfalls of over-regulation and top-heavy bureaucracies.

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I rise in reluctant support of H.R. 3299, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989. This legislation is important in getting on with the business of balancing the Federal budget. But it is my hope that the conference committee will take care of the more flagrant abuses of the legislative process.

I have not been a member of this institution long—only 5 months, this week. But I have participated in the legislative process, having served 5 years in the Wyoming State Legislature. What has disturbed me since I arrived in Congress, particularly as I look at this bill and the ensuing debate, is the apparent belief by the leadership of this institution that the people of this country don't know or understand what is going on around here.

We are facing a fiscal crisis in this country because of the inability to balance the Federal budget. We entered a technical sequester under Gramm-Rudman on October 1, and it will take full effect on October 15. H.R. 3299 will not address this problem.

We have funded the Government only through October 25 because we have been unwilling and unable to pass appropriation bills in accordance with the budget laws Congress has enacted.

Later this month we must increase the statutory debt limit of this country to more than $3 trillion.

Our response to these facts is legislation and legislative shenanigans that address politics, not sound economic policy. We're expected to go back to our districts and tell our constituents that we have done a good job, yet we know that is not the case.

I support certain aspects of this bill. I support the Jenkins-Archer provision to reduce the capital gains tax over the next 2 years and index it in the future. Contrary to the class-warfare arguments pushed by the Democrat leadership, this provision will help the small business owners, home and ranch owners and those Wyomingites who choose to deal with the financial markets.

I support the repeal of the catastrophic health plan that was forced upon the seniors of this country last year. In talking to hundreds of seniors over the past few months, they were in almost unanimous agreement that the catastrophic tax increase was a catastrophe. The plan forced many to pay for coverage that they already had and for services that they would never use. This is an issue that needs to be addressed in a serious manner, not as an amendment to a bill of this magnitude.

I support the repeal of the section 89 provisions which unfairly increased the operating costs on the small and mid-sized businesses which are the backbone of Wyoming's economy.

I support the Stenholm-Shaw approach to child care which doesn't put the Federal Government in the business of licensing grandmothers. Parents should have the right to choose whatever child care they want with government only intruding when it can be shown that the care is detrimental to the children. Unfortunately, this amendment did not pass.

Given the provisions that have been adopted by the House, I have little choice but to support H.R. 3299. But that does not negate the fact that these issues were bundled into a tax bill and not considered as stand-alone legislation. H.R. 3299 is apparently the "last train out" for the tax-and-spend crowd in this institution, so they wanted to make sure their "baggage" was all aboard. This is not right, and it's going to come back to haunt us.

The taxpayers deserve better—much better. We have to address the deficit. We do so by just grabbing any little provision that will save $50 million here, add $22 million there, push a pay date back a month without thinking of the long term consequences. It's a game—it's smoke and mirrors—and it doesn't work!

If Congress and the White House are truly serious about addressing the deficit, then they had better start by agreeing to stop the games and gimmicks. The fact remains that the deficit has increased over the past 2 years in spite of Gramm-Rudman.

Believe it or not, the folks back home know what's going on. It's time for the "leadership" in Washington to get the message.

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Chairman, there is no more important natural resource than the children of our Nation. We are now focusing on the care of young children because our society has been hit by a double whammy of dealing with a changing work force and realizing that early childhood experiences shape individuals for the rest of their life.

The work force has changed. More women with children work. Family structure has changed. There are fewer nuclear families—fewer intergenerational families—more single parents struggling to balance the physical and emotional needs of their children. These changes have created increased needs for child care.

We are struggling with drug problems, the problems of juvenile gangs, the quality of education, the deterioration of traditional values. And we have learned that many problems that involve young people and adults could have been avoided with earlier intervention. These problems have created increased needs for child care.

When I served in Arizona's legislature, I remember very well tackling these very issues of child care in committee and on the floor. I think we did a good job of setting State requirements and enforcement procedures. But, we did it based on conditions in Arizona * * * not New York or California. It is ludicrous for the Federal Government to force, yes, force States to adopt its list of "recommended" standards.

The need is to create more child care. The claims that this bill will create more child care slots are just plain false. The heavy doses of regulations and reports are all aimed at restricting current child care providers. Requiring States to set training and ratio requirements and requiring them to file reports on every possible infraction will shrink the number of current day care providers. All H.R. 3 will do is drive up prices and diminish the supply of care.

But the most important issue that is ignored in the committee's proposal is parental responsibility and choice. With all of the funds going toward administration, training and subsidies to large day care centers, parents are just plain left out of the process. Unfortunately, the backers of this measure have missed the boat in the national revolution toward parental choice in education. Or maybe not; perhaps they are trying to nip it in the bud.

We do have options available to us that would help provide more and more affordable child care, provide more choice for parents, and resist the urge to strangle child care providers in Federal redtape. The Edwards amendment will allow the maximum choice for parents without restricting the child care market. Expanding the earned income tax credit puts more money into the pockets of all working poor, not the coffers of bureaucrats and administrators.

The Stenholm-Shaw amendment is the Edwards amendment plus more funds for the successful Head Start and Social Service Block Grant programs. This allows parents to exercise all of their options while encouraging State and local government to find ways to increase day care slots.

I urge my colleagues to seriously consider which options will best meet the real need that exists for more accessible and affordable health care. We can focus on the children and the parents or we can build another Federal bureaucracy. Let us not repeat the mistake of catastrophic health legislation by completely misreading the needs and desires of those we are trying to help. For surely if we pass this monstrosity we will be back a year from now attempting to fix it—or repeal it. We can save ourselves a lot of grief by adopting either the Edwards or the Stenholm-Shaw amendment today.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 140, noes 285, not voting 7, as follows:

Mr. HEFLEY changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 10 printed in section 2 of House Report 101-261.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STENHOLM

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STENHOLM:

Strike subtitle E of title III of the bill and insert the following:

Subtitle E—Child Care Services

CHAPTER 1—EXPANDED HEAD START

SEC. 3401. AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE CHILD CARE SERVICES.

Section 638(a) of the Head Start Act (42 U.S.C. 9833(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking "; and (2)" and inserting ", (2)"; and

(2) by inserting the following before the period at the end: ", and (3) may provide developmentally appropriate child care services".

SEC. 3402. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 639 of the Head Start Act (42 U.S.C. 9834) is amended—

(1) by striking "$1,198,000,000" and all that follows through "1988,"; and

(2) by striking "and $1,405,000,000 for fiscal year 1990" and inserting "$1,552,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, $1,852,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, $2,152,000,000 for fiscal year 1992, $2,452,000,000 for fiscal year 1993, and $2,752,000,000 for fiscal year 1994".

SEC. 3403. LIMITATION ON EXPENDITURES ALLOWED FOR CHILD CARE SERVICES UNDER THE HEAD START ACT.

Section 645 of the Head Start Act (42 U.S.C. 9840) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(d) Of the funds received under this Act by a Head Start agency for any fiscal year, such agency may not expend more than the following amounts to provide child care services authorized by section 638(a)(3):

"(1) $150,000,000 for fiscal year 1990,

"(2) $300,000,000 for fiscal year 1991,

"(3) $450,000,000 for fiscal year 1992,

"(4) $600,000,000 for fiscal year 1993, and

"(5) $750,000,000 for any fiscal year after fiscal year 1993."

SEC. 3404. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS.

It is the sense of the Congress that each Head Start program should provide, as authorized in section 645(c) of the Head Start Act (42 U.S.C. 9840(c)), more than 1 year of Head Start services to children from age 3 to the age of compulsory school attendance in the State in which the Head Start program is located, after such program provides Head Start services to all eligible children 4 years of age who request such services.

SEC. 3405. HEAD START RESEARCH STUDY.

(a) RESEARCH AND REPORTS.—After consulting with experts in research design and preschool programs, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall conduct a longitudinal research study on the effects of Head Start on children's development. Such study, which shall be conducted on a nationally representative sample, shall include information on school grades, grade retention, special education placement, high school graduation, delinquency, teenage pregnancy, welfare participation, college attendence, employment, and similar outcomes deemed appropriate by the Secretary. Such sample shall be followed for at least 20 years, during which time the Secretary shall make periodic reports to the Congress on the study's findings. Such study shall begin not later than September of 1991.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out subsection (a) $2,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 2011.

CHAPTER 2—SMALL BUSINESS INVOLVEMENT IN MEETING EMPLOYEE CHILD CARE NEEDS

SEC. 3421. ESTABLISHMENT OF GRANT PROGRAM.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall establish a program to make grants to eligible small businesses—

(1) to pay start-up costs incurred to provide child care services; or

(2) to provide additional child care services; needed by the employees of such businesses.

SEC. 3422. ELIGIBLE SMALL BUSINESSES.

To be eligible to receive a grant under section 3421, a small business shall submit to the Secretary an application in accordance with section 3423.

SEC. 3423. APPLICATION.

The application required by section 3422 shall be submitted by a small business (separately or jointly with 1 or more other small businesses) at such time, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary may require by rule, except that such application shall contain—

(1) an assurance that such small business shall expend, for the purpose for which such grant is made, an amount not less than 300 percent of the amount of such grant;

(2) an assurance that such small business will expend such grant for the use specified in section 3421, as the case may be;

(3) an assurance that if the employees of such small business do not require all the child care services for which such grant and the funds required by paragraph (1) are to be expended by such small business, the excess of such child care services shall be made available to families in the community in which such small business is located;

(4) an assurance that such small business shall employ strategies to provide such child care services at affordable rates, and on an equitable basis, to low- and moderate-income employees; and

(5) an assurance that the provider of such child care services will comply with all State and local licensing requirements applicable to such provider.

SEC. 3424. APPLICABILITY OF PROVISIONS OF THE HEAD START ACT.

Sections 654, 655, and 656 of the Head Start Act (42 U.S.C. 9849-9851) shall apply with respect to this chapter to the same extent and in the same manner as such sections apply with respect to such Act.

SEC. 3425. DEFINITIONS.

As used in the chapter:

(1) SMALL BUSINESS.—The term "small business" means a person that—

(A) is engaged in commerce and whose primary activity is not providing child care services; and

(B) has fewer than 50 full-time (or the equivalent) employees.

(2) SECRETARY.—The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

SEC. 3426. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993 to carry out this chapter.

CHAPTER 3—APPLICATION OF OTHER ACTS

SEC. 3521. APPLICATION OF OTHER ACTS.

Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, as amended from time to time, shall be deemed applicable to any program or activity assisted under any provision of this subtitle, or to any amendment made by this subtitle, to the same extent and in the same manner as any program or activity included within the meaning of such term under such title IX. References in this subtitle, or any amendment made by this subtitle, to section 654 of the Head Start Act shall be construed so as to be consistent with such title IX.

Strike subtitle I of title XI of the bill and insert the following:

Subtitle I—Child Care Provisions

PART I—EXPANDED TITLE XX CHILD CARE

SEC. 11901. CHILD CARE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Title XX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1397 et seq.) is amended—

(1) by inserting after the title heading the following:

"SEC. 2000. LIMITATION ON ENTITLEMENT.

"For payments to which States are entitled under this title, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary—

"(1) $2,900,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, of which $200,000,000 shall be for payments under section 2007;

"(2) $3,250,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, of which $350,000,000 shall be for payments under section 2007;

"(3) $3,500,000,000 for fiscal year 1992, of which $400,000,000 shall be for payments under section 2007; and

"(4) $3,700,000,000 for each fiscal year after fiscal year 1992; of which $400,000,000 shall be for payments under section 2007.";

and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"SEC. 2007. CHILD CARE.

"(a) PAYMENTS TO STATES FROM SPECIAL ALLOTMENTS.—

"(1) ENTITLEMENT.—Each State which is eligible for funds under this section for a fiscal year shall be entitled to payments in an aggregate amount equal to the special allotment of the State for the fiscal year.

"(2) PAYMENTS.—The Secretary shall provide funds to each State which is eligible for funds under this section for a fiscal year from the special allotment of the State for the fiscal year, in accordance with section 6503 of title 31, United States Code.

"(3) SPECIAL ALLOTMENTS.—The special allotment of each State for any fiscal year equals the amount that bears the same ratio to the amount appropriated under section 2000 for payments under this section for such fiscal year, as the number of children who have not attained the age of 13 years residing with families in the State bears to the total number of children who have not attained the age of 13 years residing with families in all States, determined on the basis of the most recent data available from the Department of Commerce at the time the special allotment is determined.

"(4) EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS BY STATES.—Except as provided in paragraph (5)(A), each State which receives funds under this section for any fiscal year shall expend such funds in such fiscal year or in the succeeding fiscal year.

"(5) RESDISTRIBUTION OF UNEXPENDED SPECIAL ALLOTMENTS.—

"(A) REMITTANCE TO THE SECRETARY.—Each State which receives funds under this section for a fiscal year shall remit to the Secretary that part of such funds which the State intends not to, or does not, expend in such fiscal year or in the succeeding fiscal year.

"(B) REDISTRIBUTION.—The Secretary shall increase the special allotment of each State not remitting any amount to the Secretary for a fiscal year pursuant to subparagraph (A) by an amount equal to—

"(i) the aggregate of the amounts so remitted; multiplied by

"(ii) the adjusted State share for such fiscal year.

"(C) ADJUSTED STATE SHARE.—As used in subparagraph (B)(ii), the term 'adjusted State share' means, with respect to a fiscal year—

"(i) the special allotment of the State for such fiscal year (before any increase under subparagraph (B)); divided by

"(ii)(I) the special allotments of all States for such fiscal year; minus

"(II) the aggregate of the amounts remitted to the Secretary for such fiscal year pursuant to subparagraph (A).

"(b) LEAD AGENCY.—

"(1) DESIGNATION.—The chief executive officer of a State desiring to participate in the program authorized under this section shall designate, in an application submitted to the Secretary under subsection (c), an appropriate State agency that carries out the responsibilities described in paragraph (2) to act as the lead agency.

"(2) RESPONSIBILITIES.—

"(A) ADMINISTRATION OF FUNDS.—The lead agency shall administer the funds made available to the State under this section to support programs and services authorized under this section.

"(B) COORDINATION.—The lead agency shall coordinate with State and local governments in developing the State plan required under subsection (c) to provide services under this section.

"(C) INTERAGENCY COORDINATION.—The lead agency shall establish procedures for assuring that appropriate State agencies work together to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(c) STATE PLAN REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive funds under this section for a fiscal year, a State shall prepare and submit an application to the Secretary that shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary and that complies with the requirements of paragraph (3).

"(2) APPROVAL.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the submission of the State application under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall either approve or disapprove such application. If the Secretary disapproves the application, the Secretary shall provide the State with an explanation and recommendations for changes in the application to gain approval.

"(3) STATE PLAN REQUIREMENTS.—The application submitted under paragraph (1) shall contain a plan which—

"(A) identifies the lead agency in accordance with subsection (b);

"(B) describes the activities that the State will carry out with funds provided under this section for the fiscal year;

"(C) provides assurances that the funds provided under this section will be used to supplement, not supplant, State and local funds as well as Federal funds provided under any Act and applied to child care activities in the State during fiscal year 1989;

"(D) provides assurances that the State will not expend more than 7 percent of the funds provided to the State under this section for the fiscal year for administrative expenses;

"(E) provides assurances that the State will give priority to programs that serve low-income families and geographical areas;

"(F) ensures that child care providers reimbursed under this section meet applicable standards of State and local law;

"(G) provides assurances that the lead agency will coordinate the funds provided under this section with other Federal resources for child care provided under this Act, and with other Federal, State, or local child care and preschool programs operated within the State; and

"(H) provides for the establishment of fiscal and accounting procedures that may be necessary to—

"(i) ensure a proper accounting of Federal funds received by the State under this section; and

"(ii) ensure the proper verification of the reports submitted by the State under subsection (e)(2).

"(d) USE OF FUNDS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Funds provided under this section shall be used to address deficiencies in the supply of child care, and to expand and to improve child care services, with an emphasis on providing such services to low-income families and geographical areas. Subject to the approval of the Secretary, States receiving funds under this section shall use such funds to carry out child care programs and activities through cash grants, certificates, vouchers, or contracts with families, or public or private entities as the State determines appropriate.

"(2) SPECIFIC USES.—Each State which receives funds under this section may expend such funds for—

"(A) child care services for infants, sick children, children with special needs, and children of adolescent parents;

"(B) after-school and before-school programs and programs during nontraditional hours for the children of working parents;

"(C) programs for the recruitment and training of day care workers, including older Americans;

"(D) grant and loan programs to enable child care workers and providers to meet State and local standards and requirements;

"(E) child care information and referral services;

"(F) child care programs developed by public and private sector partnerships;

"(G) liability insurance pools to serve child care providers;

"(H) programs to promote and ensure the health and safety of children and caregivers, to improve the quality of all types of child care, and to train child care providers in health and safety practices;

"(I) State efforts to provide technical assistance designed to help providers improve the services offered to parents and children; and

"(J) other child care-related programs consistent with the purpose of this section and approved by the Secretary;

"(3) USE OF FUNDS WITH PROVIDERS WITH SECTARIAN ACTIVITIES AS PART OF CHILD CARE PROGRAM.—It is the sense of the Congress that, as is the case under current law, and unless prohibited by State law or regulation, any parent who receives funds under this section in the form of vouchers may use such vouchers with any eligible child care provider that has sectarian activities as part of a program of child care if such provider is chosen by the parent, and that if parents have freely chosen sectarian child care from among the available alternatives, such parents may use vouchers for such purpose without violating the constitutional prohibition on establishment of religion.

"(4) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—Entities eligible to receive funds under this section, and meet the requirement of subsection (c)(3)(F), shall include—

"(A) units of State and local governments, and elementary, secondary and post-secondary educational institutions;

"(B) nonprofit organizations under subsections (c) and (d) of section 501 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986;

"(C) professional or employee associations;

"(D) consortia of small businesses; and

"(E) proprietary for-profit entities, child care providers, and any other entities that the State determines appropriate subject to approval of the Secretary.

"(5) PROHIBITED USES.—Any State which receives funds under this section may not use any of such funds—

"(A) to satisfy any State matching requirement imposed under any Federal grant;

"(B) for the purchase or improvement of land, or the purchase, construction, or permanent improvement (other than minor remodeling) of any building or other facility; or

"(C) to provide any service which the State makes generally available to the residents of the State without cost to such residents and without regard to the income of such residents.

"(e) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) NOTICE TO SECRETARY OF UNEXPENDED FUNDS.—Each State which has not completely expended the funds received by the State under this section for a fiscal year in such fiscal year or the succeeding fiscal year shall notify the Secretary of any amount not so expended.

"(2) STATE REPORTS ON USE OF FUNDS.—Not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of this section, and each year thereafter, the State shall prepare and submit to the Secretary, in such form as the Secretary shall prescribe, a report describing the State's use of funds received under this section, including—

"(A) the number, type, and distribution of services and programs under this section;

"(B) the average cost of child care, by type of provider;

"(C) the number of children served under this section;

"(D) the average income and distribution of incomes of the families being served;

"(E) efforts undertaken by the State pursuant to this section to promote and ensure health and safety and improve quality; and

"(F) such other information as the Secretary considers appropriate.

"(3) GUIDELINES FOR STATE REPORTS; COORDINATION WITH REPORTS UNDER SECTION 2006.—Within 6 months after the date of the enactment of this section, the Secretary shall establish guidelines for State reports under paragraph (2). To the extent feasible, the Secretary shall coordinate such reporting requirement with the reports required under section 2006 and, as the Secretary deems appropriate, with other reporting requirements placed on States as a condition of receipt of other Federal funds which support child care.

"(4) REPORTS BY THE SECRETARY.—

"(A) REPORTS TO THE CONGRESS OF SUMMARY OF STATE REPORTS.—The Secretary shall annually summarize the information reported to the Secretary pursuant to paragraph (2) and provide such summary to the Congress.

"(B) REPORTS TO THE STATES ON EFFECTIVE PRACTICES.—The Secretary shall annually provide the States with a report on particularly effective practices and programs supported by funds received under this section, which ensure the health and safety of children in care, promote quality Child Care, and provide training to all types of providers.".

"(b) ALTERNATIVE ENTITLEMENT LEVELS IF RECONCILIATION BILL INSUFFICIENTLY FUNDS TITLE XX OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.—

(1) AMENDMENT.—Section 2000 of the Social Security Act, as amended by subsection (a)(1), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2000. LIMITATION ON ENTITLEMENT.

"For payments to which States are entitled under this title, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Secrtary—

"(1) $3,050,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, of which $350,000,000 shall be for payments under section 2007; and

"(2) $3,100,000,000 for each fiscal year after fiscal year 1991, of which $400,000,000 shall be for payments under section 2007.".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by paragrpah (1) shall take effect on the effective date of the reconciliation legislation reported under section 310(b) of the Congressional Budget Act for the fiscal year 1990, if such legislation does not have the effect of amending subsection (c) of section 2003 of the Social Security Act so that the amounts specified in such subsection (c) for purposes of subsections (a) and (b) of such section 2003 are—

(A) $2,900,000,000, for fiscal year 1990;

(B) $3,250,000,000, for fiscal year 1991;

(C) $3,500,000,000, for fiscal year 1992; and

(D) $3,700,000,000, for each fiscal year after fiscal year 1992.

PART II—TAX CHANGES RELATING TO CHILD CARE

SEC. 11911. EXPANSION OF EARNED INCOME TAX CREDIT.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsections (a) and (b) (relating to earned income tax credit) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an eligible individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this subtitle for the taxable yer an amount equal to the credit percentage of so much of the earned income for the taxable year as does not exceed $5,714.

"(2) LIMITATION.—The amount of the credit allowable to a taxpayer under this subsection for any taxable year shall not exceed (if any) of—

"(A) the credit percentage of $5,714, over

"(B) the phaseout percentage of so much of the adjusted gross income (or, if greater, the earned income) of the taxpayer for the taxable year as exceeds $9,000.

"(b) PERCENTAGES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

"In the case of an eligible individual with:	The credit percentage is:	The phaseout percentage is:
1 qualifying child	17	12
2 qualifying children	21	15

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] will be recognized for 1 hour, and a Member opposed will be recognized also for 1 hour.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time of 1 hour be equally divided between myself and the cosponsor of this amendment, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time allocated in opposition to the amendment be divided so that 30 minutes will be under the control of the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor and 30 minutes will be under the control of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Resources of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

□ 1240

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that a technical change to address the question of AFDC and EITC be allowed to be made by the proponents of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to submit the modification in writing, the Chair would notify the gentleman from Texas. Does the gentleman have the modification?

Mr. STENHOLM. I do not have it at this time, Mr. Chairman. I thought I heard an objection, but we will have it at a later time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may proceed.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a lot of debate, but the thing that bothers me the most about what has occurred on my amendment today and that of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] is the amount of misinformation that has been circulated by so many well-meaning people about what our amendment does and does not do.

Now, first I want to compliment the Ways and Means Committee. My objection to the proposal on child care is not with the Ways and Means Committee, because I believe that 90 to 95 percent we are in agreement with what the Ways and Means Committee has proposed to do.

My reason for being here today is my objection to H.R. 3 and what it does, which is clearly spelled out in the legislation.

Now, this gentleman from Texas, CHARLIE STENHOLM, is concerned about child care, and those who support my amendment today, the Stenholm-Shaw amendment do advocate child care. We believe that there are other things that should be done besides the EITC. We believe, though, that H.R. 3 has some terrible weaknesses.

My first question to the House is why are we here doing this today? Why in reconciliation are we attempting to do new legislation at a time when we are finding it difficult to fund that which we have already approved? Why are we here?

To those who suggest that the gentleman from Texas [CHARLIE STENHOLM], has advocated the elimination of Head Start or that we put no new money into Head Start, why did you not read our amendment before you made that accusation? Why did you not read where we authorize, according to the CBO, a doubling of Head Start money in the next 4 years? Why would you put out information across these United States that we cut Head Start? Why would you make the argument back home in our States that we are going to get less money if the Stenholm amendment passes, when you know that the only way we are going to get additional money to our States in fiscal year 1990 is through the title 20 funds of the Ways and Means section?

Do you now know, my colleagues, that right now in the conference on appropriations that in Head Start we are going to be appropriating less money than we advocate in our bill today, in our amendment? Do you not know that?

Why would you say that the Education and Labor Committee is going to be authorizing more money, when you know in your hearts that we are not going to appropriate it? Why would we be doing that?

Why would we be leading the expectations of the people out there who truly care about child care that we are going to do all these wonderful things, when we know that we are not going to be doing them?

You know, yesterday we repealed catastrophic care. That cost us for reconciliation, which this bill is all about, $4.2 billion with the Panetta amendment. We have been told in the budget that we set aside $1.2 billion for child care.

Mr. Chairman, something is wrong with our arithmetic if we set aside $1.2 billion and we spend $4.2 yesterday. There is something wrong with our arithmetic, and yet the whole debate back in our States is that if the Stenholm-Shaw amendment passes, then you are going to lose x million dollars that we did not have in the first place. That is the big objection we have with H.R. 3. It promises the moon, but just as we found out yesterday, when we have to pay for it we have got problems.

Why could we not do this in the regular legislative process? Why did we have this shoved down our throats in a bill like this in which the only way we have is an opportunity to have an amendment that does provide for child care?

If we win and we go to conference, we will have the best opportunity of getting the kind of a child care bill that will do something for children.

I do not disagree with the good things that are in the Education and Labor part, the ABC bill. I agree with all those wonderful intentions. The problem is, how do we deliver? Why should we start our expanding the Head Start Program in the other areas before we do the job that we are already supposed to be doing in Head Start? If we are only serving 20 percent of those poor children available today, why would we start off in seven different directions with new programs, when we cannot even adequately fund the current program?

Now, if you support the Stenholm-Shaw amendment today, what you are doing is saying unequivocally that you believe the family is the best determiner of the adequacy of child care. You believe that the family, the mother and father are the best determiners, not the Federal Government. You are going to be asking and voting for new money for child care, but you are going to be saying absolutely no new Federal mandates for that program.

Listen to the voices coming from your respective districts. What they are telling us is that they want no new Federal mandates. They want the Federal Government to stay out of their business.

Why at this point in time would we do what H.R. 3 proposes to do and then not have the honesty to say that there is no new money available in fiscal year 1990?

We ought to do this debate next year when we can truly do someting for the outyears.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Stenholm substitute.

Today, over half of all mothers with young children work. This rate has doubled since 1967. Our economy depends more than ever on the participation of both men and women. By the year 2000, women will make up half of the country's work force.

Child care is critical to our economy. Here is why:

Fifty percent of all new mothers will return to work before their child's 1st birthday—an increase of over 60 percent since 1976.

One-fourth of all nonworking mothers of children under age 5 would return to work if satisfactory child care were available at a reasonable cost.

U.S. businesses lose $3 billion each year when parents are absent from work due to child care problems.

In the future, two-thirds of all new jobs will go to women.

The United States cannot remain competitive without adequate child care.

The issue of child care is particularly important to the South:

Southern States have 50 percent of all mothers with young children in the work force. This is a greater percentage than the rest of the Nation.

Three out of four Southern voters—the highest proportion in the Nation—believe that there is a shortage of affordable, quality child care and that the Federal Government should help.

Voters in the South are more likely than voters in the rest of the country to name child care as an important issue for working families.

□ 1250

The child care legislation in the bill before us meets the challenges of the changing workforce. The earned income tax credit and title 20 provisions put more resources into the hands of those who most need child care assistance without discriminating against the mothers or fathers who choose not to work. The model standards in the bill encourage States to improve the quality of child care.

The Stenholm substitute falls short of this challenge. There are four good reasons to oppose the Stenholm substitute:

First, it has no model standards for the health and safety of children in day care. The reconciliation bill says to the States that they must establish some health, safety, and staffing standards—achievable standards, which the State of Texas, in fact, has already met. It does not dictate what those standards have to be. Instead, it establishes national goals for the States to follow if they choose.

We are simply giving Federal guidelines to the States for spending money on child care as we do with prisons, roads, and airports. We owe this much to our country's children and to the American taxpayers as we decide to spend over $7 billion dollars each year on child care.

Second, the Stenholm substitute provides no new funds for Head Start and school based child care programs. Head Start is one of the most successful and popular Federal programs. We must realize that child care also effects the future productivity of our children. According to the Commission on the Future of the South, investments in preschool programs that are made early enough in children have a three to one payback when they become working adults.

Third, the Stenholm substitute does not provide for any coordination of local child care services. Currently, few States coordinate child care and child development programs. We should not continue down the path of throwing money at problems without assessing problems locally and without fully utilizing existing programs.

For example, Head Start often operates on a half-day schedule while title 20 child care is generally full-day. What happens to the children of the working mother in Head Start for only half of a day? We cannot ignore our responsibility to help answer this kind of question at the local level.

Finally, the Stenholm substitute would cause working mothers to lose Medicaid if they use the earned income tax credit. Last year, the House overwhelming adopted welfare reform. We offered Medicaid to welfare recipients if they choose to go to work. We should not take that away today.

This is an important day in Congress. By passage of this legislation, we will recognize the changing workforce and the important part that working women play.

We have the opportunity to speak to those young mothers in rural Mississippi and in South Texas and say to them that we are going to help you with day care so you can work. We know that if we can reach that young mother, we have a chance of saving her children from the vicious cycle of poverty.

The cost of not acting today, especially to the South, is too high. If we fail to help these young mothers, we will continue to live in the past.

As Abraham Lincoln said to Congress in 1862:

> The dogmas of the quiet past, are inadequate to the stormy present. The occasion is piled high with difficulty, and we must rise with the occasion. As our case is new, so we must think anew and act anew. We must disenthrall ourselves, and then we shall save our country.

I urge your support for the reconciliation bill and your opposition to the Stenholm substitute.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, at the outset, I compliment the efforts of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM]. Once again, he has proven to be a leader in budget issues and legislation designed to help America's children and families.

Nor can I fail to mention the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY]. Tom deserves a great deal of credit for whatever action the House takes on child care this year.

Tom will remember our first conversation about committee action on child care. To our mutual surprise, coming from different poles of political society we had independently arrived at nearly identical child care proposals—to give parents more money to spend on their children by expanding the EITC and to give States more money to spend on child care by expanding the Title 20 Program. Unfortunately, we were poles apart on Mr. DOWNEY's position that we needed to include a new layer of Federal regulations and other mandates in our child care bill. With some assistance from the Rules Committee, the leadership then decided to offer his bill as part of H.R. 3, most of which I most strongly oppose. I must say that I oppose it even though I dearly love children, but I have a great deal of faith in our State governments, and most of all, the parents of these children.

In any case, Mr. DOWNEY and other Members of the Ways and Means Committee will recognize that in fashioning this bipartisan bill with Mr. STENHOLM, I have held to the basic outlines of my initial position with Mr. DOWNEY.

A host of distinguished speakers from both parties will follow me in support of the Stenholm-Shaw amendment. My task here at the outset of debate is simply to call the attention of our Members to the three major reasons to support the Stenholm-Shaw amendment.

First, how can this body possibly justify establishing or expanding seven new grant programs? Amazingly, the Hawkins-Downey proposal would do precisely that. Rather than creating all this new bureaucracy, it is far better to select one or two programs to expand. We have selected the title 20 program because it already exists, because it has proven itself to be a popular and useful program with the States, and because it provides the flexibility necessary to allow States to use child care money in the ways they think will do the most good.

Second, the standards and mandates both H.R. 3 and Downey place on States are truly awful. Every State already regulates day care centers; all but four States already regulate the smaller day care homes. It follows that citizens, and especially State legislators, will see our interference in child care regulation for what it is—heavy-handed Federal meddling in matters that belong to States, localities, and, most of all, American families.

And don't let anybody tell you that we're not interfering if we don't pass the Stenholm-Shaw amendment. I have here a summary of the most noxious mandates the Downey-Hawkins bill would put on the States. I am including a copy of that summary in the RECORD. Consider just one example of burdensome Federal requirements.

All providers who accept money from the programs established by Downey-Hawkins must have 15 hours of training per year. Do our Members realize that around 40 percent of the out-of-home care in the Nation is provided by women taking care of two or three children in their own home? Now I ask you, how are these women supposed to get 15 hours of training? Are they going to go at night? On the weekend? If not, who will take care of the chidren while they are being trained during the day? This seemingly simple requirement could raise havoc with the very people who provide most of the Nation's out-of-home child care.

Let us be wise and leave decisions about standards and mandates to the States, counties, and cities of the Nation, and to the parents of our children.

The third reason to vote for Stenholm-Shaw is to save money and spend precious dollars more wisely. In order to set up and feed their own grant authorities, the Downey-Hawkins bill requires lots of money for bureaucrats. If you love bureaucrats, you will love Downey-Hawkins. By contrast, Stenholm-Shaw will put $15 billion dollars directly into the hands of American families to spend on their children, $3.2 billion dollars into the Head Start program, more than doubling its size by 1994, and $1.6 billion into the hands of State administrators already responsible for child care.

And get this: Stenholm-Shaw will do all this and still save the Federal Treasury $5.5 billion over 5 years as compared to the Downey-Hawkins bill.

The choice seems clear. If we want to waste over $5 billion, and I might say they may be stealth dollars, because I do not know where they are coming from, if we want to further bloat the Federal and State bureaucracies and drown the States in new regulations, if we do not want to do this, vote for the Stenholm substitute. If we want to put those precious dollars back in the hands of parents, Head Start directors, and State day care officials without simultaneously tying their hands, then I urge my colleagues to vote for the Stenholm-Shaw substitute.

H.R. 3 AND THE QUESTION OF REGULATIONS

Note: This is a partial list of requirements included in H.R. 3, both as the Education and Labor Committee (Hawkins) passed it and as amended by the Ways and Means Committee (Downey). It is important to note that regardless of which form is approved, all of these regulations would be included in either Hawkins alone of in the Hawkins/Downey hybrid, because the Downey amendment simply replaces Title III with a social services block grant, but mirrors the ABC regulations of Hawkins' version of that Title.

Many of these provisions, taken individually, are good ideas and should be implemented by many states. The question, however, is whether each and every one should be mandated and dictated by the federal government for each and every state, every community, every provider, and every family. We believe they should not.

States do need money to assist in assuring that adequate quality child care is available. General standards and guidelines are useful. Low-income parents do need tax relief to meet child care costs and to maximize their individual child care options. We believe, however, that parents, neighbors, communities and states are capable of making reasonably good decisions about what is best for themselves and their children if they are given the resources and the assistance necessary. To reach that end, we believe the CDF compromise is the answer.

What H.R. 3 supporters say: The bill simply establishes federal model standards. Discretion is still left to the states to implement the programs in the ways they see fit.

What H.R. 3 says (a partial list of requirements):

States must have standards in place for: group size, staff/child ratios, qualifications of personnel, special needs children, child abuse prevention, health, safety and nutrition (with specificity to the point of regulating hand-washing), staff in-service training, parental involvement, and reimbursement rates. Hawkins: Title II, p. 16 [1] and Downey: Title III, p. 6-8.[2]

States must train every child care staffer at least 15 hours annually. Hawkins: Title III, p. 15 and Downey: Title III, p. 8.

States must have at least annual unannounced inspections of each day care center and of 25% of the group and family day care homes. Hawkins: Title IV, p. 21 and Downey: Title III, p. 10.

States must train inspection personnel in child development, health and safety, child abuse prevention and detection, needs of disabled children, program management and law enforcement. Hawkins: Title IV, p. 20 and Downey: Title III, p. 10.

States must maintain a record of parental complaints. Hawkins: Title IV p. 20 and Downey: Title III, p. 12.

States must establish a committee on licensing which: reviews licensing laws; issues a report on the effectiveness of the federal law and model standards, describes deficiencies in current licensing, etc. Hawkins: Title IV, p. 23.

States must establish eligibility criteria based on the bills' prescription that family income must not exceed 160% of the lower living standard income level, services must be free to families below the poverty line, and a sliding scale must be used for families between poverty and 160% of the lower living standard. Hawkins: Title II, p. 9, 10 (Downey is less prescriptive on the sliding scale but requires some form of sliding scale; p. 8, 9).

With Title IV funds, states must: provide funds for local resource and referral programs at least one year in each four; improve the quality of care by providing training every year; improve the monitoring and enforcement of regulations every year; collate in a single document the needs assessments at 4-year intervals; and improve staff salaries in at least one year of every four. Hawkins: Title II, p. 20.

With any money in Title IV funds after above mandates, states must do one or more of these "optional" activities: make grants or low interest loans to providers so that they are able to comply with all the regulations; make low interest loans for facility renovations of non-profit providers; make grants to providers who have a 3-to-1 matching arrangement with businesses; and promote involvement by local public libraries in providing childhood learning resources. Hawkins: Title IV, p. 20.

States must collect and provide to the federal government data showing: by race, sex, ethnicity, disability and English language proficiency how child care needs are being met in their state; number of children, type and number of child care providers; cost of child care services and salaries of child care staff; and extent to which child care services have been increased. Hawkins: Title IV, p. 21.

States must develop reports which contain: number of children served, grouped according to income as a percentage of poverty; average cost for child care services by geographical area; out of pocket costs for families grouped according to income as a percentage of poverty; percentage of child care benefit recipients who receive public assistance; and criteria applied in determining eligibility for child care benefits. Downey: Title III, p. 17-19.

States, in carrying out the mandate to award grants for staff training, must allocate their funds: 29% for developmentally appropriate child care services under Head Start; 29% for school-based programs; 42% for ABC programs; and then, States must submit a report showing: how funds were spent; why funds were spent in such a way; and what other state money was used for related activities. Hawkins: Title IV, p. 25.

States must designate multiple "resource and referral agencies" within each state which: maintain databases on child care services; provide resource and referral services in a timely fashion to care givers and parents; and respond to requests for information. Hawkins: Title IV, p. 24.

In addition, among other requirements, H.R. 3 says:

Providers must: have written policies and program goals and provide them to parents; have consumer education information available; and post on the premises the phone number of the State regulatory agency. Hawkins: Title IV, p. 21 and Downey: p. 11-12.

Providers of early childhood development programs must provide services including referrals to health and social services, meals and snacks, social services, and information in a language the parents understand, to the extent practicable. Hawkins: Title II, p. 8.

Providers of early childhood development programs must not use norm-referenced and criterion-referenced standardized tests. Hawkins: Title II, p. 8.

Providers (each staffer) must receive 15 hours a year of state training. Hawkins: Title II, p. 15 and Downey: Title III, p. 8.

Additionally, local cities and counties must establish a local Child Development Council (with composition federally prescribed) to conduct child care needs assessments. Hawkins: Title IV, p. 22.

The federal government must establish an advisory committee to draw up federal model standards. Hawkins: Title III, p. 15 and Downey: Title III, p. 29.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Stenholm substitute.

For 3 years, the Committee on Education and Labor has worked to develop a comprehensive child care proposal that best meets the needs of parents and children alike. I believe that our proposal and the Ways and Means proposal are responsible approaches which provide quality child care and help to ensure the health and safety of our children while they are cared for outside the home.

These provisions, which are incorporated in H.R. 3299, build on effective, existing programs like Head Start, early childhood education and initiatives by the States that address the critical issues of affordability, availability, and quality of child care.

The Stenholm substitute does not target funds to increase the supply of quality child care.

The Stenholm substitute does not contain an education or early childhood development component.

The Stenholm substitute undermines quality child care.

The Stenholm substitute permits children to be cared for by unfit caregivers in unhealthy and unsafe programs.

The Stenholm substitute does not provide for parental involvement in, and access to, child care programs.

Recently, Mr. STENHOLM wrote, "Few issues strike a deeper personal chord in most Americans than that of how their children are treated."

Today, each of us must ask ourselves which of these proposals provides the best care for our children.

[1] Page numbers on Hawkins refer to Education and Labor Committee Report 101-190.

I believe that H.R. 3299 responds best to parents' concerns about how their children are cared for. We have put forth a comprehensive proposal which increases access to, and expands the supply of, child care and includes successful early childhood development and education components.

If you share our view of quality child care and really want to do what's best for America's children, you will vote against the Stenholm substitute.

□ 1300

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strenuous opposition to the Stenholm substitute.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. For the first time, we would be permitting the use of federally subsidized vouchers in sectarian institutions to pay for religious instruction and worship and would not clearly prohibit all discrimination in hiring and admissions. This would advance religion in violation of Supreme Court standards.

Vouchers in this context are indirect assistance to religious institutions. Contrary to what some of our colleagues would like us to believe, the fact that the assistance is indirect does not remove the constitutional problem. By explicitly allowing parents to use vouchers for sectarian purposes, the Stenholm amendment, if enacted, would not only be a step backward for church-state separation, it would be a massive step backward for child care as well. The program will be tied up in years of litigation, ultimately resulting in no child care at all.

Neither H.R. 3, which I support, nor the title XX program raises these problems. I urge my colleagues to vote no on the Stenholm amendment, and by doing so, vote yes for the first amendment and for child care.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] wish to yield time?

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, we are alternating, I assume?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is trying to give equal time to those who have time at this point. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] has 23½ minutes remaining; the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] has 24 minutes remaining; the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] has 26 minutes remaining; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] has 26 minutes remaining.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] will have the right to close debate. He is the proponent of the amendment. To try to keep some balance, the Chair requests that the gentleman from California yield time.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY], a member of the Ways and Means Committee and a leader in this process.

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to oppose the Stenholm child care substitute. We who are supporters of child care programs have been working for over 5 years to craft legislation that would provide child care for people who cannot now afford it. We need child care because too many families are struggling to get by and are forced to send both parents into the work force.

We need child care because we have 11 million single mothers in this country and we have told them, "You should not take AFDC. Get a job."

We need child care because we cannot tolerate young children being left at home alone for hours each day while their parents go to these jobs.

But we do not need just any kind of child care.

We must be sure that if we're going to give increased numbers of Federal dollars to day care these dollars should have some protections. The standards language which we included in the reconciliation package is the same compromise as that which was included in the Senate bill, S. 5. It provides the States with maximum flexibility, requiring only that they establish standards of some sort, and not dictating any minimum at all for those standards.

Currently it is a fact that much child care is completely unregulated. Those regulations which do exist are not adequately enforced by many of the States. The Stenholm proposal would leave the status quo, in spite of the fact that the status quo clearly needs to be changed.

But even if the physical well-being of our children is assured, it is not enough. We know how very important those early years are in the development of a child's learning skills. The money we spend through H.R. 3 will insure education for our children through Head Start and school-based care, and by insuring a minimal amount of training for day care providers.

Without this kind of care, the inequalities will widen and the gap between privileged and under-privileged children will be impossible to close by the time they reach the first grade. By the time they reach high school the better-off kids will be making plans for college while the poorer kids will be dropping out of school and hanging out on street corners, and we will have the same mess that we have right now.

We know how to change that. It is through early childhood development. How then can we allow Federal dollars to pay for the type of care which perpetuates it?

This is not a States' rights issue. This is an issue of how we steward Federal funds.

My friends, we must have child care, and we must have child care where our children are safe and healthy and able to develop to their full potential. I urge you to vote against the Stenholm child care plan, and to support an approach that includes at least minimal State standards, and which encourages education rather than just warehousing of this Nation's children.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Tennessee [Mrs. LLOYD].

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to rise in strong support of the Stenholm child care substitute and I commend my colleagues who worked diligently to craft this compromise proposal and bring it before the full House. I believe it is the most thoughtful, straightforward and effective approach before us today and should be adopted with all possible speed.

We all recognize the need for quality day care in this country. In fact, I have formed a day care task force in my own congressional district to help me assess the needs of families, children and providers in the Third Congressional District of Tennessee. What we have found is that tremendous resources are required to meet the growing demand for child care but that our States, communities, and families need maximum flexibility to ensure that their varied and essential needs are addressed. The Stenholm substitute does just that. It provides additional funding to States to assist in assuring that adequate quality child care is available while allowing the States to allocate the Federal funding provided to the programs which they deem essential to their local efforts.

By giving the States the opportunity to ensure that their priority programs are funded, we are involving all concerned segments of our society in the planning, administering and providing of essential child care services.

My colleagues we are creating a new Federal program. Time and time again in creating new programs our constituents beseech us to spare them the burden of additional red tape. Instead of creating yet another layer of Government bureaucracy, the Stenholm proposal will enhance and build on existing programs and make them more responsive to each communities needs.

The Stenholm substitute also recognizes that church and synagogue child care programs have contributed in significant ways to meeting pressing child care needs in this country.

This is sound legislation which deserves to be adopted. I urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting the Stenholm childcare initiative. Let's provide for a program we will be proud of today, 5 years and 10 years from now.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE].

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Stenholm amendment. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] has indicated that there has been some misrepresentation about the Head Start part of his program. I agree there has been some. He and I have talked about this on the phone.

□ 1310

And I sympathize with him because there has been a great deal of misrepresentation about the Hawkins-Downey proposal too.

We will try to clarify those things. However, the Stenholm substitute does authorize, at least, less for Head Start than does Hawkins-Downey. Hawkins-Downey reserves 25 percent of the $1.75 billion or $437.5 million to provide child care through Head Start agencies.

Those $437.5 million are in addition to the $1.552 billion as passed in H.R. 1300, which the gentleman supported on the floor.

Those dollars are in addition to that. So we have really under the Downey-Hawkins proposal almost $2 billion for Head Start.

Now Mr. NATCHER has been very creative in that Appropriations Committee in taking care of Head Start. He has reserved, first of all, $1.2 billion for child care, and that has been retained in the conference report.

He can use part of that $1.2 billion for this new aspect of Head Start, the child care aspect, at $437.5 million.

In addition to that he still has room to raise the appropriations for the regular Head Start Program.

So I think that our bill is far more generous in authorization and more likely to secure appropriations for Head Start than that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Now let me address one other issue here, Mr. Chairman, the question of church-state.

No one is more concerned as to the important role of churches in child care than DALE KILDEE. I have fought this battle for 3 years now, I have made friends, I have made enemies. At one time I was able to get both sides mad at me. And it is not—well, I think maybe it is easy to do that around here.

My record is long, however, and it is consistent and clear on this. I have always felt there should be a significant role for the churches who deliver a great deal of the child care in this country.

I went before the Committee on Rules asking for an amendment on this—I was turned down. But that is the reality.

But that approach which I have been trying to put forward for 3 years is substantially contained in the Downey part of this bill because the Downey part allows vouchers. States now use vouchers for child care.

Case law indicates in many cases, and with good precedent, that such vouchers can be used without restrictions on sectarian activities.

You know the Mueller versus Allen case. It is very clear on that. I also feel that when this bill gets into conference, we will have the Downey provision which the gentleman will admit is very close to his own provision here on the church-state.

We will have that. I will be urging that conference committee to move closer to the Senate position on this. And I think we will be successful in doing that.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSTON], a leader in the Head Start Program.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Stenholm-Shaw amendment.

Stenholm-Shaw is sound family policy. By supporting it, you help put in place, through a greatly expanded earned income tax credit, a new family policy that will directly attack the problem of children growing up in poverty. Putting money directly in parents' pockets, as the EITC does, also gives them the freedom to choose the kind of care best for their child, be it home-based care, center care, or even care by the child's own parents. America needs a policy that directly helps low-income families and these families deserve a choice about who cares for their children.

Stenholm-Shaw is also sound workforce policy. Repeatedly, studies point to serious problems with the quality of our workforce as we move into a period of labor shortages. It is imperative that we target our day care service dollars to those children who most need our help to enter school, ready to learn. By providing additional dollars for Head Start, now serving only one in four eligible children, and earmarking child care dollars to title XX, also plagued by long waiting lists, Stenholm-Shaw focuses on the very group of children most in need of attention—low-income, disadvantaged kids. In contrast, the Hawkins and Downey proposals mandate Head Start Program expansions and open eligibility to non-poor children, effectively diluting our efforts to realize the promise of Head Start for the poor.

The National Governors' Association has endorsed the Stenholm-Shaw amendment because it expands resources without dictating solutions. It specifically authorizes, but does not require, all the uses of day care funds that Representatives DOWNEY and HAWKINS mandate—before and after school care, training, et cetera. It does not mandate, as Downey and Hawkins do, specific percentages of funds for specific program uses or detailed requirements that drain service dollars into administration and do not, in fact, affect quality. In addition, Stenholm-Shaw allows States to set up liability risk pools and provides incentives for older Americans to provide child care, options the Downey and Hawkins proposals to not offer.

The Stenholm-Shaw alternative provides the same money next year for day care that is provided in reconciliation and, over 5 years, allots $17.5 billion for national child care policy—roughly $5 billion less than the Stenholm-Shaw package. With the need for money to fight drugs and other worthy objectives, we believe that Stenholm-Shaw is realistic. Because it is closer to what will actually be appropriated, it does not promise children and families what it cannot deliver.

Stenholm-Shaw is good policy. The House should not relinquish its lawmaking responsibility and allow the conferees to decide among a menu of new programs proposed by Hawkins-Downey. Rather the House should send into conference an integrated and responsible child care program. Vote "yes" on Stenholm-Shaw.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HOLLOWAY].

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I was not totally in favor of the Edwards bill; I am not totally in favor of the bill before us. But it is by far 100,000 times better than the other alternative that we have. To the 140 Members who voted for the Edwards bill, I ask each of you to please support the Stenholm bill.

There are two reasons why I ask you to support the Stenholm bill. No. 1 is the religious aspect. No matter what we say, we are looking at two bills, we are not looking at one bill on the other side of the aisle. We do not know what we are going to face in conference, whether it is Mr. DOWNEY's bill or Mr. HAWKINS', whether Mr. DOWNEY's is going to be chosen or Mr. HAWKINS'. With that in mind we have to support Mr. STENHOLM.

Anyone who says there is no regulation in H.R. 3 with respect to churches is foolish.

The regulations are there, they are going to be tough. Church day care centers are going to be put out of business because they are not going to conform to the rules of the Hawkins-Downey bill.

No. 2, the bureaucracy that H.R. 3 puts in place. What will happen to the cost of child care in this country in the years to come? We are spending $27 billion under Downey, we say we will need $100 billion.

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER].

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, it seems that every time I take the well of this House for speaking on something, it has to do with the religious issue that should not be a religious issue.

When the Grove City bill was on the floor, the people in my district and the State of North Carolina were being flooded and they were being told that if you vote for the Grove City bill that you are going to be forcing your churches to hire practicing homosexual drug addicts as youth pastors. They were told that Social Security recipients, if they give to their church, it would bring the churches under the jurisdiction of all the civil rights laws. They were being told that if veterans cashed their checks at a mom-and-pop grocery store, that this mom-and-pop grocery store would be brought under the jurisdiction of all the civil rights laws.

Now, it troubles me. We should be here talking about children. If you would permit me to be a bit personal, I have two grandchildren and I have a week-old grandchild that is over at the Children's Hospital fighting for his life today. We should not be talking about the religious aspect of it. We should be talking about what is going to be best for the children.

In all due respect to my dear friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM], I am not so sure if Members give tax credits that have absolutely no strings attached, they will use this money for child care. The same argument could be made for food stamps and for these other things for child support, including AFDC, that participants may not use the money for children.

I think we should do something that would be pinpointed for children. If Members would permit me to quote a bit of scripture, "Any that you have done it to, the least of these my brethren, you have done it unto me." It is time we worked to try to get a program for children to see they get a start.

The State of North Carolina's Head Start has been a great program. It is run in the churches. I would not support one thing that would prohibit Members having Head Start and child care centers in our churches, God forbid, and I am going to take the word of the leadership that we are going to go to the language of the Senate. If it is unconstitutional, let the courts strike it down. I would not vote for anything that would put extra regulations on people.

I checked with the regulations in North Carolina. There is only one regulation we would have to meet. We already meet all the rest of them under this bill. The only one we would have to pass would be to do a background check on people that work in day care centers. That is the only change we would have to make in the State of North Carolina.

I am for children, and in all due respect to the others. I am not sure it gets the money there. I am not sure I like all the parts of this bill, but I am going to take the word, if the leadership will give it to me, the assurance, that these conferees will go on the religious aspect to the Senate position. I will vote for it. If I do not get that assurance, I will not, because I feel that strongly about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will rise informally in order that the House may receive a message.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER) assumed the chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will receive a message.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2978. To amend section 700 of title 18, United States Code, to protect the physical integrity of the flag.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee will resume it sitting.

OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1989

The Committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HUBBARD].

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Chairman, it's being said all of us are for children. Yes we are. It's being said that all of us support child care centers. We do indeed.

The question before us today is not whether we are for children, but rather, are we for all the children regardless of where they receive their child care?

As one who has served 15 years in the House, as one who is a Democrat, and as one who is a member of the Democratic leadership serving as an elected zone whip for the States of Kentucky, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia, naturally, I want to believe our House leadership. They urge us today to believe if we just pass the Downey-Hawkins approach to child care that when we get to conference we will correct this situation about child care provided by religious institutions being excluded in H.R. 3 from receiving Federal funds.

In fact, we are promised today that funds providing for child care provided by religious institutions will be an item on the conference agenda.

We are further told by House leadership that House conferees should and will move toward the Senate position on this issue. We can expect, according to House leadership, that this question will be resolved in a way that is acceptable to those of us who want to ensure the option of child care being provided by religions institutions for American parents.

Well, as one who comes from Kentucky where many of our child care centers across the Commonwealth are provided by religious institutions, I believe that this important issue will be taken up during conference. However, I ask, why wasn't this taken up earlier?

Why weren't provisions allowing Federal funds for child care by religious institutions included in H.R. 3?

Why didn't the Rules Committee address the issue?

Why is leadership saying to us today, defeat Stenholm-Shaw and your religious institutions will be taken care of during conference?

All across Kentucky and all across the Nation, the Catholic, Baptist, Church of Christ, Pentecostal, and Jewish communities, among others, are watching the House debate this matter, hoping that the House elects to do what the Senate earlier did when passing S. 5.

S. 5, the Act for Better Child Care, as passed overwhelmingly by that body, ensures maximum parental choice and the fullest participation of church-based child care providers permitted under the Constitution.

Specifically, S. 5 includes language that permits religious institutions to receive direct grants from States to establish child care facilities or to subsidize ABC eligible children.

Yes, the Senate bill takes care of our religious institutions who have child care facilities just as our House bill should.

The fact of the matter, however, is that H.R. 3, the child care bill, as currently written, specifically includes restrictions on religious child care providers—a significant source of child care, especially in the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

Simply put H.R. 3 specifically prohibits child care funds to be used for sectarian or religious child care.

I trust each of my colleagues would look at the bill before us today and look at, specifically, chapter 2 establishing the Early Childhood Development and School-Related Child Care Program.

Chapter 2 of H.R. 3, section 8004, states:

No provider of a program receiving assistance under this title shall engage in any sectarian activity, including sectarian workship and instruction, in such program.

In other words, if you have a Baptist or a Catholic or a Pentecostal child care center out there, if you are the recipient of Federal funds, you better not have a prayer or read the Bible while the children are there or you will lose your Federal funds.

I urge my colleagues to look at chapter 3 of H.R. 3, establishing the Child Care Services for Infants, Toddlers, and Young Children Program, section 658J, page 210, and I quote:

No child care provider receiving financial assistance under this subchapter shall engage in any sectarian activity, including sectarian worship and instruction, in the program for which such assistance is received.

The vote before us today is not on a motion to instruct our conferees but on H.R. 3 as currently written.

To meet this issue head on, I would tell my Democrat and Republican colleagues to vote today to correct this matter by voting for the Stenholm-Shaw amendment.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Stenholm amendment and in support of the basic bill.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the child care provisions contained within the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act. This legislation represents a ray of hope in the struggle to fulfill America's need for better child care and it must not be overshadowed. It is an opportunity to correct our past neglect. If we miss this chance today, we will have failed to provide not only for the well-being of our children, but for the future of our Nation. We will have lost the means to implement a range of national laws and policies which we embraced as recently as the last Congress.

It has been 20 years since any legislation has held this magnitude of hope and promise for children. Rapidly occurring changes in our society have now brought the lack of affordable, quality child care to the level of a national crisis. We can no longer deny that the escalating costs of raising healthy and literate children have taken their toll. By 1995, four out of five school-age children will have working mothers. While for some this is an elected choice, for many others it is an economic necessity. One quarter of our working mothers in this country are the sole supporters of their children. Thankfully, however, the child care provisions reported by the Committee on Education and Labor and the Committee on Ways and Means offer a real solution. Combining the essential ingredients necessary to produce a successful program, the Hawkins-Downey provisions address the most crucial child care needs of our Nation's parents: affordability, safety, availability, and quality.

Mr. Chairman, it is crucial that we address each of these issues while we have the chance. To do less would be a hoax. Yet we stand here today and simultaneously declare the urgent need for child care while considering amendments that would dismantle the most important provisions of child care contained within H.R. 3299.

Mr. Chairman, we must be careful. The amendment offered today by my colleague, Mr. STENHOLM, is woefully inadequate. Although it is being portrayed as an alternative to the child care provisions crafted by the Committee on Education and Labor and the Committee on Ways and Means it doesn't come close to meeting current child care needs. The adoption of the Stenholm amendment would eliminate the minimal training standards which would ensure that our children are being cared for by professionals in a safe environment. It would eliminate the provision which would allow parents to drop by and determine first hand the type of care their children are receiving. And it would fail to ensure an increase in the supply of child care, which after all is what the child care issue is supposed to address. In a nutshell, Mr. Chairman, this amendment would fail to meet the most basic needs of American families.

If we vote today to accept either of the alternatives and not the provisions offered by the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Education and Labor we will have demonstrated our inability to understand the lesson which has been taught to us many times. Providing funding without guidelines to ensure that it is spent in the intended manner is a certain way to fail in obtaining the purpose of public policy. Good intentions are not enough—we must make the law effective and workable.

Mr. Chairman, I specifically urge my colleagues to oppose the Stenholm amendment. Over 150 major organizations—including most of the Nation's major labor, education, children's, and religious affiliated groups—have seen fit to support the provisions within the reconciliation package. We should too. After all, the primary assistance that the Stenholm amendment provides is the earned income tax credit [EITC]. But this is only one facet of the child care program and is insufficient by itself to achieve the stated objective.

For those families with an annual income below $7,000, the EITC would provide an additional $630 a year for child care. For those families who earn between $8,000 to $10,000 annually the EITC provides $645 a year; and for families who earn $15,000 a year there will be an additional $412. This is appropriate and important progress, Mr. Chairman, but it amounts to less than $12 a week. By itself, this is certainly not enough to spark the flood of new child care providers that are necessary to fill in the current gap. When the cost of child care can run between $3,000 to $4,000 a year these few extra dollars a week won't cut it. It's like throwing a stick to a drowning person. It won't hold your head above water.

Also, unlike the committee version of the EITC, what support the Stenholm amendment does provide it manages to take back through other assistance programs. While the Downey tax credit provisions are careful to protect those most in need, Mr. STENHOLM is not so considerate. His amendment, in fact, specifically repeals a current law which would exempt child care tax credits from being counted as income under the aid to families with dependent children [AFDC] eligibility formula. Medicaid benefits and rental assistance for Federal housing would also feel the bite of the Stenholm amendment since their eligibility formulas are similar to AFDC's. H.R. 3299, on the other hand, assures that these Federal or other State or local means-tested programs will be left unaffected by child care assistance and existing exemptions are expanded so that they don't work at cross purposes.

Mr. Chairman, we have already failed during the 101st session to provide for almost half of those who are eligible to receive WIC funding. We have already in this measure been wasteful and overly generous with the capital gains policy change. President Bush vetoed the minimum wage law capable of providing the working class poor in this country the opportunity to raise themselves above the poverty level and we failed to override his veto. And just yesterday we failed to protect the most rapidly growing sector of our society from unforeseen illness when this House recommended full repeal of the Catastrophic Health Care Act.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a record of solutions, it is a record of avoiding problems and indifference. But today we have a chance to start anew. We can and must address the needs of families. Millions of Americans need our assistance and not our indifference to their everyday concerns and dreams. Not since the early 1970's has Congress been this close to enacting serious, comprehensive child care legislation. The tireless efforts of the grassroots groups who brought us to this point cannot go unattended—American children should not continue to be inadequately cared for. Today, let's make the most of this opportunity and support the child care provisions of H.R. 3299. Vote against the Stenholm and Edwards amendments and ensure that child care is made not only affordable and available, but that it is provided by qualified personnel in a safe environment. This is essential if we are to realize a renewed commitment to the American family. We must keep this ray of hope alive for children today and tomorrow.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Maine [Ms. SNOWE].

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Stenholm-Shaw substitute, and in favor of the comprehensive approach taken by the Downey-Hawkins reconciliation bill.

With speculation and opinion having run rampant on the question, I thought I would take a few moments to provide facts that would shed illumination.

First of all, I repeat, this bill does not, does not mandate a standard. Instead, it sets forth 8 years where States must develop their own standards. No State will lose funds if they set in place their own standards within 4 years of enactment of the reconciliation provisions.

Members can decide for themselves which areas of the Frankenstein-like creation the Stenholm proponents have tried to portray.

Is it unreasonable to ask that States develop their own standards on group size limits for infant care? Most Members can recall from their own experience how difficult it is to take care of 1 child, let alone 8, 10, 12, 15. However, the Stenholm plan does not think it is necessary to ask States to give them the incentive to set standards on group size. That is despite horrifying incidents which have occurred in a facility, for example, in Waukegan, IL, in which they discovered 47 children, 32 of which were under the age of 2, being taken care of by 1 adult, in a basement, with no exit.

Is it reasonable to ask States to develop their own standards concerning health and first-aid training? Do you not believe most parents want assurances, they want assurances that if their child gets a cut, that the provider knows what to do? Or is it unreasonable for States to develop their own standards regarding immunization? Should not the parents have the assurances that all children in a facility are immunized against polio, tuberculosis, rubella, diphtheria?

We do know that the Stenholm proponents think it is unreasonable to have States develop their own handwashing standards.

But they leave out one key point. We are talking about handwashing after diapering, which is already required, I might add, in 43 States. Ironically, those who ridicule this are the same ones who denigrate child care centers as incubators for infectious disease. Yet handwashing after diapering is an extremely effective means of preventing infectious disease.

Is it unreasonable to have States develop their own standards allowing unlimited parental access to their children in a facility? Without such standards, on one hand, there is no assurance of quality care in the Stenholm proposal, and then, on the other hand, they have no means of access to that day care facility if the States do not set up such standards. In fact, I think these are all highly reasonable. Yet the Stenholm proponents are willing to spend $17 billion without any concern for the quality of care, and from their objections to State-developed standards, one would think that this was an unusual and novel idea for the Federal Government to set program standards.

It is hardly novel. We have enacted standards for the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, education for the handicapped, school lunch programs, workplace safety, Medicaid, AFDC, highway safety, and even meat inspection. Why? Because we think these goals are worthy, worthy enough to warrant at least our minimum attention.

Mr. Chairman, I think the Stenholm proposal is a laissez faire child care approach, and the American people reject that. We are told that 85 percent say they support the standards.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Maine [Ms. SNOWE] has expired.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, recognizing the fact that the standards the gentlewoman from Maine was referring to were in violation of Illinois standards, putting in another layer of standards would not have altered that at all. I would also like to point out that my good friend, the gentleman from North Carolina, who quoted very eloquently from the Scriptures, pointed out that this type of thing would have been outlawed in the day care centers should the Hawkins-Downey provision be passed.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I think there is some confusion over the position of the National Governors' Association. If I may, I would like to take just a moment to clarify what the Governors have said concerning the position of NGA.

On October 1, both the gentleman from Florida, Mr. CLAY SHAW, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. CHARLIE STENHOLM, received a letter from Raymond Scheppach, who is the Executive Director of the National Governors' Association, and he pointed out in his words, referring to the Stenholm-Shaw bill, that "Only your bill is consistent with the Governors' child care policy * * *."

Now, yesterday a bit of confusion was introduced by Governor Bill Clinton of Arkansas when he wrote to Chairman HAWKINS and he said:

It is my understanding that the NGA, whenever asked, always answers a question on whether a bill is or is not consistent with NGA policy.

That statement is being used today to say that the NGA letter really does not mean anything, that they did not really take a position in favor of Stenholm-Shaw. They did. Governor Clinton is mistaken.

In a followup letter, Mr. Scheppach has gone on to say this:

Yesterday NGA sent a letter to the Members of the House of Representatives indicating that the bipartisan Stenholm-Shaw child care proposal is most consistent with the Governor's policy on child care.

Then he goes on to say:

We have tried for the past year to work with Chairman HAWKINS, and despite the Governors' effort to work with Representative HAWKINS, his bill, H.R. 3, still contains the following mandates, as a condition of funding.

Then he lists them and says they are unacceptable. He points out that NGA only supports the Stenholm-Shaw amendment.

The letters referred to follow:

NATIONAL GOVERNORS' ASSOCIATION
Washington, DC, October 3, 1989.

Hon. E. CLAY SHAW,
House of Representatives, Cannon House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE SHAW: As the House moves to floor consideration of child care legislation, I would like to provide you with the position of the nation's Governors.

The Governors' policy on child care calls for a balanced approach between a flexible grant program and a tax credit in order to address comprehensively the issues of supply, quality and affordability.

In the past few years, Governors have undertaken many new initiatives to address the growing child care needs in the states. Not only have states increased their financial investment in child care programs but they have also strengthened training requirements and procedures for licensing and enforcement to help ensure quality of care. A national child care policy must recognize and build on existing state efforts.

Therefore, the Governors are opposed to mandates which reduce states' flexibility to target scarce resources in the most cost-effective ways.

Only your bill is consistent with the Governors' child care policy because it provides for a grant program that allows states the flexibility to tailor programs to meet their individual needs.

Sincerely,

RAYMOND C. SCHEPPACH.

STATE OF ARKANSAS,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Little Rock AR, October 4, 1989.

HON. AUGUSTUS HAWKINS,
House of Representatives, Rayburn House Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR GUS: I am pleased we had the opportunity to speak last evening so that I might clarify my position in regard to the child care legislation pending before the House at this time.

I negotiated with Senator Dodd in good faith on the Act for Better Child Care (S. 5) and personally continue to support it as passed because of its balanced approach between a flexible grant program and a tax credit. I appreciate your statement of last evening indicating that if your bill moves forward to conference, you will work to reconcile the differences between your bill and ABC with regard to training and inspection requirements. These requirements are my only concern in your bill and the additions to be submitted by Representative Downey.

Neither I nor to my knowledge any other Democratic governor authorized the version of the National Governors' Association letter to Representatives Stenholm and Shaw stating their bill is the "only" bill before the House consistent with the NGA policy. Our organization sent a letter to Senator Dodd signed by four governors on June 12, 1989, stating our active support of the agreement reached on ABC which later passed the Senate. As I stated above, I continue to support that bill and its components.

It is my understanding that the NGA whenever asked always answers a question on whether a bill is or is not consistent with NGA policy. Ray Scheppach, Executive Director of NGA, said he felt bound by this policy to write a response to Representatives Stenholm's and Shaw's inquiry about whether their bill was consistent with NGA policy.

I repeat, neither I as the Democratic co-lead governor on child care nor any other Democratic governor approved the language in the NGA letter saying the Stenholm/Shaw bill was the "only" bill consistent with NGA policy. I personally prefer the Senate ABC bill and will gladly support H.R. 3 if its provisions on training and inspection requirements for the states can be made consistent with the Senate bill.

Sincerely,

BILL CLINTON.

NATIONAL GOVERNORS' ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, October 4, 1989.

To All Governors:

Yesterday, NGA sent a letter to members of the House of Representatives indicating that the bipartisan Stenholm/Shaw child care proposal is most consistent with the Governors' policy on child care.

The Stenholm (R-TX)/Shaw (R-FL) child care proposal: Includes an increase of new funds in Title XX to be earmarked for child care of $200 million in FY 90, $350 million in FY 91 and $400 million per year thereafter (same funding amounts as in the Downey child care proposal). The proposal does not contain any federal mandates and permits maximum state flexibility. The proposal includes an authorization to increase the Head Start program by $300 million per year through FY 94. It would also expand the Earned Income Tax Credit and adjust the credit for family size. (In essence, the Stenholm/Shaw proposal is just like the Downey/Miller proposal but contains no state mandates.)

For the past year the lead Governors on child care, at the direction of the NGA Executive Committee, have lobbied for a child care bill with a grant program with no federal mandates and a tax credit to help low-income families. Despite the Governors' efforts to work with Rep. Hawkins, his bill H.R. 3 still contains the following mandates, as a condition of funding:

States would be required to provide 15 hours of training annually to all child care workers who work in facilities receiving public funds. This training mandate extends even to family care providers; does not allow a child care worker's credentials, such as a college degree in childhood development, to count towards the training requirement; and does not allow states to set different requirements according to the staff position of the worker as most states currently do.

States must inspect 25 percent of all registered family day care providers annually.

States are required to spend part of their allocation to support funding of local councils which are required to be established in each political subdivision of the state. States must provide funds, administrative services and personnel, to these councils. The bill does not limit the amount of a state's funds that can be spent to support these councils.

States must spend their funds to meet extensive data collection requirements such as reporting the salary for every child care worker in the state.

States will only have 2 percent of their funds for administration of the child care program.

For further information, contact Wendy Adler, NGA, at (202) 624-7819.

Sincerely,

RAYMOND C. SCHEPPACH,
Executive Director.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute and 30 seconds to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I also yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] will be recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Stenholm amendment and in full support of the child care package offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] and the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS].

Mr. Chairman, I am here today because I support the child care package included in the House reconciliation bill—and I urge the House to adopt it without any weakening amendments.

The child care package is vital to our States and our schools as they attempt to deliver their commitment to better educate our Nation's children. H.R. 3 will offer low-income families direct child care assistance to help them choose and pay for decent child care, and will help assure parents at all income levels that their children are well cared for and safe.

The child care provisions, and no other substitutes, offer parents a full range of choices in day care providers while ensuring that quality day care is available to the broadest number of children. What our bill does is to provide States and communities with the flexibility and the resources to build upon and improve existing child care services.

A great concern of mine surrounds the sometimes confusing question of church-state issues. Religious institutions provide over 30 percent of this Nation's child care.

Contrary to popular belief, H.R. 3 does not preclude religious institutions from providing sectarian instruction.

As long as churches comply with current law, they can provide child care. Government funding of education programs under section 654 of the Head Start Act does in fact preclude religious education in Head Start Programs, but this regulation does not apply to child care programs.

Mr. Speaker, voting for the Stenholm amendment would not change current law.

The availability of affordable, safe, quality child care should be all of our concerns and H.R. 3 would help break the cycle of poverty and increase the opportunity for economic self-sufficiency for all children.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3 without any weakening amendments.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Stenholm amendment and in full support of the child care package offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] and the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS].

I oppose the Stenholm-Shaw amendment. Although I have heard a lot of discussions relative to the merits of individuals and their intentions, I think we are all very concerned about child care. I think the real tragedy today, though, is that we are dealing with this important issue as a reconciliation bill and as part of a tax bill.

I think this matter is so important for America, as is a national health care program that is so desperately needed and as is long-term nursing care, which we must address, that it has enough merit to be brought to this floor freestanding for debate and scrutiny in all areas.

I support the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] for one reason. I keep hearing through the debate that we have got to get Government out of education, and I hear that we have got to get Government out of the home and we have got to get Government out of the kitchen. I remember when we got Government out of banking. We have now bailed out the savings and loan people, and they say it will be one-half of a trillion dollars before it is over. Now the banks want some help, too.

What if we do get Government out of education? The truth of the matter is that America would rebel and march against Congress. One of the foundation programs we have in America has been Head Start. Chairman HAWKINS deserves a lot of credit for that. He has stood there and helped to maintain that program, and if it were not for a targeted program to children, there would not be any.

What good is a tax credit if you do not have much disposable income to start with?

And the second point is, how do we know it is going to be used for child care? It must be targeted. I do not like having to vote on this in a tax bill.

In closing, let me remind the Members that they say by 1991 the interest payment on the national debt will be $180 billion. In addition to that, no one is mentioning that there will be $120 billion that we owe in interest payments to trust funds. That is $300 billion, more than we are spending for defense.

Nowhere in this bill do we deal with foreign investments and adjustments that should be made to those. Nowhere in this bill do we deal with section 954. Our American companies are moving overseas, escaping the Tax Code, taking advantage of loopholes, and taking our jobs. That would raise one-half of a billion dollars right there, and it would address section 954 on foreign-based income.

So I am going to support Chairman HAWKINS and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY]. I commend them for their efforts. But we are fooling ourselves here because this is not the place to really be dealing with this important measure. I think the alternatives offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] may work at some point, but I think at this point they are idealistic in a very realistic, rough world in America. These programs supported by Chairman HAWKINS are more realistic.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SARPALIUS].

Mr. SARPALIUS. Mr. Chairman, we all want to be effective Members of Congress, but in order to be an effective Member of Congress, we must learn how to dream. We must have a vision of what we would like to see the future of this country be like—a country at peace, a country that is strong enough to defend itself, a country that can produce enough food and fiber of its people, a country that has a strong belief in its God, and a country that is willing to give of itself to help those other people who are not as fortunate, to help its senior citizens, its families, and its children.

Lyndon Johnson had such a vision of this country when he worked so hard to create the Head Start Program. But I do not think he had any idea at that time that this country would be facing the problems we are facing today. In this country today we have over 14 million children who are poor, we have almost 10 million children who have no regular source of medical treatment or medical care, we have approximately 20 million children who have never been to a dentist, and we have each year 550,000 teenagers who are becoming mothers. We have children who are having children.

Every day there are 30 teenage girls who give birth to their third child. This is a tremendous problem that we must deal with.

Mr. Chairman, I heard this week in committee of a young teenage girl who was left with the dilemma of what to do with her child. She wanted to attend vocational school, but she had no place to take her child, nobody to care for that child. So, instead she chose to tie that child up with a ribbon for 2 hours every day while she attended vocational school. Today she is in custody for child abuse.

How fortunate we are today to be addressing the problem so that we can help some of those mothers that are struggling to become productive citizens.

Mr. Chairman, probably the strongest item in the Stenholm-Shaw proposal is that it does more in the Head Start Program. Today we are only addressing 20 percent of those poor kids. But in the Stenholm-Shaw proposal, it expands that. There is no question about it, that it gives more money than the Downey-Hawkins proposal.

Mr. Chairman, I encourage each one of my colleagues to vote for the Stenholm-Shaw proposal. Vote for our future. We must realize that these children are our future. They will sit where we are sitting. They will run our cities, our States and our Nation. They will take over our churches, our schools and our universities.

So, Mr. Chairman, any investment that we make in our young people, we are making an investment for that vision of America that we all dream about, and I encourage each one of my colleagues to support the Stenholm-Shaw proposal.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FLAKE], my friend from Queens.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, one of the most interesting things I found in this debate today as a pastor who continues to pastor a church while I am in Congress, a church that provides day care, a church that provides a school; in hearing the argument it seems that once again we are trying to act as if what we do this day in H.R. 3 will destroy our most sacred institution.

Mr. Chairman, let me assure my colleagues that I could not stand on the floor of this House of Representatives and support any bill which would in any way endanger the survival of or the reality of the necessity of providing for religious nurture and development for our young people.

I believe this is a sound bill. I believe it is a good bill. I believe that the leadership here has made its statement, has given its support, has an understanding that we will do all in our power to make sure that those young children in those schools will be able to continue to participate as they have.

Let us not try to scare people by suggesting that this in any way will destroy the church. I have been a service provider for the last 14 years. It will not destroy the church. I have been an ordained clergyman since the age of 19. I assure my colleagues this will not destroy the church. I operate a church, and in most urban communities in America day care programs are operated in churches and in most southern regions of this country.

Mr. Chairman, we would not come into this House of Representatives and dare to do anything that would destroy those service providers. We need them, and I assure my colleagues this day that, as I stand before them, before God, before this Nation, that this bill makes sense. It makes sense for those of us who are religious, those of us who are a part of whatever other kind of amendments we may have to bring forth.

My colleagues, let us work together. Let us assure the American people that this is not an attack on religion. Let us separate religion from politics. Let us do the right thing for the people and for the children.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUNDQUIST].

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I stand here in support of the Stenholm amendment. I would like to address my remarks on the religious issue also.

Mr. Chairman, the issue today is not whether we are going to destroy the church or not. The issue is whether we are going to address child care in churches and synagogues. I happen to think that it is a good way of teaching children. Forty percent of America's day care centers are in churches or synagogues.

Mr. Chairman, the questions that I would like to ask are on three points:

If church and synagogue child care is so important to the Hawkins amendment, why is it not in there already? Why is the last minute are we hearing we are going to take care of this problem? If it is so important, why is it not there?

Second, why are some people respectfully for the Hawkins amendment? I respect them and do not doubt their intentions, but the fact is many people support the Hawkins proposal because it does exclude child care in church and synagogue. I understand that, but I say to my colleagues, "You can't have it both ways. You can't have those who are for it for one reason and those who are for it for another reason. You can't have it."

My colleagues, do not rely on conferees to solve this religious question. Vote for Stenholm.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, there is a critical need for child care. There are 24 million children under the age of 13 who need care while their parents work. One out of four children in this country are alone for part of the day when their parents work. Parents work because they must work.

Mr. Chairman, I believe strongly, with all due respect to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] that the Stenholm bill guts the child care package.

In my State alone 27,200 poor children would be served by the Hawkins-Downey bill versus 3,500 children under the Stenholm bill. That is the central issue.

Mr. Chairman, this is a comprehensive package by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY]. It is not under the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

However, Mr. Chairman, I want to address the church care child care issue. Being a Catholic, having been educated in religious schools most of my adult life, I would not stand here and support this bill if I were not concerned, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] is, and others.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage in a colloquy with the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] on this important issue.

Is it true that under H.R. 3 parents may select child care services provided by churches and synagogues?

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. OAKAR. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, yes, and may I say to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] that is absolutely true.

Ms. OAKAR. And, Mr. Chairman, is it not true that the only restriction on child care services provided by churches and synagogues under H.R. 3 are the same ones already provided to Head Start programs?

Mr. HAWKINS. The gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] is correct again. That is very true.

Ms. OAKAR. And, Mr. Chairman, is it true that Head Start programs which exist in many areas are run by churches and are found in church basements, including my own district?

Mr. HAWKINS. The gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] is correct. That is true, and it will continue to be true.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, this issue has unfortunately confused some of our Members, and is it not also true that this issue will be further clarified in conference with the Senate?

Mr. HAWKINS. Yes. For the benefit of those who apparently do not read very well the English language, we will attempt to clarify it again.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, if there is need for further clarification, and I would certainly rather have the version that is in the portion on the Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate version that is two against one, the leadership has promised that the need for clarification will exist, and we will yield to the Senate version and the Committee on Ways and Means version. There is no reason. If my colleagues do not want to support child care, they do not support it, then they can vote for Stenholm. If my colleagues want to support child care, get on board and support Hawkins and Downey.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Chairman, some of our colleagues have suggested that Democrats who support Shaw-Stenholm are operating in a manner that is contrary to the Democratic policy. I have heard that the Children's Defense Fund lobbyists are accusing supporters of Stenholm-Shaw as being antifamily. I am outraged by those assertions. I would like to know why it is Democratic policy and how it helps needy children to create a new Federal child care program which will simply compete for limited resources with existing programs for children. Head Start has been on the books for 20 years, and yet today less than 20 percent of the eligible children receive that service.

I predict that 20 years from now we are going to be looking at a new child care program and Head Start and other children's programs still totally underfunded. That is the legacy of creating new programs when we do not even have the resources to take care of existing programs.

I think there is a better way. Stenholm-Shaw would target our resources to existing programs, like Head Start and title 20. I think that is consistent with democratic policy. I think that is profamily.

I would like to know why it is democratic policy and how does it help needy children to expand eligibility for Head Start to nonpoor families. Under existing law, only 10 percent of the participants in Head Start can come from nonpoor families. We now raise that to 50 percent, and the prospect is that families with incomes in excess of $20,000 may now be participating in Head Start, when we are not even serving the poorest children adequately with this program.

I think there is a better way. Stenholm-Shaw would keep our program targeted to the poor children of America. I think that is democratic policy, and I think that is profamily.

I would like to know why it is democratic policy and how it helps needy children to continue a tax break for child care for the wealthiest Americans, because the alternative today does not eliminate existing law which keeps the dependent care tax credits available to every single taxpayer, regardless of how high their income.

I think there is a better way. Stenholm-Shaw phases down that tax credit and phases it out entirely between $70,000 and $90,000 of income, and saves the Treasury $1 billion.

I think that is good democratic policy and I think that is profamily.

I think there has been enough garbage about the Stenholm-Shaw substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman.

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Chairman, I think there has been enough garbage about the Stenholm substitute being contrary to democratic policy and being antifamily, because there is not just one way to help America's children. We all know that there are many ways that we can provide assistance to America's needy families, and today in so many ways I think the Stenholm-Shaw proposal represents the better way.

Mr. Chairman, the Stenholm/Shaw substitute is a balanced and workable compromise which brings together proposals which target the Head Start Program, school-based programs, and the expansion of the social services block grant in addition to an expansion of the earned income tax credit. There are several aspects of the Stenholm substitute which merit support:

First, the Hawkins-Downey plans unnecessarily change the structure of Head Start by allowing middle-income families to qualify for its services. Head Start is an excellent program that unfortunately does not come close to fully serving its eligible population.

When only 17 percent of low-income children are currently served, there is no sense in altering it by opening it up to other children. It was created with the intent of giving disadvantaged children a strong foundation to close the opportunity gap that poverty creates. The Stenholm substitute channels money to this needed program with the option of full-day care but does not expand the eligibility to families with higher incomes.

Second, States need money to assist them in assuring that adequate quality child care is available. However, parents and States are capable of making decisions about what is best for them and their children. The Stenholm substitute funds existing programs and maintains State flexibility by not imposing cumbersome Federal guidelines on child care centers and providers. Further, the Stenholm plan expands the earned income tax credit. It puts greater financial resources in the hands of low and medium-low income families. This makes parents better able to afford child care and maximizes the options they can choose. This plan also phases out the dependent care tax credit benefits for families with incomes between $70,000 and $90,000 dollars. Phasing out the DCTC for wealthy taxpayers would save an estimated $1 billion a year.

The Stenholm substitute is the practical and affordable option. It targets Head Start to the neediest families. It gives States choices and flexibility in providing child care and in regulating child care centers. It expands the EITC giving options directly to the working parents.

The Hawkins/Downey proposals represent a conglomeration of programs that create expectations which can't be met and remove options for families rather than broadening them. I urge support for the Stenholm substitute.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, there is an old saying that "immitation is the sincerest form of flattery," and I suppose that if the immitation of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] of what the Ways and Means Committee bill was just the lifting of a one-liner, that we would not be so concerned about it, but it goes much more deeply than that. There are some very fundamental differences between what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] have done and what the Ways and Means Committee has done, and I want to spend a few minutes in trying to explain those critical differences.

It is true that with respect to the tax credit, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] has listed pretty much what the Ways and Means Committee did.

I see the gentleman from Wisconsin on the floor, who is one of the fathers of the earned income tax credit.

This is a wonderful opportunity for us to recognize that it is time for us to do something for the working poor, and we do that in the Stenholm proposal and in the Hawkins bill and in my bill. It is something that needs to be done, I think we can all agree to that.

But there is one critical difference between what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] has done and we have done in Ways and Means. We had a proposal last year, you remember the welfare reform bill, that said we want to encourage work. We want to say to the mother who is attempting to work her way out of welfare that every additional hour that she spends at work, she will be able to keep that money, and if she became eligible for something like the earned income tax credit, it would be there for her.

Well, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] flies directly in the face of that. It says if that woman is working her way out of poverty, we are going to count the earned income tax credit against the meager AFDC benefits that she gets. That is the absolute wrong direction for us to go, and it is a very, very fundamental difference between what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] has done and what we have done in Ways and Means. If we did not have any other differences, that would be reason enough to defeat it.

Now, let me talk about this question of flexibility versus accountability. I do not think there is anybody here who believes that we should have kibbutizum type of regulations, where we attempt to socialize the whole world. I know my Republican friends are not that, and neither are my Democratic friends.

And on the other end of the spectrum, I do not think there is anybody here who believes that the marketplace alone should be allowed to govern regulation. We do not return to, as the gentleman from West Virginia said, Charles Dickens' like care for children, but there is something in between the spectrum of the kibbutizum and Charles Dickens', and that is what the Ways and Means Committee has attempted to do, and in fact does. It provides flexibility to the States. It does not create additional programs and it provides accountability.

Now, the numbers, and they are moving targets, I would say, for all of us in terms of who is actually on child care, but let me try if I can for a moment, explain who is getting what. The latest and best reports, as far as we can determine, from the Census' current population report in a particular book called, "Who Is Minding The Kids—The Winter of 1984-85," and they try to take a look at who is where in child care. They said basically that for child care for employed mothers, there were approximately 2.3 million, about 31 percent, of the children cared for in the child's home, primarily by the relative. We do not want to touch that. I think we all understand that the government should not intrude into the home, and it is specifically stated in the Ways and Means provision that not be touched.

So what are we talking about? Well, we are talking about the other categories; 3 million children, or 37 percent were cared for in another home primarily by a nonrelative. There we have, in our opinion, a State interest. Another 1.8 million, 23 percent or about one-quarter, were in some sort of congregate group care. There I believe we have a further interest.

Now, what is this further interest? Well, we list it for those of you who would like to see the committee report on page 33 of the Ways and Means Committee report. We outline, not what the States must do, although there are some things that the States must do, but what we think the States should do—should do. I do not think there is any disagreement, is there, about the fact that we want to know how many infants are being cared for by one person. I do not think that is unreasonable, and the vast majority of the States have that regulation already.

Are we concerned, as we of course should be, about the age of the person who is providing care? Of course, we are. Of course we are not going to say that health and safety standards should be compromised for our children. The vast majority of the States already have that, but we want to make sure that those that do not, do.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. CLEMENT). The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] has expired.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

We do not want to take any chances with our children.

Now, let me deal with one other very important point. In the attempt of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] to be flexible, what he has done is that he has given up not only the question of accountability, but the requirement that is in the Ways and Means proposal that 80 percent of the money be used for the creation of day care slots, 80 percent of it. The other 20 percent probably will be used for training, administration, enforcement, and standards.

Now, there is nothing to stop a State from using 80 percent on training, enforcement, and standards, if they so choose, or on administration.

Now, as a practical matter, they probably will not do that, but why run the risk? Why not say that we want to create child care for children, which is what the Ways and Means Committee bill does.

It is a good idea to use title 20. We avoid the issue of church-state, and it is our fervent hope that when we get to the conference that we will be able to prevail on the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] and some of our friends in the Senate to use the existing bureaucracy and to stay silent on this question of church-state. This is not a matter for us to deal with today. This is not important. The vast majority of the states already provide vouchers, and there are no problems.

What we have fashioned is a plan that will work, that will provide child care and will make a very big difference in terms of how we raise our children in the future.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] provides us the hope that the money may be spent, but not the guarantee. America's children, America's mothers, America's working poor deserve more than the hope that the money will be there. They deserve the reality that it will be.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. MARTIN].

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I come from a whole different attitude than virtually everyone who has spoken.

I am the one you are talking about. I was the working mother, the single mother who had to find day care. I do not think a lot of you have ever had to do that.

I did not look at the bills of the Democratic leadership or my own leadership. I will admit selfishly that I said, "Which one of them would have helped me when I desperately needed all three kinds of day care just mentioned?" I did not know what the answer was going to be. But it was the bill of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

If the mothers matter, I hope the Members check that out.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI], an early advocate of the EITC.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Stenholm-Shaw bipartisan substitute. I do for several reasons.

First, it clears out of the bill the ABC-type social engineering philosophy—the philosophy that says government officials, interest groups, and social engineers, rather than parents, should decide what type of child care should be favored for America's children.

Second, it retains, and makes more central to the bill, the earned income tax credit reform provisions reported by the Ways and Means Committee. As one who has worked for EITC reform for over 2 years now, I am pleased that both alternatives left before us contain this major step in the direction many of us have been advocating for so long. To be sure, we could have taken the same amount of money and the same basic credit structure, and targeted that money a little better toward the lowest end of the income scale. But let us not quibble too much. The fact is that these EITC provisions represent a decent compromise between my original Family Living Wage Act and the original bill introduced by our colleagues from New York and California, Mr. DOWNEY and Mr. MILLER. If they survive the conference with the other body, they will provide very substantial help to working poor families with children.

The Stenholm-Shaw bipartisan substitute, by clearing out the excess ABC baggage from the bill, makes EITC reform the clear centerpiece of the House position on child care. It thereby strengthens the case for EITC reform in the conference and makes it far more likely that this reform will become law.

Finally, I would like to stress that the bipartisan substitute makes one critical improvement in the Ways and Means EITC provisions. It reverses a terrible feature of the 100th Congress welfare reform law by providing that EITC amounts shall count as income for purposes of phasing out welfare benefits. It thereby strengthens a crucial feature of the EITC; namely, that it is designed to help people get off welfare and into the work force.

If we do not count EITC as income, we'll just increase welfare and give more people incentives to get on it. It is the exact reverse of the policy we ought to be following.

For many years, I have believed, along with many others, that we should require all able-bodied welfare recipients to work and then we should supplement their earnings from work if needed. To do otherwise is unfair to those who do work to support themselves and debilitating for those who do not. The welfare reform law took a step in this direction by allowing States to institute so-called work fare requirements, but only if welfare clients could make more working than they could receive on welfare. If we do not count EITC as income, we undermine that whole policy advance.

And there is no legitimate reason for it. EITC clearly is income—it amounts basically to a wage increase. It is ludicrous not to consider it as such. Moreover, we do count unemployment compensation, disability income, and a number of similar items as income for purposes of phasing out welfare. I cannot imagine why EITC dollars, which are just as green, and just as acceptable at the grocery, should be any different.

Therefore, I urge all my colleagues to vote for the Stenholm-Shaw bipartisan substitute—to rid the bill of the ABC social engineering philosophy, to make EITC reform the centerpiece of the House child care position, and to advance the cause of welfare reform by declaring EITC dollars to be, in fact, real dollars.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Chairman, today the parents of 836,521 children are waiting to see if their representatives will pass a bill that will create space for their children in local child care programs.

If my colleagues fail to retain the child care language now in the omnibus budget reconciliation H.R. 3299, then at best, only 80,000 of those children will be served. For the Stenholm substitute only allocates enough funds to serve 80,000 children nationwide. It will not ensure the parents of those children that they will be in safe, and healthy centers.

The reality today is that almost two-thirds of all mothers in the work force are single, divorced, separated, or have husbands who earn less than $15,000 a year. Of 21.7 million children in the United States under age 6, 10.5 million have mothers who work outside the home. We cannot ignore these numbers much longer.

These families deserve a good, effective, strong child care policy that provides a safe, healthy, and educationally challenging environment for their children. To pass a bill that does not authorize new funds for Head Start is not good enough. To pass a bill that does not ensure the safety of children in federally funded centers is not good enough. The language in reconciliation will create new options for moderate and lower income families by expanding some of the effective programs that already exist, and encouraging the development of new slots and new programs.

There are 836,521 reasons to vote "no" on the Stenholm substitute, and they are all under the age of 6.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, I say to the gentlewoman from Colorado that the excellent child care and education she received in Texas did come without Federal mandates and Federal dollars, and that was proven.

Let me say also to the gentlewoman from Ohio who made the comments about the low-income children who are going to be denied if the Stenholm-Shaw amendment fails, the numbers that have been circulated all over is 800,000 low-income children will be denied.

It was very difficult for me to understand this when it went out. If we take the children defense fund's own estimates, the cost of child care is $3,000 per child per year. If there are 800,000 children of that age, at $3,000 per year, that is $2.4 billion in cost in the Hawkins bill alone. They provide for $1.775, which we make the argument we do also.

Where they come up with these numbers I do not know.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it was Yogi Berra who was blamed for using the expression, "It looks like deja vu all over again." For the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] and me, it is, because we went through and heard all of the arguments we have heard today on this floor in the spring of 1965 when we passed the Elementary and Secondary Act. It was the first time, after 50 years of trying that the Committee on Education and Labor, with the help of a President who was gung-ho to get something done about Federal aid to education, and people of good will in groups that could not get their act together before, ranging from the Catholic bishops to the civil rights groups and on across the spectrum, finally it came together, and we, in a spirit of compromise and without looking at everybody as if they were trying to do us in, came up with a program that has ever since then provided educational assistance to both public and nonpublic school children.

For 50 years before that, every attempt had fallen apart. Do we know why it fell apart? Because the arguments, like the arguments we are hearing here today about church-state, got in the way of common sense and shot that legislation down time after time after time.

During that same period of time, we were there to work with CARL PERKINS and others to put together something called Head Start.

It is interesting that everybody loves Head Start today. Everybody did not love Head Start when we passed it. As a matter of fact, there were a number of Southern States where not one public school would have a Head Start Program in it, because the Head Start programs were identified with simultaneous events happening here in Washington to integrate public schools and if they had a Head Start Program, that might speed up integration. The result was that Head Start was started in many States exclusively in churches, not a little bit in churches, but the churches were the only ones who would have them.

The gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], the chairman of our committee, was on that committee and there when we made it possible for them to do it.

What he is asking the Members to do is have enough faith to believe that the 25 years of his record means something and that, indeed, we have dealt fairly with people on the church-state issue. We have dealt reasonably and we have done something that is very important for some of the people beating their chests about what they want to do for the churches here. Some of the Members want to do so much for them, they are going to help them right into a Federal court and get a court order that says, "No nonpublic school or church-related school gets dollar one until we get through the Supreme Court 5 years from now."

We are not doing a thing for the church-related programs if we help them so much that we boost them into the Federal court. We should be supporting the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS].

You should be ashamed of yourself if you do not appreciate his 25-year record on this subject.

H.R. 3, the Early Childhood Education and Development Act, I would like to explain briefly why we need this legislation and what it would do.

According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, 57 percent of married mothers with children below the age of 6 worked outside the home in 1987, compared with 30 percent in 1970. In other words, traditional families with very young children have almost doubled their demand for child care services in less than two decades.

In Washtenaw County one in three children cannot be placed in an approved child care home or facility. In Michigan as a whole, about 44 percent of the children who need quality out-of-home care do not have access to it.

The reconciliation bill provisions for child care would authorize $1.75 billion to carry out a three-pronged delivery system of child care.

Twenty-five percent of the funds would expand the Head Start Program to offer full-day, full-year programs to children from low-income families.

Twenty-five percent of the funds would flow directly to public schools to help them establish or expand early childhood development programs and before and after school care.

Thirty-five percent of the funds would be made available to a variety of providers in States, including group homes, family day care, and institution-based providers, serving families with infants and young children.

The remaining 15 percent of the funds would be used by States for coordination activities, such as developing comprehensive resource and referral systems, identifying needs, and promoting training and enforcement of State standards.

In addition, a separate authorization of $25 million is included for a program aimed at encouraging businesses to respond to the child care crisis.

The reconciliation bill also contains two additional features. It will send $200 million to States through the title XX social services block grant earmarked specifically for child care. It will also lower taxes for families earning under $20,000 by expanding the earned income tax credit beginning in 1991.

The Senate passed its version of child care last June. I urge my colleagues in the House to follow suit by approving the reconciliation bill's child care proposals without delay.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN].

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Stenholm-Shaw amendment.

Mr. Chairman, why should the Government discriminate against traditional families and religious child care providers? Why should the Government create a new, expensive bureaucracy to help solve the so-called crisis in child care? These would be the results if we pass H.R. 3 today.

I believe that the Government should not on either count. Our Government should not discriminate against families who want to care for their own children, and it should not create a new bureaucracy.

First, the language of H.R. 3 clearly discriminates against traditional families. The Family Research Council contends that the bill perpetuates the bias in Federal tax policy against these families by taxing them to pay for the almost $3 billion in grants and subsidies to day-care centers, from which traditional families receive no benefit.

Hawkins-Downey also continues the discrimination in the Tax Code by denying traditional families tax benefits available to day-care users.

Moreover, Hawkins-Downey blatantly discriminates against religious child care providers and those who use religious care. Concerned Women for America has pointed out that H.R. 3 would only allow religious providers to receive title XX funds if they operate under secular State regulations.

Churches currently provide one-third of the center-based care in the United States today. Hawkins-Downey would be blatantly antireligious in its result.

Second, we sure do not need another bureaucracy. Many of our Nation's problems in other areas have stemmed from too much Government interference. I have said many times, Mr. Chairman, that people know better how to spend their money than a bunch of bureaucrats in Washington.

The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that H.R. 3 will cost at least $25 billion. With our current budget deficit and national debt, we simply cannot afford to create more red tape at such an exorbitant price.

Mr. Chairman, many people who claim that there is a child care crisis in this country never give any statistics to prove it. That is because Census Bureau data show that 54 percent of all U.S. children are cared for by a full-time mother at home.

The Family Research Council says that 11 percent of the children are cared for by a grandmother or other relative. Seven percent have parents who work different shifts and both care for the child. And 4 percent have mothers who care for their child while babysitting other children or otherwise working at home. That means that three-fourths of all children in this country are presently cared for by relatives.

Additionally, only 29 percent of all married mothers with preschool children are employed full-time year around.

Mr. Chairman, let me emphasize this next fact. Only 7 percent of all preschool children are primarily cared for by a secular day-care center. Hawkins-Downey would only be helping 7 percent of all the preschool children.

Therefore, the best solution to our child care crisis is a tax credit. A tax credit puts money back in the pockets of parents. It also avoids the church-state worries of both sides. A tax credit would give parents a choice in acquiring good child care from the provider they want for their child.

Let us keep the Government out of the child care business. Do not let the Government discriminate against parents or church-related providers. Let us give a tax credit to parents.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUECHNER].

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Chairman, the child care debate has not been over whether or not the Government should provide additional assistance, but rather over the extent of future Government involvement. Families in my district, indeed across the country, have made their sentiments on this issue clear. Quite simply, the Federal Government's role should be minimal and we should take a profamily, full-choice approach.

Any child care policy implemented by Government should not preclude parents from making "real" choices. Instead, such policy should afford parents the opportunity to select the kind of child care arrangement they believe is best. This includes church-based supervision, in-family, and paternal child care. It would also encourage private employers to provide child care benefits programs to assist parents while they are working.

These kinds of profamily, full-choice provisions are contained in my own child care bill, H.R. 2350 and, I am quite pleased that many of these ideas have been incorporated in the Stenholm-Shaw amendment.

This amendment is a bipartisan approach which does not promote programmatic or regulatory changes. Rather, it offers States an opportunity to decide how funds should be used to assist residents with their child care needs. The amendment also expands the earned income tax credit [EITC] to families so that they receive financial assistance for whatever their child care arrangements might be.

I heard my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FLAKE] say he was ordained at 19 and he is not worried about H.R. 3. Well, I got my law degree at 25, and I tell him, do not trust a conference committee or a bureaucrat to respect your wishes.

The Stenholm-Shaw amendment is not a perfect solution to solve the child care crisis. However, it's an acceptable alternative compared to H.R. 3, which fails to accommodate the variations in child care arrangements and blatantly prohibits awarding of funds to child care providers in religious settings. While the Constitution provides for the separation of church and state, in my view there is no way to construe it as precluding the provision of child care in religious settings.

Another primary problem with H.R. 3 is the option of institutional care. This measure promotes the misguided notion that parents who dedicate themselves to the care of young children in the home have some type of diminished social value. That's simply wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for the Stenholm-Shaw amendment. By doing so we will show our commitment to the continued growth and security of the American family.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT], the majority leader.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak against the gentleman from Texas, Mr. STENHOLM'S amendment. I do it with great respect for the work that he has done on this amendment, because I know that he has worked very hard to offer this amendment and to put something in front of the Members that he feels very strongly about.

I also know that there is a great deal of concern among members of the committee about the question of church-state, the question of whether churches and religious institutions can be involved in child care.

As I understand it today, in most States, churches are involved in child care. As I understand the Ways and Means Committee language, that would not be changed. Child care could still be delivered in religious institutions.

In my own church in St. Louis we have child care. I think that is a good thing. I do not think the Members want to change that in any way.

A lot of Members in the last few days have been asking me as a Member of the leadership on the Democratic side what our attitude would be when this bill gets to conference if this amendment is not gone along with, what our attitude would be about resolving these issues.

My feeling from listening to the debate today is that we should move toward the Senate language. I think the silence in the Ways and Means Committee version is useful because it would continue to allow religious institutions to have child care within their institutions.

There is the additional question that some have about whether or not vouchers, as some States have, would continue to be allowed, and whether or not they could be allowed in certain kinds of religious institutions.

Let me try to make this as clear as I can. The leadership on the Democratic side is committed to a conference report on this issue that deals with this question in a way that would be appropriate for the religious institutions that are now delivering child care. We do not want to be in a position, we do not want to be in a world, where you could not have our children in church basements, could not have our children in religious institutions, receiving child care.

We will be working toward that end if this amendment is refused and if this bill goes to conference, as I devoutly hope that it will.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GRANDY].

Mr. GRANDY. I thank my friend, the gentleman from Texas, for yielding time and rise in strong support of his compromise, the preferable of the two Federal child care endowments before us today.

Why? There is a very simple difference. The Stenholm-Shaw proposal rewards foresight; H.R. 3 rewards oversight.

Let us talk about something that we all have some experience with, and that is grandparents, elderly people.

Under the innovative Stenholm-Shaw approach we bring those people into the child care universe in greater numbers by allowing them to disregard their earnings against their Social Security earnings test.

Under H.R. 3 we do not enfranchise, we encumber. We say well, we like grandparents too, but you have to get licensed and you have to have 15 hours of annual training, for a grandparent, perhaps even to take care of their own grandchild.

We have heard a lot of talk today about how what we really need here, what we really are buying, is a comprehensive quality system. Like what? Our comprehensive quality educational system, K through 12, which the Governors last week at the educational conference said needs radical changes? Like our comprehensive quality health care system, which none of us seem to like.

The problem in this particular institution is when we get into these kinds of questions, we do not wind up doing quality, we wind up doing volume. That is why I support Stenholm-Shaw and encourage my colleagues to join in, because the money will go to the parents and not the providers, and church-based institutions will be allowed to deliver church-based child care. They will not have to take the crucifixes and the Stars of David off the wall and be nothing more than architectural shelters. That is the argument.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA].

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me. I want to indicate to my colleagues that grandparents are not all elderly people.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the child care package included in H.R. 3299, the reconciliation bill. I believe that the provisions of H.R. 3, the Early Childhood Development and Education Act, as approved by the Committee on Education and Labor, and the Ways and Means Committee expansion of the earned income tax credit and title 20 funding complement each other, and differences will be worked out in the House/Senate conference. Several alternative proposals are before us today, but they should not substitute for the comprehensive provisions of the reconciliation bill.

The provisions of the reconciliation package address the most important elements of the current child care debate: The need to expand the accessibility and affordability of quality child care. National statistics clearly demonstrate this urgent need. According to the Children's Defense Fund, almost two-thirds of all mothers in the work force are single, widowed, divorced, separated, or have husbands who earn less than $15,000 per year.

Nationally, the average cost of child care is approximately $3,000 per child annually; infant care is significantly higher. Working parents with children rate child care as their fourth largest expense after food, housing, and taxes, according to the Committee on Education and Labor report on H.R. 3. Thus, the committee reports that more than half of family income is spent on child care in a family with two children in which both parents earn the minimum wage.

There is a desperate shortage of licensed, affordable child care available. The Maryland Committee for Children estimates that for the 588,157 children under the age of 12 with working mothers in Maryland, there are only 89,539 spaces in licensed child care. The number of children who are currently receiving care from unlicensed providers is staggering.

The reconciliation child care provisions are clearly the best solution before us today. They represent the only truly comprehensive package which addresses the three major needs for low-income working parents: The lack of affordable, accessible quality child care.

The alternatives which are being considered today only partially address these objectives. The Stenholm substitute does not provide the direct child care assistance for approximately 800,000 infants, todders, and school-age children provided in the reconciliation provisions. Instead, the Stenholm amendment only provides the $200-million increase in title 20 funding, already included in the reconciliation bill. The Stenholm substitute does not address the issue of the quality of care, failing in any way to ensure the health and safety of children. In addition, the substitute does not increase the authorization for Head Start; it merely duplicates the bill approved by the House earlier this year. The package is clearly inadequate, despite the good intentions of its sponsors.

The reconciliation proposal is a comprehensive plan which includes a vital expansion of Head Start to provide full-time, full-year care, providing an additional $412 million to the $300 million it will receive under H.R. 1300, the House-passed supplemental Head Start authorization legislation. Head Start has a proven record of success and is an integral element to any Federal child care initiative. The National Head Start Association, the membership association representing the 1,900 Head Start programs, supports the provisions of the Education and Labor Committee expansion, and contends that it "represents a sound approach to providing high-quality, affordable and accessible child care for low-income and working families."

The package includes the provision of grants to States and local education agencies to establish before and after school care for school-age children and/or early child development programs for 3- or 4-year-olds in public schools. This program is an important one which is not included in the Stenholm substitute. By providing care in the schools, working parents would be assured that child care would be available to their children at one location for the entire day.

Most Americans agree that child care should provide more than just babysitting, but should also meet educational needs as well. The school-based care provisions include both social and educational components. Early education has been widely recognized as an increasingly important need for preschoolers, and approximately 3,000 of the Nation's 15,000 school districts now provide early education programs. The Hawkins provisions would provide this opportunity to all school districts.

During hearings before the Education and Labor Committee, Dr. Edward Zigler, the director of the Bush Center at Yale University and child development expert, testified that no comprehensive child care policy can be developed without including the schools. He asserted:

> The fact is, the problem has reached such crisis proportions that we cannot continue to address it in a band-aid manner. Rather, we must begin to establish a child care system that is reliable, accessible to all children, and becomes part of the very structure of society. The school, which is a major societal institution with which parents and children are familiar, can provide us with the structure for creating such a child care system, enabling us to offer good quality care to all children.

In a recent publication, the Child Care Action Campaign asserted that the schools "appear to be [the] obvious choice, as an agency that could add to the supply of care. Every community has a public school. They are a known institution. Their structure and administration is well developed * * *." While not every school will want to offer child care, and many parents will want to have their children cared for in different settings, schools should be part of any comprehensive plan. As the committee report asserts, the availability and access of the schools, and the affordability of their use are some major reasons to include a separate program of child care and childhood development programs in the schools.

The package is strongly supported by education organizations, including the National Association of Elementary School Principals, the National PTA, the National School Boards Association, the American Association of School Administrators, the National Education Association, the American Federation of Teachers, and the Council of Chief State School Officers.

Title 3 of the Education and Labor Committee provisions allocates 35 percent of the funding for grants to States for child care services for children under age 13 from low-income families where the parents work or are in training. Eligible providers may include, but are not limited to, school-based providers, family child care providers, religiously affiliated providers, nonprofit and for-profit providers, group home care providers, business, and universities.

Parental choice would be a priority. Parents would choose the care which they deemed appropriate for their children, and the assistance provided would be no lower than the market rate of care for the area in which the family resides. Thus, low-income parents would be able to compete with parents who can afford to pay the full cost of care. Parental representation would be required on the local child development council, the National Advisory Committee on Model Standards, and the State licensing committee.

The bill would establish a National Advisory Committee to develop model Federal child care standards, with separate standards for center-based child care, family child care services, and group home child care services. Three years after enactment, States would be required to adopt minimum standards in all categories specified in the model standards. Thus, the bill would give States the flexibility to determine their own standards, while also ensuring better quality child care. It is important to stress the fact that the States will not be required to implement the Federal model standards—they are suggested guidelines for the States, not mandates.

Data clearly demonstrates the need for quality assurance by the States. According to the Children's Defense Fund, 28 States do not require training in child development or any prior experience for family day care providers. Eight States do not require handwashing before or after diapering, and before food preparation, even though it is one of the best methods to prevent infection and certainly one of the least costly.

Thirteen States require no immunizations for infants in family day care homes, and six States have no required immunizations for infants in child care. Thirty States do not require unlimited parental access to child care centers. This is a very brief list of the gaps in quality assurance among the States. These standards are very basic ones, and certainly represent some of the bare minimum requirements for the health and safety of infants and children. Funding would be provided to help providers meet any new standards required in their respective States.

I am pleased to submit for the record a letter of support from Maryland Governor William Donald Schaefer in support of the reconciliation bill language, which I include at the end of my statement.

The bill allocates 15 percent for State grants to increase the availability of quality child care. States would develop a 4-year plan to improve the supply of such care, including funding for the training of child care providers, resource and referral activities, licensing activities, and salaries for child care providers. Funding could also be used to provide low-interest loans to family and nonprofit child care providers for renovations and improvements.

It also provides $25 million for a program of matching grants to businesses to provide child care for their employees and families in the community, if possible.

The issue of the separation of church and State is addressed in the bill in a way intended to avoid future court challenges which could delay the rapid implementation of the program. The reconciliation bill provisions link child care with education, and thus prohibit Federal funding from being used by providers engaged in religious or discriminatory practices. Certainly, no one will deny the importance of the child care services provided by our religious institutions. However, federally subsidized programs must meet constitutional requirements and comply with nondiscrimination statutes. Programs such as Head Start already are subject to such standards. The provisions of the new and expanded program would simply be subject to these same protections.

As a result, churches could provide child care services and receive Federal assistance as long as they refrained from religious teaching in the program and did not discriminate in enrollment and hiring decisions. Many Head Start programs operate in churches; there is no reason why child care services could not also be provided in or by churches. Nevertheless, this issue will be a subject of debate in conference, when the participation of religiously provided child care programs is ultimately clarified.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the reconciliation provisions are the best possible legislation at this time. Our primary objective must be to assist low-income working parents, in providing not only financial assistance, but also expanded accessibility to quality care. This bill successfully achieves this goal, while also maintaining flexibility for parents and the States. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the child care proposals included in reconciliation, and in opposing any amendments to the bill.

STATE OF MARYLAND,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, DC, October 2, 1989.

Hon. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS,
Chairman, Committee on Education and Labor, 2181 Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing in support of the child care provisions contained in the pending House Budget Reconciliation bill, H.R. 3299. While I know some of the details of the legislation still need to be worked out, I strongly support the provisions in the bill designed to guarantee quality in child care.

As you know, the lack of safe and affordable child care is a national crisis. That is why I testified in January before the U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Children and Families in support of the Act for Better Child Care, the ABC bill. The bill is an ideal complement to my child care initiatives in Maryland because it gives States the resources we need to expand child care services, while at the same time, ensuring that the child care provided is of the highest quality.

Mr. Chairman, thank you for your strong leadership on this important issue. I urge you to keep working hard to make sure that any Federal child care legislation contains quality assurance provisions.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM DONALD SCHAEFER,
Governor.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT], who has been an advocate of child care.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, as the debate draws to its close, I think we each need to examine the facts and examine what we know about the bill before us entitled H.R. 3.

First we know that H.R. 3, the child care bill, passed by the Committee on Education and Labor, could not stand on its own on the House floor and has not been brought to the House floor. It has been brought to the House floor only in a nonamendable way as part of reconciliation.

We know the only way to vote against the ABC bill, H.R. 3—we know that the House is not provided with a direct way to vote against H.R. 3. The only way to vote to delete H.R. 3 is to vote for the Stenholm-Shaw substitute. We know Mr. STENHOLM and Mr. SHAW offer child care in the right way. They accept the basics of the Downey provision on the earned income tax credit. They add funding flexibility for Head Start, and they expand title 20 on the State block grants.

We know that there is a lot wrong with the ABC bill. We know there are reasons why H.R. 3 could not come to the House floor.

The reasons are, first of all, they are mandates. We know there are 182 separate mandates in H.R. 3. I provided the House with a list of these mandates that will be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. We know that each one of these mandates will have its own separate set of regulations, and we know that there are Federal mandates on the State and local child care providers.

We know that H.R. 3 explicitly prohibits religious activity in a child care facility under this bill. We know, while it is true a church may be able to provide child care in their basement, the children in that basement will not be allowed to pray before their noon meal or sing a hymn with their morning milk.

We know the fact is that the Senate does not fix that at all. In fact, the Senate language explicitly prohibits the same religious activities in the Senate bill of the child care activities as does the House.

We have heard some vague references to perhaps it will be fixed in conference. I would submit it is not conferenceable.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, one of the reasons that I have been nervous about the child care legislation in all of its manifestations today is because of the enormous cost.

If we take the authorized amount for Hawkins, the automatic spending amount for Downey, we are talking about an expense of more than $22 billion over 5 years. And in the fourth fiscal year, fiscal year 1993, we are talking about annual expenditures of almost $7 billion. What that means, of course, is that in these out-years it becomes more and more difficult for us to reach whatever Gramm-Rudman targets are there for us.

Our problem, as I see it, is that we always have these priorities which I think are legitimate, but we never want to give up anything we already have to stretch for the higher priority. We always want the new priority but no one ever suggests that we cut anything.

Here we have annualized spending of $7 billion. And who will pay the $7 billion and the interest on it? It will be the very same children that we want to take care of. The United States has a role to play in child care, but that role should not be sending a huge bill to our grandchildren.

I raise that point because it is a great problem for me. That problem exists in all of the versions of child care before us. But I raise it also because there is great expectation that something good is going to happen to the Hawkins portion of H.R. 3 in fiscal year 1990.

On the contrary, as far as I know, there was nothing in the appropriation that this House passed that covers any of these H.R. 3 authorizations. So we are really looking at authorizations only. So anybody who is expecting his or her State to get the big bonanza may in fact receive it in fiscal year 1990, but more likely will not. There is nothing to indicate that you will get anything at this point.

For me, granting that all of these programs are very expensive, we still get down to what is the difference? The difference is whether you choose parents or whether you choose the bureaucrats.

Those of you who talk about quality care, may I submit the thought that a buildup of the bureaucracy has never been a guarantee of quality in anything. Usually, it has meant the opposite.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to both Mr. HAWKINS' child care bill, H.R. 3, and Mr. DOWNEY'S version of H.R. 3. These proposals are very expensive, and both concentrate scarce resources in the wrong places while burying the States in regulations and requirements.

The Hawkins' child care proposal is estimated to cost $1.9 billion per year by 1993. Mr. DOWNEY'S amended verison of H.R. 3 will cost a whopping $5.1 billion annually by 1994. That is real money, taxpayers' money. Before the House throws sums of that magnitude at child care, we should cure the obvious faults in these flawed child care proposals.

Child care is a serious need that has become increasingly important as more and more women enter the work force. I believe that child care needs Federal leadership and funds. But it does not need a Federal bureaucracy. Nor should it be a simple depository for the dumping of large amounts of money without clear goals.

We can pay the bureaucracy, or we can pay the parents. The Hawkins and Downey bills pay the bureaucracy. More work rules and mandates of more employees do not make child care more accessible, nor more affordable. I believe that parents are the proper ones to make child care choices.

Our main goal ought to be to give families assistance and flexibility so they can make their own decisions. I believe that parents are fully capable of making reasonably good decisions about what is best for themselves and their children.

Now 75 percent of parents choose noncenter-based care for their children. Any plan like the Hawkins or Downey plan that builds bureaucracy and regulations hurts the huge group of families who prefer to use home-based care.

The Federal Government should not be in the business of burdening families and States with overzealous and needless Federal regulations. Affordable and flexible child care options ought to be the goals of any child care bill, rather than unnecessarily burdensome standards and requirements. The States can provide needed regulations wtihout Federal mandates. All States have already established some child care regulation.

I am against the Hawkins H.R. 3 not only for its exorbitant costs but also because I think the regulations and new programs it mandates will fail miserably at improving day care in this country.

The Hawkins bill is little more than a centralized, national child care system. It expects the bureaucracy that manages AFDC and food stamps, and housing programs, to deliver good day care. If you believe that you will love the Tooth Fairy and the Great Pumpkins.

All States have some regulation for day care centers, and all but four States regulate smaller day care facilities. The Hawkins bill calls for a multitude of new regulations that are likely to drive needed providers out of the business. The Hawkins bill provides a perverse sort of protection to parents and children by denying them services, or narrowing their choices. It will create work rules, featherbedding, and unnecessary cabooses for the employees of the over-regulated centers.

Representative DOWNEY'S version of H.R. 3 is even more expensive. It is superior to the Hawkins proposal but similar. It merely substitutes title 20 for Hawkins' title 3. Its spending costs, especially in the out-years, will add up to over $15.4 billion by 1994. This would add a fat $5.1 billion in fiscal year 1994 to the Federal deficit.

The title 20 expansion is not a bad idea except that it earmarks money. The whole idea of a grant program, such as title 20, is to give the resources to the States while allowing them the flexibility to meet each States' different needs. The States know their problems better than we do. They are spending a lot of that title 20 money on day care right now. We are not smarter than our Governors and legislators and they are a lot closer to home than we are. Local control is a fundamental to success in child care as is parental choice. The Federal Government is the bully.

On the other hand, I do feel the Edwards child care bill has merit in its approach, despite its high cost. It is deserving of support simply because it is cleaner than the other versions and allows more choice for parents and States. The price tag of $14 billion by 1994 is way too high but its fundamentals are right. The EITC is a fair and correct approach, giving tax relief to low-income families.

It does not mandate certain types of child care as both versions of H.R. 3 would propose. It gives relief to those who need it most and trusts them to spend that money accordingly. By trusting the people to make their own choices and the States to draw their own regulations, it avoids the fatal flaws of the Hawkins and Downey proposals.

As my second choice, I intend to vote for the Stenholm-Shaw substitute. Although it, too, is too expensive, it is certainly less centralist and antichoice than the Hawkins bill or the Downey amendment, even if it is somewhat less attractive than the EITC expansion. The Stenholm-Shaw substitute eliminates the superfluous provisions in Hawkins' bill, such as complicated reporting requirements and cumbersome data collection. The bill also succeeds in shaving off some of the funding which is called for in the Downey version. The Stenholm-Shaw substitute uses a successful existing program, title 20, and increases its resources without the cumbersome criteria required in the other bills.

No one should be surprised that, during a time when we are coming face to face with the Gramm-Rudman hatchet, Members will vote for expenses that will make Gramm-Rudman targets unreachable in the future. To spend grandly, and probably futilely, for a newly created child care bureaucracy, does not enhance Congress' fiscal reputation, nor its legislative reputation.

Our goal ought to be to offer parents affordable day care of their choosing. The Federal Government should not be deciding when, where, and how much money should be spent towards child care—these decisions should be left to the States and individual families.

If the two flawed versions of H.R. 3 go to conference, it guarantees a flawed public law. This would be a disaster for child care as well as a huge legislative blunder. I urge my colleagues to vote for the Edwards and Stenholm-Shaw substitutes to avert a catastrophe in child care.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to the Stenholm substitute. Supporters of this substitute say they want to increase the availability and quality of child care, a worthy goal which I support. They say they also want to give States and child care providers as much flexibility as possible. Another worthy goal. But they have left one important consideration out of the equation. What do parents want?

When it comes to the child care issue, our most important constituents are the millions of mothers and fathers in America who must rely on someone else to help care for their children. A recent public opinion poll conducted just a few weeks ago found that 7 out of 10 families with young children want Federal action on child care this session. That is no small constituency. These parents are worried about the cost of care, about finding care, and about the quality of the child care they can afford. On every count, the substitute before us misses the mark.

First, consider the question of quality. The Nation's Governors have agreed that they can do a better job of assuring that federally subsidized child care is safe, reliable, and responsive to the needs of children. They support a requirement for improved State child care standards. The Stenholm substitute deletes this requirement, a bit of counterproductive second guessing in my view.

I am most troubled, however, that the substitute proposes to put Federal child care policy on automatic pilot, authorizing over $1 billion in child care funding over the next 5 years with almost no direction to the States on what to do with these funds.

Under the Stenholm substitute, States could spend the added title 20 money on everything but actual child care if they choose—from the recruitment and training of child care providers to expanding resource and referral efforts. Now all of these things probably need some attention. But, I for one, think Uncle Sam ought to require States to spend at least some of this money on what parents tell us they need most—help with the skyrocketing costs of child care.

The Stenholm substitute would also exempt child care earnings from the Social Security retirement test. This is an inequitable, administratively burdensome provision that has no place in the child care debate. It would give preferential treatment under the retirement test to one group of individuals—those with child care earnings—while excluding others with earnings from equally meritorious activities. Does this mean we should also exempt teachers' earnings or the pay of police officers fighting the war on drugs? For what reason should we violate Social Security's historic, unerring neutrality toward specific occupations by providing golden halo treatment to a single job?

Make no mistake about it, Mr. Chairman, child care is an extremely important issue. I am confident that many working parents feel, as I do, that it would probably be best for young children if one parent was at home. In today's economy, however, that just isn't possible. Child care is their only choice. Our job is to help them make that choice as safe and affordable as possible. With the Stenholm substitute, the only thing these parents would get is more empty promises.

I strongly urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the Stenholm substitute.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE].

□ 1430

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, the house of cards is collapsing. H.R. 3 and the Committee on Ways and Means proposal have been unable to stand on their own as they have been debated on the floor. So we have the majority leader come to the floor to tell Members that, "Well, do not pay much attention to what is in the bill, instead just realize that we are promising that we will do a better job in conference."

I say to all my colleagues who are on the other side of the aisle, that this debate over church-state relations is not an accident. It is not something that has just arisen.

Let me take Members through a little history. This item was discussed at great length in the subcommittee on which the gentleman from Michigan and I served during the course of the debate on this legislation. It was discussed in the full Committee on Education and Labor, and the chairman of the subcommittee offered the amendments to try to correct it. Those amendments were vigorously opposed by the groups supporting H.R. 3. It was defeated in committee. The chairman of the subcommittee went to the Committee on Rules, asked for permission to be able to offer those amendments on the floor, and can Members believe it, the subcommittee chairman was turned down—was not even given permission to offer amendments. Why? Because the interest groups said, "No."

Now, we come to the point where the problem has arisen about what are we going to do about church-provided day care. The majority leader says, "We will take care of it." Let me observe that in 1969 and 1972, the issue that brought down child care was how we were going to solve the church-state problem. It is not any easier in 1989. To suggest that promises about what will happen in conference will deal with the issue is, in my judgment, to suggest something that is unrealistic. Understand, that those who are promising are playing games.

They say, "We will ensure that we provide child care in the basements of the churches." That is not a problem. The problem is, will there be religious symbols on the wall? Will there be the ability of churches to control the personnel who are offering the child-care services? Will there be the ability to pray or tell a Bible story? The answer to all those questions, under the Senate language or the proposed House language, is no.

Yet they say, "But we will have child care in the basements of the churches." The reality is that the churches who provide child care will not accept those restrictions, and therefore the money will not flow to them, and Members will undermine the infrastructure that is providing most child care in rural America, and most child care in inner cities.

Beyond that fundamental issue, ladies and gentlemen, there is another issue here, and that issue is essentially this: Who should be empowered to make the decisions about child care? As Members of this body, do Members believe that parents will make better decisions, or do Members have more faith in the ability of governments to make decisions about child care? I can tell Members that for my part, I trust the parents of America more than I trust the bureaucrats of America. I trust the families of America, more than I trust the Government of this Nation to make decisions about child care. I believe that better decisions will be made by the parents of the Nation, and that is why it is critical that we support the Stenholm child care substitute.

Last, let me say under the Stenholm bill, the funds flow first to those who need it the most. In both the Headstart and in a tax structure, the reconciliation provision sends the money to the more wealthy. Under Headstart, they are destroying the essence of the Headstart program at a time when we serve only 17 percent of those who are currently eligible for Headstart, and they want to open it up so that 50 percent of the slots can go to the middle income families, rather than to low-income students. Under the tax structure they keep sending money to the wealthiest families in America.

The bottom line is for religious reasons, for family reasons, and for targeting reasons, we should accept the Stenholm substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] has 5½ minutes remaining, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] has 6½ minutes remaining, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] has 8 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in the midst of all this oratorical splendor, it is hard for one to control his emotions. Couched in deception, I agree with the gentleman from Florida when he says we are trying to achieve budgetary saneness.

We are, I guess, on different paths on that effort. It is hard for me to understand how we are going to attain budgetary saneness, and spending $9 million as we did yesterday, and sending money to Nicaragua, and do not even know if the money will actually get there; or spending half a billion dollars on a bomber that we do not even know will fly. We do not know yet the cost of the trial that the Federal Government spent for Colonel North, to make a kind of a hero, who can collect $25,000 or $50,000 for one speech.

I want to say to Members, as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor, I firmly support H.R. 3. I think we ought to begin to be concerned more about the children that we are trying to represent here in this august body of ours. I am sick and tired of being in the position where we talk about what we want to do, but when it comes to doing it, we do not find the time to do it.

I have a lot of respect for the gentleman from Texas, but I am much opposed to this method of trying to try to have child care for kids. I represent a district that is very poor. We do not have problems between church and state, and practically every church in my district that wants child care facilities in their church, they can have it, if they get the money to do it. H.R. 3 provides that kind of money.

I would like to see Members continue to do that, and not take this away.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3, the Early Childhood Education and Development Act as approved by the House Education and Labor Committee, and in opposition to the Stenholm and Edwards substitutes.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the House Education and Labor Committee, and one who has worked extensively on crafting the committee bill, I have been privy to hours of expert testimony and findings from some of the Nation's leading academic scholars and researchers in the area of early childhood development. Much of the information provided during our hearings, while helpful in laying the foundation for the legislative need for H.R. 3, certainly was not new. As a matter of fact, if any Members of this body has taken the time to visit with, and listen to his or her constituents, they have heard the same stories—the supply of affordable child care is severely limited, and in many cases, nonexistent.

As the U.S. Representative for the South Side of Chicago, I have seen first hand, the needs of working families and the needs of those who cannot find work.

The unfortunate reality of life in my district is that many children are growing up in single parent, female headed, households. Many of these women are unemployed and if they can find employment, cannot take advantage of it due to a lack of child care services, affordable or otherwise.

My constituents are in desperate need of affordable and safe child care services. H.R. 3 provides opportunities for my constituents to not only reenter the mainstream of society, but to also ensure the well-being of their children. I urge the Members of this Chamber to defeat all substitutes to H.R. 3 and support the Committee on Education and Labor in passing this much needed legislation.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remaining 5½ minutes to the chairman of the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, today is the end of a very long journey with how this Nation will deal with the issue of child care. Some years ago we referred to this as day care, but then we learned that the days will take care of themselves. We have to take care of the children.

When we made that fundamental shift in our minds, we had to ask, how are this Nation's children being taken care? Over the last decade, we have asked that question in every State of the Union. It has been asked by nonprofit entities. It has been asked by universities and researchers. The answer that has come back is "not very well."

The notion of the Stenholm-Shaw amendment is that somehow out there in America is an abundance of quality care, and any mother or any father can simply pick and choose among all of the quality care. It shows a basic misunderstanding of the child care supply in America today because that is not the situation. Rather, what we have is we have a hodgepodge of care. Some of it is good, and some of it is real bad, and what America's children do not need is bad care.

So, Mr. Chairman, we have got to make a decision here today, and we are about to make it in a few minutes. Either we can have a child care program that is built in the spirit of providing quality care to this Nation's children, or we can choose to have a program that is built on the model of Sam Pierce. We put the money out there, and hope for the best, and not worry about the billions of dollars.

Mr. Chairman, we should not be doing that. We should be making sure that, as we go home and tell our taxpayers, our constituents, our friends, the parents, the mothers and fathers of these children, that when we made a decision to vote for national child care policy, we made that decision to make sure that they would get the maximum return on their investment, that we made that decision that the child who will go into child care will be nurtured, will have the benefit of what we now know about child development, that we now understand that these children at very young ages are capable of so much more, that we now understand that we can take a young child and with proper care and proper nurturing we can change the course of that child's life.

My colleagues, we can dramatically improve the chances of our children for success in America. We cannot simply put a child into custodial care, we cannot simply put a child in front of a TV for 6 or 8 hours or simply put dozens of children with one caretaker. The choices that are provided under the reconciliation bill will allow us to take a generation and help them become the smartest, the fastest, the brightest children in the history of this country, and we are going to need them because we do not have very many of them. Children are falling as a proportion of our population in total numbers. Each one of them has got to be able to work to the fullest potential that they are born with, and, if we couple a quality child care bill with prenatal and maternal and child health care bills, as we have done in the past, we then can launch a child on a path of success.

My colleagues, if we do not do this, if we run away from standards, and we run away from quality, we launch our children on a path of failure.

Most of my colleagues have spent their time in Congress authorizing money and appropriating money to make up for the failures. We spend most of our time paying for our failures. Why not, why not for a moment, think about investing our constituents' money in success? That is the opportunity that is being given to us today under the proposals of the Committee on Education and Labor and the Committee on Ways and Means. This is an investment portfolio. This is a portfolio that will guarantee us a positive return on the dollars we invest.

Mr. Chairman, under Stenholm-Shaw we get the opportunity to do nothing more than we have done in the past, and that is simply spend money. No guarantees on rates of returns, no guarantees on the quality of care, no guarantees on the development of our very young children in our Nation.

This is a place in the road where we must make a decision. Are we going to do business as we have done it in the past and suffer all of the failures, or should we choose a program of quality, of care, of nurturing, of child development, and watch our children flower and succeed? That is the issue we will vote on. There are no other issues. It is the future of our children.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the child care provisions of H.R. 3299, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989. This legislation will, for the first time, give States the authority, guidance, flexibility, and financial assistance to significantly improve and expand child care opportunities for the Nation's working families. I want to thank my colleagues from the Committee on Education and Labor and the Committee on Ways and Means for their leadership in developing this bill.

Today represents a historic moment. For the first time in nearly 20 years, the Congress has the chance to approve a comprehensive child care program which will aid families throughout the Nation to fulfill their responsibilities as parents and as workers. After decades of disagreement about the role of the Federal Government in child care, we have reached consensus about what families need and what the components of a sound and responsible national child care policy should be.

CHILD CARE NEED BURGEONS IN THIS DECADE

In 1984, the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, which I chair, brought renewed attention to child care through a year-long investigation. At the end of this extensive review, the committee concluded in a unanimous report, "Families and Child Care: Improving the Options," that the need for child care far outweighed the supply of safe and reliable care, and that the Federal Government had a significant role, in partnership with States and localities and the private sector, in responding to this growing domestic need.

By 1988, 65 percent of all mothers with children under 18 were in the labor force, an increase of nearly 50 percent since 1975. With more mothers working out of economic necessity, the demand for child care has escalated. But the supply of child care, and especially of quality care, remains woefully inadequate. The result is haphazard and tumultuous arrangements for families, and too often unsafe and even dangerous environments for children.

The committee also recognized the keen and enduring importance of attending to children's development and safety needs and strongly recommended that future legislation address the quality of child care, especially in the areas of training and compensation of child care workers, through model health and safety standards, enforcement, and parental involvement. We suggested offering guidance to States to upgrade the quality of existing programs, and provide resources to do so. I continue to believe that this must be an essential element of any legislation this House approves.

RECONCILIATION MEETS QUALITY ASSURANCE TEST, STENHOLM FAILS

Mr. Chairman, I have been involved in this issue for a long time. I've seen and heard a lot about what a good national child care poicy should be.

I am extremely gratified that the reconciliation bill we are considering today includes such landmark child care legislation addressing the financial assistance families need, but one that assures that children are nurtured, healthy, and safe and that their developmental needs are being met. Many congressional committees, many State and local elected officials, key academic researchers, and hundreds of national, State, and local organizations at the grassroots level were instrumental in bringing these issues to our attention and recommending appropriate policy responses.

Mr. Chairman, this bill contains provisions which make crucial improvements over current child care practices. These provisions will improve the quality of new and existing child care services by enhancing the health and safety of children in out-of-home child care. The provisions recognize that the Federal Government can offer direction to States for improving training, monitoring, and enforcement activities, the availability of resource and referral services, and salaries and compensation of child care providers—among the most critical elements in establishing and maintaining a child care system where children are protected and parents have assurances about the health and safety of their children.

These criteria are critical, because they determine the environment in which millions of American children will spend formative years.

It is largely because of the absence of provisions in the Stenholm amendment to assure quality child care that I cannot support that substitute. The Stenholm substitute is not a policy—it gives States no guidance, provides no leadership or direction, and only pays lip service to what the child development experts have proven that children need. We cannot continue to perpetuate a system, especially with Federal dollars, that ignores the evidence about child health and development.

At a minimum, parents want and should be guaranteed peace of mind, to know that their children are safe and well cared for while they are at work. And the Federal Government has a responsibility to make sure that taxpayer dollars are not going to programs which are unsafe or inadequate. We know what quality care is and the Federal Government can offer guidance and leadership to promote that knowledge.

We are responding to a clear message from the public. In a recent Harris Poll, 89 percent of the public felt that setting standards for child care would help ensure that all facilities offer reasonably adequate care and would give parents peace of mind. Yet, in a significant number of States, even these minimum protections do not exist.

A strong quality component in our child care legislation should not be an afterthought: It must be an essential part of our program.

Our bill doesn't contain burdensome Federal standards. It doesn't force each State to meet one set of standards established by some bureaucrat in the Department of Health and Human Services.

It gives maximum flexibility to the States to meet essential quality criteria.

Mr. Chairman, the bill we are considering today provides each State with the flexibility to determine the content of its own quality standards, while helping those States with no criteria at all to move toward minimum protection for children in out-of-home care in the following areas: Group size and staff-child ratios, basic standards for health and safety, and parental involvement.

GOOD CARE HAS MORE ADVANTAGES THAN DISADVANTAGES

These criteria are not costly or intrusive—they are commonsense, proven approaches for assuring the basic health and safety of children, and include the basic standards recommended by the American Academy of Pediatrics and the American Public Health Association. Ohio and Maryland have both recently implemented new quality assurances and strengthened others, without any significant cost increase. And in these States, the supply of child care not only has not diminished, but it is increasing.

After a decade of research, there is a very strong consensus about training. When adequately trained, well-compensated and consistent carefibers are present, opportunities for positive, stimulating and nurturing child care experiences are greatest. Child care that incorporates enriching and comprehensive early childhood development components can have long-lasting and significant effects on a child's academic and social behavior and achievement.

The BankAmerica Foundation in California has also demonstrated in a model public-private venture that expanding training opportunities for family day care providers can be a powerful recruitment and retention tool. Since the implementation of this California child care initiative, the supply of family day care providers has been dramatically increased. In my own district of Contra Costa County alone, one of the original pilot sites for the initiative, the supply of family day care increased by more than 60 family day care homes with a capacity to serve over 300 children.

OVERSIGHT EASES PARENT'S FEARS/INCREASES PARENTAL INVOLVEMENT

Without adequate monitoring and regulatory enforcement, parents cannot be assured that their children are well-cared for and safe while they are at work. Yet, dwindling resources have hampered States' abilities to oversee child care in their State. I believe that the responsibility for regulatory enforcement clearly lies with the State, and I am assured by the provisions of this bill that will enable States to carry out these responsibilities regularly and with well-trained staff.

Such policies do not, however, obviate the need for parental involvement. The Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families documented that resource and referral services, as provided for under this act, not only help parents find care, but also increase their involvement by helping them become more knowledgeable about child care quality and better consumers of care generally. Resource and referral agencies also play a vital role in training child care providers and in increasing the supply of trained family day care providers. Again, California has led the way with its statewide, comprehensive child care resource and referral program that has become a model for many other States.

CHILD CARE PROVIDERS KEY TO QUALITY

We should also note that researchers have determined the importance of well-trained, well-paid, and stable staff.

Yet, as the use of child care has soared in the past decade, staff turnover has nearly tripled. And child care workers—while better educated than the average worker—have watched their salaries fall by more than 20 percent, to an average hourly wage of $5.35.

FEDERAL MONEY WITHOUT DIRECTION IRRESPONSIBLE—EVEN DANGEROUS

Last week, President Bush and all of the Governors made a major commitment of tax dollars to upgrade education. But he didn't propose simply throwing money at the problem without directing it to improve the quality of the classroom. And today, we have exactly that same obligation when we finance the child care centers in which young children are nurtured.

This Congress should not allocate billions of dollars of public funds to buy bad child care. But child care without quality criteria, child care without oversight, child care without guidance will be bad child care, and that will be bad for children.

Some say that the States individually will develop and enforce these essential quality standards on their own, based on this overwhelming research evidence. The evidence is to the contrary. The most recent State-by-State review of standards shows that many States have failed to enact these basic health and safety standards despite incontrovertible research.

We have hundreds of examples of how good child care can reap enormous benefits for children and their families. We should be building policy based on those examples. But because policies which fail to protect children persist and resources for child care, there are still children in the current child care system who are at risk. In the last 15 months alone, news accounts from around the country have reported more than 22 babies, toddlers, and small children in child care facilities who have died or been seriously injured. In addition, recent press reports include cases of neglect and accidental injury in family day care homes that were unregulated, unsafe, overcrowded, and inadequately supervised by untrained or underage providers.

The Nation watched and waited to see if 2-year-old Jessica McClure would survive after she fell down a well in the backyard of an unregulated family day care home with too many young children.

Tragically, because of the insufficiency of quality care in so many regions of this country, some families have no choice. In 1988, after the State of Illinois closed down an unlicensed family care home in Waukegan where 47 children were found spending their days in a small Cape Cod-style home, parents protested because it was the only child care alternative that they could afford.

In June, the California State Legislature passed a bill that would require smoke detectors in all day care homes—11 days after 2 babies died of smoke inhalation at a family day care home. This is not the way States would make policy—by waiting for another tragedy to strike before deciding that safety precautions are a good idea. That is why the guidance for States included in the reconciliation child care provisions is the responsible policy approach for Congress to take.

Our bill isn't micromanagement, it's responsible management of public dollars. And most important, it will not only finance more child care, it will promote—with the cooperation of States and child care providers—a quality environment for millions of children.

EARLY CHILDHOOD/SCHOOL-BASED COMPONENTS

Low-income children especially need quality environments. Head Start has provided the comprehensive early childhood and social services that the youngest, most vulnerable children need—but to less than 20 percent of the eligible low-income children. That is why earlier this year, along with a majority of my colleagues in the House, I voted for a significant 1-year increase in the Head Start authorization to extend the core group of early childhood services to more eligible children.

I also continue to fully support provisions of this bill to expand Head Start to a full-day, full-year program to meet the needs of low-income working families, and chapter 1 expansions to heighten critical school involvement in the provision of early childhood education, as well as before and after school child care for school age children.

The Stenholm substitute, however, takes us no further than we've already come. It merely increases the Head Start authorization to the same level already passed by the House last March and makes child care one of a number of authorized uses of Head Start funds.

TITLE XX APPROACH GUARANTEES FUNDS

To avoid the vagaries of an annual appropriations process, however, I support a new child care program under title XX, the social services block grant, as a substitute funding mechanism for title III of H.R. 3. I believe strongly that title XX, as an entitlement, is the more reliable funding mechanism and that adequate funds are more likely to reach those in need than through an appropriations process where funds have to be fought for every year.

STENHOLM VIOLATES CONSTITUTIONAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH/STATE

In addition, I strongly oppose the provisions in the Stenholm amendment, which when implemented would violate the constitutional separation of church and state. Almost one-third of child care is housed in church buildings, contributing significantly to the supply of quality child care in their communities. While I support their right to continue to provide nonsectarian child care for the community as a whole, I cannot support language which would expressly permit parents to use Federal money in sectarian programs.

EITC EXPANSION

Finally, as an original sponsor of the Employment Incentives Act, I strongly support the significant expansions of the earned income tax credit contained in this bill. This approach complements and is integral to comprehensive national child care policy, for there is no greater disincentive to family self-sufficiency than to work all year and still be poor.

Nearly 20 million American children and their parents—more than half of the entire poverty population—live in families where an adult works but the family is still poor. And 5.5 million of this number live in families where someone is working full time, all year round. These families live everyday at the economic margins. Minor incidents like the car breaking down or the babysitter not showing up can mean lost work days, lost jobs, and lost wages.

For the past 6 years, the economy has created jobs for millions of new entrants into the labor force—many of them mothers—but it has often failed to increase their economic security or that of their children. The minimum wage has declined in real terms to well below poverty standards. And while family incomes have largely registered real increases, among low-income families with children, family income has dropped 22 percent for the poorest families and 3 percent for the next poorest. Over the past 8 years, budget cuts in programs like AFDC and unemployment insurance have hit working poor families the hardest.

The EITC expansion in this bill is predicated on a simple proposition—the more you work, the more you benefit. The EITC presently provides low-income working parents with children a credit on their earnings, but it fails to consider family size in determining the amount of that credit. This bill would increase the amount of the EITC, adjust the credit by family size, and permit more parents to receive this credit in advance. This provision will increase the rewards from working as well as make the credit more equitable for different size families.

RECONCILIATION MOST COMPREHENSIVE APPROACH TO HELP FAMILIES

Based on what I know about child care—and I have been in this business for a long time, Mr. Chairman—the provisions in reconciliation offer the best ingredients for a child care policy that works for children and their families. I urge my colleagues to support this bill that will not only help families purchase the critical child care they need and protect their economic security, but also will allow States to build a quality child care system that has as its foremost goal, the developmental and safety needs of children.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE].

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] for yielding this time to me.

My colleagues, the need for Federal action in the area of child care is certainly indisputable. There is absolutely no sense in reviewing the lament on both sides of the aisle of the personal tragedies, missed opportunities, and the other social problems attendant to the absence of child care in this country. So, once we have admitted that there is a problem, we come down to the more difficult question of deciding how do we go about resolving the problem.

How do we go about resolving this problem and selecting between the alternatives that are before us? I would like to share with my colleagues a couple of questions I asked myself and answered in making my decision to strongly support Stenholm-Shaw.

Which of the alternatives builds on existing proven programs? Which takes what we have and builds upon that?

As my colleagues know, it is not only this piece of legislation, but other pieces of legislation that we promote in this body, where we ignore what we have done in the past, that has done well by us and been a partial remedy for the problems that we are trying to correct, and we have ignored it and tried to design something different. We have done it in the homeless area. We had people and agencies out there dealing with the homeless issue before it became fashionable for the Federal Government to deal with it, and yet, when we designed legislation, we made sure those people, those agencies who had been working on those problems, did not get it, and we are doing the same thing here. We have people, churches, and associations out there in existing structures already dealing with the problem.

Which of these two alternatives gives us the opportunity to build on what has gone before us that is already dealing with this problem? Stenholm-Shaw.

Which offers the promise of dollars, and which offers the promise of programs, promises that we, as legislators, can keep?

I say to my colleagues, when you promise money that you will not deliver, when you promise programs that you will not deliver, shame is upon you, and harm befalls those whom you've promised. It is a cruel, immoral, mischievous hoax to promise more than you can deliver, and H.R. 3 does that.

We know in this body that we authorize more than we ever know will be appropriated in these different areas. Which of these two bills makes promises that, as legislators who are responsible for delivering the goods on those promises—I say the Stenholm-Shaw meets those promises. Which of the alternatives is less likely to get the Federal Government in the day care/care business?

I urge my colleagues enthusiastically and strongly to support Stenholm-Shaw.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Chairman, we have had a very good debate. We have had a very fruitful debate, but one thing constantly came up during the debate which you as legislators are going to have to look at very carefully. Are you going to trust your vote to the Stenholm-Shaw substitute, or are you going to trust it to conferees? This is the question. When we kept bringing up one after another the shortfalls in the Hawkins-Downey proposal, we saw the Members getting up and saying, "Oh, we are going to take care of this in conference."

Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] and I went out and sought to do was to build a consensus and to build a good bill, one that we could fulfill and one that we could be proud of and one that we could finance. It is a real bill. It is truth in legislating, and I would say to you, this is your vote. Do not give your proxy to some yet unnamed conferees. You have problems with the Downey-Hawkins proposal. Exercise your vote and express your concerns by supporting Stenholm-Shaw.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT].

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, just a few years ago in this Chamber we would not have been conducting a debate on whether or not there needs to be a Federal, a national response, to the issue of child care. Today we are engaged in such a discussion, so I think congratulations are in order to all, to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM], to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS], to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY], and to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS]. We all have very carefully examined the proposals they have advanced.

I have given this a good deal of thought, because I happen to be one of those who believe that child care is one of the critical unmet needs in our society today. And after this careful examination, I have concluded that support is warranted for the Education and Labor Committee and Ways and Means Committee package.

I say that because I see it as the most comprehensive, the most thorough. I say that because I like the preschool and the after-school component. I like the idea of full-day day care because it is needed so urgently, and I like the education component. As I think of that great summit between the President of the United States and our Nation's Governors just 2 weeks ago, talking about the future of this Nation and the need to upgrade our educational system, the Hawkins-Downey measure has that critical education component.

I also think about the debate that has been conducted here about church-based centers. Not for one minute would I entertain supporting any measure that I thought would deny the opportunity for church-based child care centers, because I recognize, as we all do, their importance. That is a ruse.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good measure brought forward by the committee. I urge support for it. What better investment in our future than to invest in our children.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD].

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of Hawkins-Downey. We need the emphasis, we need the direction that is contained in Hawkins-Downey.

There is nothing, I say to my colleagues and to the ladies and gentlemen of this Nation, there is nothing any more vital to our national security than how we rear our children. Today we have parents who are paying for child care, child care that is detrimental to the development of their children. We have children who are entering kindergarten today less prepared to succeed than they were 20 years ago.

How are our children going to go out in this world and compete with our Japanese trading partners and competitors if they are not prepared to succeed in school?

We are not talking merely about child care any longer. We are talking about early childhood education. Child care is no longer graham crackers, juice and wiping runny noses. It is early childhood education.

We in this country must provide every child with the right for the very best rearing that is possible, whether that is with the parents, whether that is in an institution, or whether that is in another home, they have that right. Early childhood education, we know a dollar invested will save $4.75 in reduced welfare, reduced crime, and reduced unemployment. Early childhood education, expanded day care, expanded year, and expanded, yes, to the working poor, this is what our children need now. Let us support Hawkins-Downey.

The CHAIRMAN. To close out the debate, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] is recognized for 7 minutes.

REQUEST FOR MODIFICATION TO AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STENHOLM

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of debate I asked for unanimous consent to offer a technical correction to our amendment that inadvertently would do damage to Medicaid recipients. I now ask for that same unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modification to amendment offered by Mr. STENHOLM: In section 11911(d)(2)(B) of the amendment, insert at the end of paragraph (1) of the matter proposed to be inserted as a new section 402(d) of the Social Security Act the following: "Any such refund or payment shall not be considered as income or a resource for purposes of determining eligibility, or the amount of benefits payable, under title XIX.".

Mr. STENHOLM (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the modification to the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague, the gentleman from Florida, if he would concur that should our amendment pass, it would certainly be our intention as members of the conference to see that this correction be in the final resolution of this question.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I certainly would concur with the gentleman, and I am sure my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] would also see that that correction was made in conference.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for that.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STENHOLM. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I thought that we were being criticized for trying to adopt something in conference. Is the gentleman suggesting that the current proposal is not affected, and that the gentleman is going to do it sometime possibly in conference also?

Mr. STENHOLM. No, sir. The chairman well knows this is a technical correction that was inadvertently omitted. It has already been objected to. The question is resolved. The chairman knows full well what this amendment does.

Mr. HAWKINS. No, this gentleman does not know. Is the gentleman saying it is only technical?

Mr. STENHOLM. Yes.

Mr. HAWKINS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, we are now at the end of the debate. We have a very, very clear choice before us. If you vote for Stenholm-Shaw you do correct a lot of things that bother all of us, many of us, some of us, concerning the H.R. 3 ABC bill.

There is very little dispute with the Ways and Means Committee on the job they have done.

We have heard letters quoted from the Governors, and I would just read the last paragraph of the last letter from Governor Clinton in which he says:

I personally prefer the Senate ABC bill and will gladly support H.R. 3 if its provisions on training and inspection requirements for the states can be made consistent with the Senate bill.

That was a letter to the chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS].

That is again why many of us decided to have a substitute. There are so many corrections that need to be made, or differences of opinion, I should say, of various Members of this body that need to be made.

□ 1500

I commend the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] for the hard work that he has put in on this in working in a bipartisan way to offer the Members a clear choice today. We can do the things, whether it be on religion and the debate that we have had there, and it is interesting if there is no problem today why we have had to have statement after statement that if we go to conference we are going to clear up the problem.

Read the bill. Read the bill. There are tremendous problems in H.R. 3, and if Members vote against Stenholm-Shaw, they are in fact voting for going to conference on H.R. 3, and they are then going to put their vote, their representation of their people back home on the line in a conference in which they cannot possibly know the outcome.

Let me say that we do have a clear choice today. To those who suggest that there is something wrong with letting the family be the first decider of what is adequate child care, I disagree with that. It is one of the major reasons why I am in this well and why we have worked so hard for a compromise. I believe the family, not the Federal Government, is the best judge of what the child care programs and facilities of this country ought to be.

We provide new money, $17 billion of money, that we do not have in the budget, folks, but we provide it. We have been told that is not nearly enough.

We suggest that there is something wrong with going off on a program, increasing the funding for other new programs for the nonpoor when we are not adequately taking care of the current poor, and we have been told that we are wrong for doing that. We suggest we ought to trim back the benefits for those making over $90,000 in order to have some more money available in the appropriating process, not in the authorizing process, and we have been told that there is something wrong with that.

We have been told that there is something wrong with allowing our States, and that our States do not have the capability of deciding what is safe child care, and that is ridiculous. That is ridiculous.

We have been told that local governments are not the best. What H.R. 3 says is we have to have a supermandate from the Federal Government in order to deliver child care. I disagree with that.

Those who vote with us today are going to be saying very clearly they agree with us and disagree that the Federal Government is the all-wise determiner of child care for our children.

CHARLIE STENHOLM and those who vote with me care deeply about child care, but believe that the family should be the first decider, and the Federal Government the last decider. That is the choice under the rule.

Members either vote with us, and if they vote no, they are saying by their vote that H.R. 3 and all of those things that are being promised to be taken out are going to go to conference, and they are going to depend on that conference to put together a final resolution to provide child care.

My vote is not to be that way. I am going to cast it with a clear choice, and I hope the Members join with us in support of the Stenholm-Shaw amendment today, which I truly believe will deliver the child care that all of us have talked about today and would want to see, and do it in a much more honest and affordable manner.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Chairman, there is very little disagreement today on the importance of child care. We need to take decisive action to meet the needs of our young families in today's society.

To my mind, these initiatives are provided by the Stenholm-Shaw amendment, which I am supporting today.

I cannot, in good conscience, support the child care provisions contained in the Hawkins-Downey proposal, because I believe that bill does not do what the people of this country really want.

Earlier this week, we voted to repeal the catastrophic health care law, which was sold to us as the greatest thing since sliced bread in 1988, until our senior citizens began to read the fine print.

The child care provisions in this bill, the so-called Hawkins-Downey provisions, will do to us tomorrow, in the eyes of our American families, what the catastrophic health care law has done in the eyes of our seniors, and we will be back here trying to fix this bill.

I find it hard to believe that there are those in this House who are not content with taxing our parents and our grandparents, but also want to license them to care for their grandchildren.

Among my reasons for supporting the Stenholm-Shaw amendment while not being able to support Hawkins-Downey without change are—parents, not the Government, should determine how children should be raised.

We should not tax families even further while creating a Government day care empire, but rather to make available financial resources to families with children.

Stenholm-Shaw would not create a huge Government day care bureaucracy. It promotes parental choice by directing resources to low-income parents with young children rather than by financing a wasteful bureaucracy and Government-controlled day care centers.

Stenholm-Shaw would not seek to convert public schools into day care centers. It continues to channel Head Start funds toward disadvantaged children. And, it seeks to expand choices for parents who wish religious instruction for their children.

But, mainly I oppose the Hawkins-Downey provisions because they turn our care givers into bureaucrats and our grandparents into licensees of the State if they wish to provide the care that they naturally have provided since the beginning of time.

Hawkins-Downey imposes a vast array of new regulations on grandparents.

To receive the social service block grant [SSBG] day care funds provided in current provisions of Hawkins-Downey, a grandmother caring for her own grandchild must comply with a variety of federally mandated regulations including building standards in her home, safety standards, nutrition regulations, injury prevention and treatment regulations, child abuse prevention regulations, and health regulations. In addition, care givers would be inspected periodically by the State government to verify compliance with redtape.

And, the redtape doesn't stop with grandparents. A woman seeking to have her next-door neighbor care for her child would face even greater regulatory barriers—she would be required to take 15 hours of annual training and would be required to provide a written statement of her child care program goals to the parent.

Unamended, the Hawkins-Downey provisions will give money to institutions, not parents.

It gives the Government, rather than parents, the right to select what child care will be subsidized.

And, it discriminates against parents who care for their own children.

In short, Mr. Speaker, our choice is clear. Do we want to license our grandparents, or give them our help to provide the loving care that they offer? Do we want paperwork jockeys or care givers for our children? Do we want to provide opportunities for real individual choice, or a new bureaucracy that will eat our money and little else?

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this is one vote that will be studied very closely, the way the catastrophic health care vote has been studied, and at the end of the day, I believe the supporters of the Stenholm-Shaw amendment will be seen as the visionaries when this law comes back to haunt the Members of this House.

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Chairman, I urge you today to vote for children. I urge you to vote for a proven effective early childhood development program, and I urge you to offer more low income children an opportunity to be better prepared to face the social and economic realities of this competitive world. I am urging you to vote for Head Start.

For every $1 invested in quality preschool programs like Head Start, between $4 and $7 are saved down the road because of the positive, lifelong impact of early childhood education. Despite this profitable investment in our Nation's youth, Head Start services in my State had to be reduced last year. Maine was only able to give approximately 1,600 low-income children a better chance for success, but those 1,600 kids had a head start in life. The $8.3 million more that Maine will receive under the Downey-Hawkins child care package will provide Head Start service for hundreds of additional children. I believe those kids are worth the effort.

The Stenholm amendment provides no new support for Head Start. Head Start requires additional funding. I urge you to leave the current reconciliation child care language intact, and by doing so, to ensure a child care package of early childhood development programs, and tax credits. Let's give the children of this Nation what they need—a proven head start in life—a better chance.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the Hawkins-Downey provisions in H.R. 3299. There has been a lot of talk here on the floor today about freedom. Hawkins-Downey ensures one of the most basic freedoms we know—the freedom to work. The Stenholm substitute, on the other hand, is inadequate in supplying quality, affordable child care to allow mothers to get off welfare and go to work. Instead, Stenholm could make parents ineligible for other means-tested programs and, thus, would leave some poor families even worse off.

It is true that Stenholm will provide extra money for parents to pay the rent, the electric bill, and maybe buy groceries and some new clothes for the children. But the amendment does not provide these parents with an affordable child care system which allows them peace of mind to know that their kids are being cared for while they earn their paycheck.

Our choice today is between passing a comprehensive child care bill and essentially expanding the earned income tax credit and title XX. I am certainly not opposed to expanding the EITC and title XX—I think this is necessary. However, we should call a spade a spade here. Stenholm is hardly a child care bill. Therefore, we should not treat these two proposals as different approaches to the same solution. They do not seek to do the same thing.

If we want to pass a child care bill, we should vote against the Stenholm amendment.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Stenholm child care amendment and in support of the Hawkins-Downey child care provisions contained in H.R. 3299.

The United States is in the midst of a severe child care shortage. Presently, three out of five mothers with children under the age of 6 work outside the home. It is estimated that the number of children requiring care outside the home will grow from 6 million now, to 14.6 million by 1995.

The provisions included in the budget reconciliation package do a lot to meet this growing need. The Stenholm proposal, however does little to assist families who need child care services. This substitute puts relatively little new money into child care services. It does not provide the substantial increase in Head Start funding, new money for school-based care, or the extensive funding for infant and toddler care contained in the reconciliation package. In fact, under the Stenholm substitute, the State of California would receive only $22.7 million, as compared to $196.8 million in child care assistance we would be entitled to under the reconciliation provisions.

American families need the assurance that their children will be cared for in a safe facility and are cared for by qualified, well-trained professionals. The child care provisions included in the reconciliation package provides these assurances. Neither the Stenholm nor the Edwards substitutes offer these guarantees to our Nation's families. The minimum Congress can do is to provide for families the same health and safety promise it offers to auto or steel workers or to truck drivers.

The Stenholm substitute purports to provide the same expansion of the earned income tax credit that was approved by the Ways and Means Committee. This is not true. Under the Stenholm amendment, the effect on low-income families of electing to take advantage of the expanded EITC would be a loss in other benefits, such as AFDC, Medicaid, and assisted housing. Unlike the Ways and Means Committee language, the Stenholm amendment would repeal a provision of current law that specifies that the EITC not be counted as income for purposes of determining AFDC eligibility. The Stenholm amendment also does not include the same specification approved by the Ways and Means Committee that the EITC is not to be counted as income for purposes of determining benefits for other means-tested programs.

This is not what the Ways and Means Committee set out to do when we voted on an expansion of the earned income tax credit for low-income families.

When you vote today, support a comprehensive child care policy that provides early childhood education, that provides health and safety protections, and that meets the needs of America's families, and vote against the Stenholm amendment.

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute amendments on child care being offered today and in support of the child care provisions in the budget reconciliation bill.

In Philadelphia alone, 26,000 parents had to leave a job or refuse an employment opportunity because quality day care for their children was not available. That represents nearly one in five Philadelphia families. Furthermore, for every 1 child receiving day care in Pennsylvania, 10 others must go without.

These figures stagger the mind and force us to face up to the dire need for assistance in child care all over our Nation. It is a myth that mothers work outside the home only to expand their horizons and extend their careers. In fact, for many American women, their paychecks are their family's only protection from poverty. Almost two-thirds of all mothers in the work force are single, widowed, separated, divorced, or have husbands who earn less than $15,000 annually. The bottom line is that American mothers work out of economic necessity.

Therefore, we must pass legislation to address the critical problems related to child care across the Nation. This legislation includes a comprehensive child care policy to meet the concerns of all American families. In addition to providing resources for low-income families to purchase adequate day care, the provisions in the bill ensure minimum standards for health, safety, and education of young children. It also expands the Head Start Program for early childhood education and full-day child care services.

On the other hand, the substitutes we have before us today would replace the child care program with an expansion of the earned income tax credit [EITC] and cut the minimum standard requirements. Many families will be ineligible for the EITC available under the substitutes. Furthermore, tax credits alone will not provide the funds necessary to obtain reasonably priced day care in many areas of our country. The substitutes allow approximately $215 annually for a school-age child and $645 annually for a child under 6. Yet, day care for the same children would cost at least $2,500 each year. Obviously, these credits fall far short of the needs of low-income families.

Mr. Chairman, we often refer to our children as our Nation's greatest resource. Yet, our priorities do not reflect that. One in four children in America lives in poverty—in Philadelphia, that number is one in three. The children of the working poor are not only so-called latchkey kids, they also lack basic health insurance.

Today, we have legislation before us to begin to address the glaring needs of children in America and I fully support the child care program in this bill. I ask my colleagues to support this measure as well.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I commend my colleagues for laboring for over 2 years on child care legislation. I know of no more important pursuit than ensuring the health and welfare of our children.

It is with the well-being of our children in mind that I urge caution as we consider child care legislation. I fear that our concomitant actions on child care, together with other new initiatives and the budget, may cause our children more long-term harm than short-term good.

Lest anyone be mistaken, each of the major child care alternatives before us is incredibly expensive. Let me begin with the Education and Labor child care provisions in the reconciliation bill. These provisions set authorization levels which double from a little over a half a billion in fiscal year 1990 to $1.1 billion in fiscal year 1994 for Head Start and three new grant programs. In fact, by fiscal year 1994 the Federal Government would be spending more on child care than on such major programs as the Job Corps, Impact Aid, and Refugee Assistance.

Ironically, the Education and Labor provisions are a mere drop in the bucket compared to those of Ways and Means which combine an increase in title XX with an expansion in the earned income tax credit. The cost of these proposals will skyrocket from $137 million in fiscal year 1991 to over $5 billion annually by fiscal year 1994.

Over 5 years, the child care provisions in H.R. 3299 will cost the Nation over $15 billion. In effect, we would be spending more on child care than we do on all job training programs and a little less than half as much as we do on all elementary, secondary, and vocational programs. Moreover, Congress will have little ability to control spending for these programs because they are largely entitlements which are not subject to the appropriations process.

It is really outrageous that we are poised to open up a brandnew area of Federal spending commitments at the same time we are struggling to meet our prior commitments. I ask my colleagues to consider the budgetary implications of what we are about to do today.

First, passage of the reconciliation proposals or the proposed amendments will increase the amount of deficit reduction we must achieve over 5 years by $15 to $22 billion. Do not be misled into thinking that child care is somehow free. Ultimately, any money spent on child care will come out of the hide of other programs * * * or from increased taxes.

Second, this legislation will place more pressure on domestic discretionary programs which have borne the brunt of past budget cuts.

Third, this legislation will impede our ability to respond to new challenges and crises. I need not remind my colleagues of the trouble we are having in coming up with enough money for a modest drug program.

Fourth, this bill will signal to the already skeptical credit markets that we are not serious about grappling with the deficit.

Last, unanticipated program growth might have long-term budgetary consequences. One need only recall the creation of a small public assistance program for the elderly which transformed into a virtually universal Social Security Program which accounts for a quarter of all Federal spending. Or the small Medicare Program begun in the mid-1960's.

What most disturbes me is that we have the audacity to justify this commitment of Federal dollars on behalf of our children when they are the ones who will bear the burden of the resulting debt. After all, it is our children who will have to make sacrifices to cover the growing interest payments on the debt. It is our children who will suffer a lower standard of living as resources are diverted from investment to consumption related activities. And it is our children who may one day be squeezed out of the housing market as massive Federal borrowing forces up interest rates.

In conclusion, I ask my colleagues to carefully weigh the budget implications of the bills before us along with their substantive merits. Let us not only ask how we can provide our children quality child care but also how we can ensure they have the opportunity to share in the prosperity we have so long enjoyed.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, one of the questions raised on the child care issue is whether this legislation will allow Federal child day care moneys to be used to pay for those services which are housed in religious institutions.

Church and synagogue child care programs represent as much as one-third of all child care centers in the United States. These programs have contributed in significant ways to meeting pressing child care needs in this country. We all recognize that some of the finest examples of child care today are found in the basement of our local churches.

Unfortunately, the child care provisions of the ABC bill would prohibit child care providers housed in a religious institution from receiving ABC funds if the center engages in any sectarian instruction or any other religious-oriented activity. This takes away an important right of the family, the parents, to make the decision as to what kind of child care is best for their child.

I do intend to support the committee version of the child care legislation today, but with the understanding that the Democratic leadership here in the House of Representatives is committed to accepting the Senate position that will make religious institutions eligible for child care assistance. The leadership has announced today that it is indeed working toward that end, and I have received a letter of intent from the leadership of how it will resolve the religious question when this legislation goes to conference committee with the Senate.

It's very important that low-income families be permitted to select the child care setting of their choice, and that should include sectarian care, if that is their wish. The issue we are debating is to provide quality and affordable child care for our Nation's children. I do not want to undo the excellent work that has come out of the Ways and Means and the Education and Labor Committees on the child care debate. With the assurances of the House Democratic leadership, I can cast my vote in good faith against the Stenholm amendment and for the committee bill, knowing that my vote today in favor of the committee bill will be resolved in conference with the Senate in a way that will not deny parents the right to choose the type of care that they feel is most appropriate for their children.

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 4, 1989]

THE HOUSE VOTES ON CHILD CARE

Until now the Senate and House have done pretty well with the child care issue. The Senate in passing a bill this spring moved from just the federal spending program originally envisioned by sponsors to a more appealing mix of spending and tax credits, and gave some needed recognition to the good sense of most of the states by making the spending program less prescriptive. The great but correctable flaw in the Senate work is that it would open the door to public funding of sectarian child care programs.

The House committees tried to avoid this church-state problem. They made the interesting suggestion that some of the grant money be funneled through existing institutions—Head Start and the schools—instead of a brand new child care program. On the tax side—in the name of, but not limited to, child care—they proposed a major expansion of aid to the working poor.

A good combination of increased aid to the poor and for child care seemed likely to be the result in conference. But two amendments are to be offered on the House floor that would jeopardize that outcome by carrying the dilution of the spending programs too far.

The first, by the House Republicans, would knock out the spending programs entirely. The House venture into child care would be only what the president proposed—an expansion of the existing refundable earned-income tax credit or negative income tax for the working poor with children, no matter whether the mother is in the work force or stays home. That's fine as aid to the poor but doesn't do what the government should about either child care or early-childhood education. The House is expected to vote it down.

It should vote down the second even more emphatically. Billed as a compromise between the Democratic and Republican approaches, this would in fact be an evisceration of the Democratic proposals by another name. Offered by Rep. Charles Stenholm of Texas, it would (1) partly vitiate the increase in the earned-income tax credit by reducing welfare and certain other forms of aid to the poor accordingly; (2) give limited child care grants to the states but with almost no instructions, so that the federal government would lose all ability to direct the use of the funds; and (3) endorse the spending of the money in sectarian programs, if parents chose, through the use of vouchers.

It would be better if child care weren't part of the massive reconciliation bill in the House. It deserves to be taken up separately. But that is spilled milk. The serious legislating is now going to be done in a conference committee. The House by killing these amendments will be able to enter the conference with a full deck.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in vigorous support of the Medicare and Medicaid Health Budget Reconciliation Amendments of 1989 which include an important package of Medicaid initiatives and improvements in the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant to reduce infant deaths and improve the health of the Nation's children. I want to thank my colleague Mr. WAXMAN, chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, for his outstanding leadership and unwavering persistence on behalf of the health of the Nation's women and children.

This bipartisan package draws on legislation I introduced, along with Mr. WAXMAN and most of the Democratic members of the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, the Child Investment and Security Act. This act would implement a multiyear, cross program strategy to ensure that all eligible young children receive the services of a core group of proven, cost-effective prevention programs, including Medicaid, WIC, and the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant, among others.

The legislation we are considering today would continue to build on critical Medicaid reforms enacted in recent years by phasing in mandated Medicaid coverage for: First, pregnant women and infants living in families earning up to 185 percent of the Federal poverty level; second, children up to age 18 in families with incomes up to 100 percent of the Federal poverty level; and third, certain groups of children with disabilities.

The bill package also takes some important first steps to reduce bureaucratic barriers that keep so many women and children out of care, and requires States to improve Medicaid payments to physicians to enhance their participation in the program.

In addition, a critical component of welfare reform enacted last year, transitional Medicaid coverage for AFDC recipients who obtain employment, would be extended at State option for an additional 12 months.

This bill also reexamines the intent and scope of services currently provided under the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant and makes significant improvements in the existing program to assure the health of pregnant women, infants, and children, including children with special health care needs.

INFANT MORTALITY INITIATIVES

Mr. Chairman, in the past few years, Congress has made significant advances toward assuring that certain vulnerable groups of women and children have access to essential preventive health care. But new studies show that despite our efforts, the problem continues to outstrip our response.

Every year in this decade nearly 1.5 million women give birth without receiving adequate prenatal care or receiving none at all. For black women, the percentage getting early comprehensive care has actually declined over the last decade. This is especially disheartening in light of new evidence from a recent California study which found that as the level of prenatal care rose, the rates of low birthweight decreased, vastly decreasing the likelihood of infant death and disability. Adequate prenatal care has even more salient effects among black infants than among whites.

Black babies are twice as likely as white infants to be born dangerously small, and this racial disparity has been increasing. As a result, the black-white differential in infant deaths during the first month of life reached its widest point in 1986.

Regardless of race, Mr. Chairman, when families have no health insurance, the health of their baby is placed in great jeopardy. A study released just last month of more than 100,000 births in the San Francisco Bay area revealed that babies whose parents have no health insurance are about 30 percent more likely than those from insured families to die or be seriously ill at birth.

Limited access to care is taking a serious toll, according to the National Center for Health Statistics. In 1987, the percentage of infants born at low birthweight, the greatest determinant of infant death and disability, actually rose for both black and white infants to the highest level observed since 1979.

Mr. Chairman, many of my colleagues are familiar with the indisputable evidence that in addition to saving lives, a dollar invested in early, comprehensive prenatal care of high-risk women saves more than $3 in hospitalization costs during the first year of life. The Southern California Child Health Network also reported that, by investing $43.2 million to provide health care to the 36,000 pregnant women who go without prenatal care each year, that State alone would achieve a net savings of over $30 million through avoided hospitalization of newborns.

HOME VISITING

Hearings held by the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families have confirmed that in addition to financial barriers, significant bureaucratic, cultural and social impediments contribute to compromising early, comprehensive prenatal care. Both the prestigious Institute of Medicine and the National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality recommended that priority be given to eliminating such barriers.

I am especially gratified that a provision from my bill, "The Child Investment and Security Act," to provide support through Medicaid funding for one of the most promising approaches to overcoming these barriers—prenatal and post partum home visitation services—has been incorporated into this bill. The provision would allow States the option of covering prenatal and postnatal home visits under Medicaid to provide a more stable source of funding, essential to the success of such programs. The bill also is designed to allow State flexibility in designing a home visitor program and in utilizing skilled nurses or trained lay workers, depending on whether the program includes direct medical services or social support and referral.

Mr. Chairman, home visitor programs have proven to be an important source of social support as well as an effective method of delivering primary care services to at-risk populations, especially pregnant women and infants. A preliminary GAO review of home visiting as a way to improve child health and well-being reveals that researchers and practitioners alike believe that home visiting is a cost-effective and efficient way to improve health and decrease the risk of child abuse and developmental delay.

According to the Institute of Medicine, ample data show that with social support, high-risk women can be helped to obtain adequate prenatal care to secure the ancillary services they need. The National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality also recommended a home visitors program for pregnant women and new mothers, particularly those in high-risk populations.

CHILD HEALTH CARE

New evidence from the Office of Technology Assessment warns that older children are increasingly at risk as well. Nearly 5 million adolescents ages 10 to 18 were without public or private health coverage in 1987, an increase of 25 percent since 1979. Not surprisingly, Mr. Chairman, OTA also documented that adolescents in poor or near-poor families are much more likely to be uninsured than others.

That is why I am especially pleased to support the provisions in this bill which phase in mandated Medicaid coverage for children up to age 18 in poor families, perhaps the most medically neglected of all age groups.

MODEL APPLICATION AND OUTREACH

A select committee report, "Opportunities for Success: Cost-Effective Programs for Children, Update 1988," documented that a core group of successful, cost-effective programs targeted to pregnant women and children ages 0 to 6 are often denied to a significant proportion of the high-risk eligible population.

While Congress has made substantial progress in extending eligibility for the most vulnerable under Medicaid, this alone has not always ensured that all Medicaid eligible women and children receive any or all of the services they need. Because there are different authorities and requirements for the variety of Federal programs serving this population, coordination and better access could help improve health outcomes. One step to enhance coordination and accessibility is to simplify the often overwhelming and complicated application process for program recipients.

The bill we are considering today includes another provision from my "Child Investment and Security Act," which directs the Secretary of Health and Human Services to develop, in consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, a "model application" form for use in applying simultaneously for the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant Program, the Medicaid Program, the Migrant and Community Health Centers Program, the grant program for the homeless, the WIC Program, and the Head Start Program.

In addition, this bill includes language similar to that passed in the recent WIC authorization to improve coordination among two of the most successful programs—Medicaid and WIC. States would be required to coordinate their Medicaid operations with their WIC operations, and to notify and refer all women who are pregnant, breast-feeding, or postpartum, and all children below age 5 who are Medicaid eligible of the availability of WIC benefits. This provision is especially timely and compelling given the increasing uniformity in eligibility for these two programs.

COMMUNITY-BASED SERVICES FOR DISABLED CHILDREN

Finally, as the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families has learned, families with disabled children or other family members who desperately want to care for them at home, have been forced to institutionalize them because of Medicaid's current funding bias. These families will now have an expanded opportunity for community-based alternatives under the "Community and Facility Habilitation Services Amendments" included in this bill.

This new State Medicaid option relieves States of the restrictive eligibility criteria and other administrative burdens imposed by the current waiver authority. I am especially pleased that the bill would require that if the State elects this option, they must provide a core group of critical support services, including respite care, case management, and personal attendant care.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Chairman, we have made progress in recent years. Let's continue to move forward and build on what we know works. I urge my colleagues to join in support of this critical and timely legislative package for the Nation's children.

NOT VOTING—6

□ 1522

Mr. JONES of North Carolina changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of this year, we had a tremendous opportunity to face up to the deficit. We had a new President, a new Congress, and a growing public awareness of the need to put our fiscal house in order. The failure to take advantage of this opportunity is expressed in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989. As a vigorous advocate of real, credible deficit reduction, I cannot vote for this legislation.

When we decided in the spring that this would be the year for a "slide by budget," I thought we were making a mistake. I believed that we could and should do much more to reduce the deficit than just try and get by. As disappointing as the "slide by" decision was, it never occurred to me that it would result in a budget reconciliation bill that would make our deficit problems worse. Yet that is exactly what this legislation does. The deficit will actually increase if this legislation is passed.

Whatever semblance of budget discipline that existed at the beginning of this year's legislative process has all but disappeared in recent weeks. In the process of considering this legislation, we have waived the rules of the House and of the Budget Act in an effort to pretend that we are meeting our responsibilities to reduce the deficit. In addition to abandoning fiscal responsibility, we have fully retreated on several important health policy initiatives, and have begun the assault on tax reform.

I have been particularly distressed with the cynicism of the President's economic advisors, and their supporters in the Congress, in their approach to the entire budget debate. The Director of the Office of Management and Budget has taken great pleasure in decrying "now-nowism:" The pursuit of immediate gratification rather than planning for the future. Yet they have substituted "slide-by" budget plans, blue smoke and mirrors, "off-budget" financing, and short term revenue "surges" for sound budget discipline. The President's budget advisors have been driven by political concerns, with little, if any, regard for the real consequences of their budgetary actions.

Sooner or later the President must face up to his responsibility to lead the deficit reduction effort. Passage of this legislation will make his job that much tougher. But make no mistake, it is his job, and his alone.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, as one who has long opposed deceptive actions by the Congress, I take this time to share with the American people some of the budget gimmicks, fiscal chicanery, and program expansions contained in this year's budget reconciliation bill. In many instances this legislation is a victory of form over substance and appearance over reality.

Here are some examples of the smoke and mirrors being used to achieve the bogus savings in fiscal year 1990 as reported in this bill: $420 million is to be saved under the agriculture title by returning the financial assistance corporation to an off-budget status; $1.7 billion is to be saved by taking the Postal Service off-budget; by accelerating from fiscal 1991 to fiscal 1990 the Postal Service's payment to the Federal Government for worker's compensation benefits, the bill claims to reduce the deficit by $330 million; Medicare payments to hospitals and health providers are delayed for 2 days starting in fiscal year 1990 to produce claimed savings of half a billion dollars, and payments are suspended for 5 days at the end of fiscal year 1990 for an additional savings of $2 billion. Bookkeeping gimmicks like these may help us meet the deficit targets under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law, but they ignore the reality that Congress is still spending well beyond its means.

Not only does this bill claim false savings of nearly $5 billion, it also undertakes an expansion of the Medicaid Program that will cost an additional $200 million in fiscal year 1990 alone. We have no estimate on what this expansion will cost in the future. Consequently, we are unable to predict its budgetary impact. Clearly, a provision to expand the Medicaid Program is inappropriate in a budget reconciliation bill. Given the content of this legislation, its no wonder the people of this country hold this Congress in such low esteem.

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 3299, the Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, reconciles little, aggravates a lot, and ought not to pass this House.

As we consider this bill, we need to stop and ask what we're supposed to accomplish with it. Our objective is supposed to be to adjust entitlements and revenues sufficiently to reduce the deficit to the level required under Gramm-Rudman. Otherwise, we face the across-the-board cuts known as sequestration.

Sad to say, the reconciliation process has been infected with the unfortunate legislative disease of rank expediency. We stuff as much unfinished business as we can into this hapless parliamentary creature—business that is wholly ungermane to the real purpose of reconciliation. We've acquired the habit of focusing so much on a mish-mash of short-term goals that we're sacrificing sound, long-term budget policy and, with it, real deficit reductions.

In May, I voted against the fiscal year 1990 budget resolution because I believed that it neither reflected the honest economic assumptions nor prescribed the responsible decisions that we needed to get the deficit under control. And now I see a budget reconciliation bill that uses the same accounting tricks and indulges in the same economic self-deception to meet the immediate need of meeting fiscal year 1990 deficit reduction targets.

The bill would defer benefit payments for disabled postal employees, accelerate agriculture deficiency payments, defer 50 percent of postal employee lump sum retirement benefits, and freeze or defer physician payments under Medicare. And all this under the guise of deficit reduction.

How long are we going to go on trying to fool ourselves and the public? These provisions are not reductions in spending. They are accounting maneuvers that don't save us a cent. Congress is becoming a master in the art of delaying the inevitable.

That makes prospects for reaching Gramm-Rudman targets in fiscal year 1991 even less likely, and the likely consequences down the road even more alarming. In fiscal year 1991, we will face having to reduce the deficit by over $60 billion. There won't be $60 billion in shifted paydates or other gimmicks available next year. We may finally have to face reality.

And what about the following years? The House voted last week for a reduction in the capital gains tax. After an initial and temporary increase in revenues, this provision alone will spill $20 billion more in red ink over 5 years. This isn't sound economic policy—it's a disastrous continuation of shortsighted appeal to immediate gratification and quick-fix budgeting that have characterized the last decade. As we proceed willy-nilly to borrow more and more from abroad to finance our overconsumption, we're putting our economic security and our children's future at grave risk.

At the same time that we avoid dealing straightforwardly with deficit reduction, we're making enormous policy decisions on issues ranging from child care to pension reform to catastrophic health insurance that have no business being in a reconciliation bill. Too often, other factors that drive this bill mean that we're making decisions on those extraneous issues without the open debate and full consideration they deserve. Those issues are important, and each deserves to be considered on its own, not lumped together into one 1,935-page document.

I urge my colleagues to oppose this bill. We need to send a strong message to the public, to the administration, and to one another that we are able to impose better discipline on our own process, make some tough choices, and face the budget deficit in a responsible manner.

Mr. LIGHTFOOT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to voice my support for the omnibus budget reconciliation of 1989. I am not wholly convinced this is the most responsible reconciliation package this body could adopt. However, the bill contains numerous improvements over current law which I strongly support.

I am tremendously relieved my colleagues saw the wisdom of repealing the section 89 restrictions. These so-called nondiscrimination requirements were counterproductive and extremely burdensome. I was pleased to support the amendment offered by my colleague, Mr. ARCHER. The section 89 repeal is, in my view, a critical component of this legislation.

I also was pleased to see the House adopt the amendment by Congresswoman ROUKEMA to repeal the Visclosky amendment on pension plan management. The Roukema amendment corrected a glaring problem in this reconciliation package.

Additionally, as a member of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee, I was pleased to support the successful amendment offered by my committee chairman, Congressman ANDERSON, to restore the aviation trust fund tax trigger as in current law. In this way, we can protect the integrity of the aviation trust fund and ensure the correct future use of the taxes paid by aviation users.

A major factor in my support of this package is the inclusion of the temporary capital gains tax rate reduction. The impact of capital gains taxes upon investment and productivity in this country is significant. This 2-year reduction in this capital gains tax rate will go a long way toward increasing investment in the United States, and will also bring in higher levels of tax revenues to the Treasury. The future indexation of capital gains for inflation goes a long way toward improving fairness in our Tax Code. It's also good news for farmers.

Statistics show that over half of all taxpayers showing capital gains had incomes of $50,000 or less—not the wealthy taxpayers many of the capital gains cut opponents claim. While I am a supporter of restoring full deductibility for individual retirement accounts [IRA's] as was proposed as an alternative to the capital gains reduction, the IRA provision also had a tax increase attached to it—I have consistently voiced my opposition to tax increases and will not support such a move.

Another provision in this bill is of major importance to farmers, and that is the extension of the 25-percent deduction for health insurance premiums paid by self-employed individuals. While I would like to see a permanent, full deduction for these premiums for farmers, I am glad to see at least a partial deduction extended under this bill.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, the reconciliation bill addressed the issue of catastrophic health care. I voted in favor of an amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1989. Hundreds of seniors from my district contacted me to express their opposition to this act.

Also, the cost of this program was greatly underestimated. In 1988, Congressional Budget Office [CBO] estimated the program would cost $30 billion over 5 years. Just 15 months later, CBO revised their estimate and said the program would cost approximately $48 billion. Mr. Chairman, as it stands, the catastrophic coverage program could possibly run a $6 billion deficit. I do not believe this is prudent fiscal policy.

Finally, I regret the Stenholm-Shaw amendment was not adopted as a substitute to H.R. 3, the Early Childhood Education and Development Act of 1989. This amendment provided a responsible alternative to the Hawkins-Downey child care bill. I strongly believe parents should have the opportunity to decide which type of child care service is best for their children. Mr. Chairman, I hope the conference committee will give thought to adopting provisions similar to those outlined in the Stenholm-Shaw amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. GEPHARDT] having assumed the chair, Mr. MAVROULES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3299) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 5 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1990 pursuant to House Resolution 249, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The amendments printed in section 1 of House Report 101-261 are considered to have been adopted.

Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. PETRI

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. PETRI. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PETRI moves to recommit the bill H.R. 3299 to the Committee on the Budget with instructions to report back the same forthwith with the following amendment: Page 707, beginning on line 3, strike out all of subsection (b) of section 4702 through page 709, line 24, and redesignate the succeeding subsection accordingly.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, will this gentleman from California be recognized for 5 minutes in opposition to the motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the Chair.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I wish that under the rules I were permitted to offer this motion in order to recommit the bill with instructions to remove H.R. 3, but I am not. I am offering instead a motion to recommit the reconciliation bill to the Committee on the Budget with instructions that the bill should be reported back forthwith with an amendment to strike the fairness doctrine.

The fairness doctrine is an extraneous nonbudgetary item in this bill which could cause problems in the conference with the other body and to which the President is opposed.

The provision should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I think there is probably no intention to ask for a recorded vote here. We have just had one of these recently on that same subject.

But I would like to address the question of final passage.

We have had a very long period of debate. We on the Republican side have won a couple of votes, which we have enjoyed immensely. Today we have taken a kick in the head and the Democrats have won. And I hope they enjoy it as much as we enjoyed our victories.

The net of it is, however, that we must pass a reconciliation bill if we wish to avoid sequester.

While Republicans may not like the Hawkins-Downey version and Democats may not like capital gains, it is incumbent on both sides to furnish a responsible majority to pass the bill, to put us into negotiations in conference.

Remember that you will all have a chance to vote against it if you do not like what the conference does.

But I think at this time neither side would like to carry the responsibility of causing a delay which might put us into sequester.

So I would urge, particularly on my side, that Members take that sequester problem into consideration. I hope there will be sufficient votes for passage.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. PETRI. I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I take this time allotted to the gentleman from Wisconsin only to embrace totally the comments just made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL]. I think there is plenty of victories to be shared here, particularly on our side and, yes, the last one was won on the other side. I think it is absolutely imperative that we pass the reconciliation bill and get it over to the other body. It is my understanding that they will be working all weekend. It is only through the marriage of the two Houses on reconciliation that we ultimately get an answer here.

I would urge Members particularly on our side, if we have a degree of influence, to vote for reconciliation.

□ 1530

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for yielding.

Last week, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY], walked over here and shook my hand about 12 minutes into a vote. This week, I walked over and shook the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. GRAY's hand. However, I must say either winning or losing, I appreciate the comity of the leadership and the way we are handling this bill.

I will vote yes on final passage with repeal of section 89, repeal of catastrophic, the capital gains tax that I like. In conference we will work for fulfilling the commitment made on the floor by the majority leader, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT], to reform child care provision to meet religious institution and other concerns.

While I will vote yes today, if the child care section is not improved in conference, I will vote against the conference report. I would urge the President, at that point of time, to veto the reconciliation bill.

This is a temporary step forward. However, if the concerns are not met, I am confident that we have the votes to sustain a veto in this body.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I will not take, hopefully, the 5 minutes remaining.

First of all, I want to take the opportunity to thank the committees that worked on this legislation, to thank the Members for their patience in this long debate that has gone on these last few days, and also to thank those who debated these issues, because they are crucial issues.

The House, in the end, has worked its will on all of them. All Members recognize that as controversial as these issues are, whether it is capital gains, or repeal of catastrophic, or child care, it is true they have very little to do with reconciliation. It was my preference they not be here, but we had little choice but to present them to the Members.

Ultimately, the purpose of reconciliation is to try to achieve sufficient savings to meet our budget targets, and get Members past sequestration. We started out with $13.4 billion; we came to the floor with $16.6 billion; we are now, because of repeal of catastrophic and section 89, somewhere down around $11 billion. The end result is that we have a very tough battle in conference to try to resolve our differences, to try to deal with these extraneous issues, and ultimately to find sufficient savings to avoid sequestration.

However, we owe it to ourselves to make that try. The Senate is on a fast timetable. My understanding is they intend to work throughout the weekend to complete reconciliation on Sunday. My hope is we can then go into conference by the middle of next week to try to see if we can resolve these issues. The choice today is between this bill, providing some $11 billion in savings, plus all of the issues that a majority of this House voted for; or nothing, and certain sequestration, which means certain failure.

With this bill, at least we have a hope in conference to try to do what is right for this country. I believe, at this point in time, we owe it to our constituents, we owe it to ourselves, and we owe it to the House to move reconciliation forward to conference.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GEPHARDT). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 333, noes 91, not voting 8, as follows:

Mr. WISE and Mr. ROHRABACHER changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

So the bill was passed.

The results of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO MAKE CORRECTIONS IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 3299, OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1989

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the bill, H.R. 3299, the Clerk be authorized to make corrections in section numbers, punctuation, and cross-references and to make such other technical and conforming changes as may be necessary to reflect the actions of the House in amending the bill (H.R. 3299), to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 5 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1990.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOYER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, earlier in the day, the bells in my office were not working, and I inadvertently missed the vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS].

Had I been present, I would have voted "aye" on the Edwards amendment, which was rollcall No. 272.

ELECTION AS MEMBER TO COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 259) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 259

Resolved, That Representative Ros-Lehtinen of Florida be and is hereby elected to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 26

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Honorable ROD CHANDLER be removed as a cosponsor from my bill, House Concurrent Resolution 26, a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress in opposition to the European Community's ban on importing U.S. meat products.

Mr. CHANDLER's name was inadvertently added to the list of cosponsors on January 31, 1989.

The inclusion was solely my fault and had nothing to do with the activities of the gentleman from Washington.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO HAVE UNTIL 6 P.M., FRIDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1989, TO FILE THREE LEGISLATIVE REPORTS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may have until 6 p.m., Friday, October 6, 1989, to file three legislative reports. They are:

H.R. 2806, Forfeiture Amendments; H.R. 3007, Drug Aftercare; and S. 248, Major Fraud Act Amendments of 1989.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 2712, EMERGENCY CHINESE ADJUSTMENT OF STATUS FACILITATION ACT OF 1989

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2712) to facilitate the adjustment or change of status of Chinese nationals in the United States by waiving the 2-year foreign residence requirement for "J" nonimmigrants, with a House amendment to the Senate amendment thereto, insist on the House amendment to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker will appoint conferees to the bill at a later time.

REQUEST TO MAKE IN ORDER A MOTION TO TAKE FROM SPEAKER'S TABLE H.R. 2978, FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989, AND CONCUR IN THE SENATE AMENDMENTS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to consider in the House a motion to take from the Speaker's table the bill H.R. 2978 with the Senate amendments thereto, and to concur in the Senate amendments; that debate on the motion shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary; and that the previous question be considered as ordered on the motion to final adoption without intervening motion.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Senate amendments: page 2, line 1, after "defaces," insert: "physically defiles."

Page 2, line 1, after "burns," insert: "maintains on the floor or ground,".

Page 2, strike out all after line 16 over to and including line 11 on page 3, and insert:

"(d)(1) An appeal may be taken directly to the Supreme Court of the United States from any interlocutory or final judgment, decree, or order issued by a United States district court ruling upon the constitutionality of subsection (a).

"(2) The Supreme Court shall, if it has not previously ruled on the question, accept jurisdiction over the appeal and advance on the docket and expedite to the greatest extent possible."

Mr. BROOKS (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] to explain what this motion is and whether it has been cleared with the ranking Republican member, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] felt very likely there would be an objection, but not from him.

This is to take up the flag bill and to pass it today, as amended by the Senate. In plain English, that is what we are proposing to do, and send it on to the President. It was passed by the Senate this afternoon with several amendments, and I think we ought to just pass it and send it on as they managed it.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I happen to be the ranking minority member on the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights of the Committee on the Judiciary which considered this legislation. The first I heard of the motion of the gentleman from Texas is when the gentleman stood up now to make it. This is highly unusual, particularly since legislative business is winding down. If the unanimous-consent request is agreed to, there will be a debate on this motion and a rollcall. Many of the Members have already left for the airport on the assumption that the last rollcall of the day has been had.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

PERMISSION TO HAVE UNTIL MIDNIGHT TOMORROW, OCTOBER 6, 1989, TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2990, DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight tomorrow. October 6, 1989, to file a conference report on the bill (H.R. 2990) making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950 EXTENSION

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3281) to extend the expiration date of the Defense Production Act of 1950, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment with amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the House amendments to the Senate amendment, as follows:

House amendments to Senate amendment:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment to the text of the House bill, insert the following:

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF FLOOD INSURANCE PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1319 of the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 4026) is amended by striking "September 30, 1989" and inserting "September 30, 1991".

(b) EMERGENCY IMPLEMENTATION.—Section 1336(a) of the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 4056(a)) is amended by striking "September 30, 1989" and inserting "September 30, 1991".

(c) STRUCTURES ON LAND SUBJECT TO IMMINENT COLLAPSE OR SUBSIDENCE.—Section 1306(c)(7) of the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 4013(c)(7)) is amended by striking "September 30, 1989" and inserting "September 30, 1991".

(d) LIMITATION ON PREMIUMS.—Section 541(d) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (42 U.S.C. 4015 note) is amended by striking "September 30, 1989" and inserting "September 30, 1991".

SEC. 2. FLOOD ZONE DATA.

Section 1360(a) of the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 4101(a)) is amended by striking paragraph (2) and inserting the following:

"(2) establish or update flood-risk zone data in all such areas, and make estimates with respect to the rates of probable flood caused loss for the various flood risk zones for each of these areas until the date specified in section 1319.".

SEC. 3. REPORT ON FEDERAL ASSUMPTION OF FLOOD INSURANCE PROGRAM.

Section 1340(b) of the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 4071(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Upon making the determination referred to in subsection (a), the Director shall make a report to the Congress and, at the same time, to the private insurance companies participating in the National Flood Insurance Program pursuant to section 1310 of this Act. Such report shall—

"(1) state the reason for such determinations,

"(2) be supported by pertinent findings,

"(3) indicate the extent to which it is anticipated that the insurance industry will be utilized in providing flood insurance coverage under the program, and

"(4) contain such recommendations as the Director deems advisable.

The Director shall not implement the program of flood insurance authorized under chapter I through the facilities of the Federal Government until 9 months after the date of submission of the report under this subsection unless it would be impossible to continue to effectively carry out the National Flood Insurance Program operations during this time.".

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION FOR STUDIES.

Section 1376(c) of the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 4127(c)) is amended by striking the first sentence and inserting the following: "There are authorized to be appropriated for studies under this title not to exceed $36,283,000 for fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1991".

SEC. 5. SEA LEVEL RISE STUDY.

The Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall conduct a study to determine the impact of relative sea level rise on the flood insurance rate maps. This study shall also project the economic losses associated with estimated sea level rise and aggregate such data for the United States as a whole and by region. The Director shall report the results of this study to the Congress not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act. Funds for such study shall be made available from amounts appropriated under section 1376(c) of the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968.

SEC. 6. CRIME INSURANCE PROGRAM.

(a) EXTENSION OF GENERAL AUTHORITY.—Section 1201(b) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1749bbb(b)) is amended by striking "September 30, 1989" in the matter preceding paragraph (1) and inserting "September 30, 1991".

(b) CONTINUATION OF EXISTING CONTRACTS.—Section 1201(b)(1) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1749bbb(b)(1) is amended by striking "September 30, 1990" and inserting "September 30, 1992".

(c) LIMITATION ON PREMIUMS.—Section 542(c) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 (12 U.S.C. 1749bbb-10c note) is amended—

(1) by striking "September 30, 1989" and inserting "September 30, 1991"; and

(2) by striking "5 percent" and inserting "15 percent".

(d) ANNUAL REPORT.—Section 1234 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1749bbb-10d) is amended to read as follows:

"REPORTS ON OPERATIONS

SEC. 1234. The Director shall report to the Congress not less than annually on the program authorized by this title. The reports under this section shall include—

"(1) full and complete information on the operations and activities of the Director under this part, together with such recommendations with respect thereto as the Director may deem appropriate; and

"(2) a detailed justification of any increase in premium rates charged for crime insurance made during the period for which the report is submitted.".

SEC. 7. EXTENSION OF RURAL HOUSING AUTHORITIES.

(a) RENTAL HOUSING LOAN AUTHORITY.—Section 515(b)(4) of the National Housing Act of 1949 is amended by striking out "September 30, 1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1990".

(b) RURAL AREA CLASSIFICATION.—Section 520 of the National Housing Act of 1949 is amended by striking "September 30, 1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1990".

(c) MUTUAL AND SELF-HELP HOUSING GRANT AND LOAN AUTHORITY.—Section 523(f) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by striking out "September 30, 1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1990".

(d) RURAL RENTAL REHABILITATION DEMONSTRATION.—Section 311(d) of the of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 is amended by striking "September 30, 1989" and inserting "September 30, 1990".

SEC. 8. EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY HOMEOWNERSHIP COUNSELING PROGRAM.

Section 106(c)(9) of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 (12 U.S.C. 1701x(c)(9)) is amended by striking "September 30, 1989" and inserting "September 30, 1990".

SEC. 9. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950.

(a) EXTENSION OF PROGRAMS.—The first sentence of section 717(a) of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2166(a)) is amended by striking "September 30, 1989" and inserting "August 10, 1990".

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 711(a)(4) of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2161(a)(4)) is amended to read as follows:

"(4)(A) There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1990, not to exceed $50,000,000 to carry out the provisions of section 303.

"(B) The aggregate amount of loans, guarantees, purchase agreements, and other actions under sections 301, 302, and 303 during fiscal year 1990 may not exceed $50,000,000.".

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to reauthorize the National Flood Insurance Program, the Federal Crime Insurance Program, and the Defense Production Act of 1950, to extend certain housing programs, and for other purposes.".

Mr. WYLIE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House amendment to the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. WYLIE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to allow the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] to explain what we are doing here.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield under his reservation, I will explain my unanimous-consent request. As the Members will recall, the House on two occasions passed legislation to reauthorize the Flood and Crime Insurance Program, several housing programs and the Defense Production Act. Final enactment of legislation has been delayed because of disagreements over the terms of the reauthorization of the Crime Insurance Program. This morning the appropriate House and Senate committee and interested Members reached agreement on a proposal to reauthorize the Crime Insurance Program. My unanimous-consent request will strike the Senate amendment to H.R. 3281, insert the rest of House Joint Resolution 412 as it passed the House with a single change in the text of that resolution concerning the compromise on the Crime Insurance Program.

The Senate amendment would have allowed the Crime Insurance Program to expire, the House passed bills would have reauthorized the program for 2 years and permitted the crime insurance premiums to increase by no more than 5 percent per year. The legislation before us today will reauthorize the program for 2 years and permit the insurance premiums to increase by no more than 15 percent per year.

Final enactment of legislation has been delayed because of disagreements over the terms of the reauthorization of the Crime Insurance Program mostly in the Senate. This morning the appropriate House and Senate committees and interested Members reached agreement on a proposal to reauthorize the Crime Insurance Program, which was the only thing in disagreement.

My unanimous-consent request will strike the Senate amendment to the bill, insert the rest of House Joint Resolution 412 as it passed the House originally with a single change in the text of that resolution concerning the compromise on the Crime Insurance Program. The Senate amendment would have allowed the Crime Insurance Program to expire.

The House-passed bill would have reauthorized the program for 2 years, permitted the crime insurance premiums to increase by no more than 5 percent per year, and the legislation before us today will reauthorize the programs for 2 years and permit the insurance premiums to increase by no more than 15 percent per year.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I will urge adoption of the resolution.

The House considered House Joint Resolution 412 on September 28, 1989, and I voiced concern about the extension of the Crime Insurance Program at that time, especially the cap on premiums. The other body has agreed to increase the present 5-percent cap on premiums to 15 percent, which I think is an improvement, and it calls for a study, an annual report by the Director of the Federal Insurance Administration, on the feasibility of a buyout option for crime insurance programs and a justification for the increase in premiums. Although I still maintain that the Federal Crime Insurance Program is one program that we could live without since more and more States are opting out of it and are beginning to provide alternatives to crime insurance programs, I believe the study will verify this conclusion, but as the chairman has mentioned, we do need to continue the Flood Insurance Program. We need an extension of the Defense Production Act, in my judgment, and there are certain rural housing programs which are extended by this resolution which I think are most critical.

Therefore, I urge adoption of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOYER). Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do reserve the right to object to this unanimous-consent request, and I do not know at this moment whether I will, indeed, object or not.

I object both on the process, or I reserve my right to object both on the process as well as on the legislation itself.

First, on the process, there are four unrelated programs that we are providing a simple extension for even though they are unrelated. We are putting them into one bill and extending those programs for 1 year.

These four programs are vastly in need of a fresh look, of a new look, by the committees and by the House as a whole. The process had a rather limited debate in committee and even more limited debate on the floor, passing on a voice vote, even more limited in the Senate, in the other body, and then when it came time for conference, no conferees were appointed. Apparently the modest changes or agreements that were made were made between, directly between, the principals.

I do have serious reservations about the process.

I further have reservations about the process of extending four Federal programs without attempting to make any judgment, first of all, as to whether they are needed and, second, whether there ought to be any improvements.

I also have reservations about the programs themselves, Mr. Speaker, and I will say that.

All four of these programs share one thing in common, and that is that they are all four outdated. They are rather ill-considered, and they are, at best, unnecessary, and several of them are, in fact, costly and counterproductive themselves.

Mr. Speaker, I will say that since these four programs are being given a 1-year extension to extend, as I understand the legislation, to September 30, 1990, and since recognizing the reality of the end of the session, that if I were in fact to lodge a formal objection at this point, the sponsors of the bill could bring the bill back up on the floor next week, and no doubt could get sufficient votes to pass them on the floor; then I will not object to this legislation at this time.

But I will say on the record that 1 year from now, September 30, 1990, I would intend to object to any further extension of this legislation, and would, as one member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, insist that we do a full review and make a conclusion as to whether these four Federal laws ought to simply be abolished, which is my conclusion that they should.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Further reserving the right to object, I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished fellow Texan.

I would very much like to allay his fears and also, in a way, sympathize with his sense of, I guess, incongruity because of the processes.

What we are facing here is the need to extend the programs. The merits and the demerits of the programs, as the gentleman will recall, were based on subcommittee considerations.

In the case of flood and crime insurance, the chairman of the subcommittee that has jurisdiction, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ERDREICH], has committed himself to having, as soon as possible, immediate oversight hearings on this, particularly the crime insurance. So the gentleman will have ample opportunity, as one of the most active and probably one of the most knowledgeable members of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, and I think he is on the subcommittee of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ERDREICH], if I am not mistaken.

Mr. BARTLETT. Further reserving the right to object, that is correct.

Mr. GONZALEZ. We will have ample opportunity to hit the merits.

At this point, I would strongly urge my friend to help us to preserve these programs that technically expired as of October 1.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Texas. The procedure is not all that good in this case except to say that all of these programs were passed by the House under the suspension calendar except for the rural housing programs. The rural housing programs are very meritorious on their own. They do need to be extended, and the House has had an opportunity to consider the others. I would also suggest that in the case of the Flood Insurance Program, that is included in the reconciliation bill, and I suppose what we are doing is sort of ratifying what they have done under the jurisdiction of our Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, but I would hope that the gentleman would not object.

Mr. BARTLETT. Further reserving the right to object, I want to say to my distinguished chairman and distinguished ranking member that during the course of considering these programs on their own merit, I would just urge and insist that the next time it comes up that the committee and the Congress face a threshold question as to whether or not we ought to extend these programs at all. We need to face the question. One of the options we could do is simply allow these Federal programs to expire. They are, in fact, not necessary, many say.

One could make a judgment one way or the other, but just because they are ready to expire does not mean that we ought to necessarily extend them for another year.

Mr. Speaker, given that and given that my distinguished colleagues could easily bring the bill, with trouble but could do it, could bring the bill back up and pass it on the floor of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOYER). Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. GINGRICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for this time for the purpose of inquiring of the distinguished majority leader the program for the next week.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Obviously we are finished with business today. There will be no more votes today.

The House will meet at 10 a.m. tomorrow, and there will be no legislative business.

The House, on Monday, October 9, will not be in session because of the Columbus Day observance.

Tuesday, October 10, the House will meet at noon and consider five bills on suspension. Recorded votes on suspensions will be postponed until after debate on all suspensions, and we want to hold votes until 4:30 or so in the afternoon.

We will have H.R. 1113, authorization for the Office of Environmental Quality; H.R. 2587, North American Wetlands Conservation Act; H.R. 2806, amendment to the Controlled Substances Act of 1988; H.R. 3007, Drug and Alcohol Dependent Offenders Treatment Act of 1989; and S. 248, Major Fraud Act Amendments of 1989.

On October 11, the House will again meet at 10 a.m. We would expect a motion to concur in the Senate amendment on the flag following consideration by the Committee on Rules on Tuesday. We also believe the Committee on Appropriations hopes to conclude conference and file four conference reports by this time. This will include conference action on 7 of the 13 appropriations bills completed by the House.

It is likely that the four following conference reports will be called upon and probably this will happen on Wednesday.

Those would be the conference reports on Treasury Postal Service,

Labor, HHS and Education, the District of Columbia, and rural development, agriculture.

We will not be considering the Oil Pollution, Prevention, Response, Liability and Compensation Act of 1989 on that day.

On Thursday, October 12 and Friday, October 13, the House will meet at 10 a.m. We will consider H.R. 3661, Arms Control Authorization Act of 1989; and H.R. 2748, Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1990.

Many Members have been asking about floor action on Friday, and we have been trying to alert Members to the fact that we may have floor action on that day, and we have scheduled it for that day, especially in light of the fact of sequestration coming on October 16. We may need to be on the floor that day relating to sequestration, avoiding sequestration, and finishing the work on reconciliation and other appropriations bills.

Mr. GINGRICH. I thank the majority leader.

If I might ask about three issues, first of all, as the gentleman knows, I have been recently inquiring about the Nuclear Regulatory Commission Act which one of our colleagues is extremely concerned about, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER], who has an amendment pending. Do we have any further information when that act might reach the floor?

Mr. GEPHARDT. I cannot give the gentleman a definitive answer. I know that this is the third or fourth time that the gentleman has inquired.

I realize that there is a great deal of desire on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER]. I will endeavor to get the answer out of the committee and relay that to both gentlemen.

Mr. GINGRICH. I thank the gentleman.

Second, there is some talk about a new approach to the minimum wage bill and that coming to the floor possibly sometime in the near future. I wonder if there might be any information on when minimum wage might be coming up?

Mr. GEPHARDT. We are discussing the possibility of bringing a minimum wage bill to the floor. It is possible that it could happen on one of the days next week, but that is very much up in the air, undecided at this point.

We will obviously give plenty of advance notice if the decision is to go with it next week.

Mr. GINGRICH. Finally, of course, a number of our colleagues will want to be bringing up the flag bill which came from the Senate. Could the gentleman let us know when that might be coming up?

Mr. GEPHARDT. We would expect that it will go before the Rules Committee on Tuesday, October 10. We would expect the motion to concur in the Senate amendments on the flag on Wednesday, October 11.

Mr. GINGRICH. Good. I thank the gentleman very much. Again, it is very good to work with the gentleman from Missouri, even if today was not quite as good on our side as some we have had. I do appreciate so much the way the gentleman from Missouri has been running the House.

Mr. GEPHARDT. I thank the gentleman.

ADJOURNMENT FROM FRIDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1989, TO TUESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1989

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Friday, October 6, 1989, it adjourn to meet at noon on Tuesday, October 10, 1989.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOYER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON BANKING, FINANCE AND URBAN AFFAIRS TO HAVE UNTIL MIDNIGHT FRIDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1989, TO FILE REPORT ON H.R. 2494.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs may have until midnight tomorrow, Friday, October 6, 1989, to file a report on H.R. 2494.

Mr. Speaker, this has been cleared with the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 1487, FOREIGN RELATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEARS 1990 AND 1991

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 1487) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1990 and 1991 for the Department of State, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. SMITH OF NEW JERSEY

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey moves that the managers on the part of the House, at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H.R. 1487, be instructed to agree to section 1042 of the Senate-passed bill which reads as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

"SEC. . CHINESE FLEEING COERCIVE POPULATION CONTROL POLICIES.

"(a) Pursuant to paragraph (42)(A) of section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(42)(A)), all adjudicators of asylum or refugee status shall give fullest possible consideration to applications from "nationals of the People's Republic of China who express a fear of persecution upon return to that country because they refuse to abort a pregnancy or resist surgical sterilization in violation of Chinese Communist Party directives on population, if such refusal is undertaken with full awareness of the urgent priority assigned to such directives by all levels of the Chinese government, and full awareness of the severe consequences which may be imposed for violation of such directives."

"(b) In view of the urgent priority assigned to the "one couple, one child" policy by high level Chinese Communist Party officials and local party cadres at all levels, as well as the severe consequences commonly imposed for violations of that policy, which are regarded as 'political dissent,' refusal to abort or to be sterilized, as described in subsection (a) of this section, shall be viewed as an act of political defiance justifying a 'well founded fear of persecution' sufficient to establish refugee status under paragraph (42)(A) of section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(42)(A)).

"(c) All other factors which may contribute to a determination of asylum or refugee status in such cases are to be given additional weight by asylum and refugee adjudicators, such factors including, but not limited to, overt political activities while in the United States or third countries, membership in an ethnic or religious minority, family background and history, or suspicion of 'counterrevolutionary' activities by Chinese Communist Party officials.

"(d) Nothing in this section shall be construed to necessitate a grant of asylum or refugee status to any individual who is ineligible for admission to the United States under section 212(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)).

"(e) The Secretary of State and the Attorney General shall, within 30 days of enactment of this section, promulgate regulations and guidelines to carry out the provisions of this section.".

"(f) Nothing in this section shall be construed as—

"(1) Shifting the burden of proving, in each individual case, facts sufficient to establish a claim of asylum or refugee status as described in subsection (a) of this section, from any person making such claim of asylum or refugee status to the Attorney General; or

"(2) Requiring the Attorney General to disprove such claim in the absence of proof of facts sufficient to establish a claim of refugee or asylum status as described in subsection (a) of this section by any person making such claim.".

"(g) The number of persons receiving political asylum status solely because of the provisions of this section shall not exceed 1,000 in any fiscal year."

"(h) The Attorney General shall not be obligated to grant political asylum to any person claiming to qualify under subsection (a) if the Attorney General proves by clear and convincing evidence that such person has claimed such status solely for the purposes of evading the immigration laws of the United States."

"(i) The provisions of this section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act, and notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (e) of this section or any other provision of law, all adjudicators of asylum or refugee status shall apply the provisions of this section to every case, administrative or judicial proceeding, or appeal that is pending on the date of enactment of this Act, and to any claim that arises on or after such date of enactment.".

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this motion instructs conferees to accept a Senate amendment to H.R. 1487 that simply provides that all adjudicators of asylum or refugee status give the "fullest posible consideration" to applications from nationals of the People's Republic of China [PRC] who express a fear of persecution upon return to that country, because they refuse to either abort their unborn child or because they resist mandatory sterilization—in violation of Chinese Communist Party directives.

This amendment, offered by Senators ARMSTRONG and DECONCINI, passed the Senate unanimously 95 to 0.

Currently there are about 50 PRC nationals who have sought asylum in the United States pursuant to Justice Department guidelines issued in August 1988.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment establishes a ceiling of 1,000 persons per fiscal year which should allay fears that the number of applicants will exceed our capacity to properly dispose of each case.

Mr. Speaker, that the PRC continues a comprehensive, intrusive, coercive population control program is beyond dispute. Since 1977, China has mandated one child per couple—and has used coercion to enforce compliance.

Mr. Speaker, it should be abundantly clear to all that the People's Republic of China, through its one-child-per-family policy, continues to employ systematic coercion and brutality in achieving population control. Human life is incredibly cheap to the Deng Xiaopings of this world and babies—especially unborn children—are prime candidates for elimination and abuse in the cause of population control. The same iron fist that brought the prodemocracy students to their knees in Tiananmen Square has, since 1979, been using forced abortion, coercive sterlization and mandatory IUD insertion to control the masses. The simple fact of the matter is the people of China have no rights whatsoever concerning family planning matters. A couple's legitimate desire for a family is of no concern or consequence to the Chinese population planners and their cheerleaders in the population control community.

The result of this cruel and inhumane assault on the family has been nearly 110 million children aborted since 1979—a number equal to the combined population of England and France—and most of these abortions are the result of some degree of government coercion. The result has also been millions of women and men sterilized under government compulsion or threat of punishment and still millions more women who have undergone mandatory IUD insertions.

There's no pretense of choice or freedom in the PRC. The government demands, bullies, and orders—the people obey or are punished.

In their exhaustive 1988 study on population trends in the PRC, China experts, Judith Banister and Karen Hardee-Cleaveland of the U.S. Bureau of the Census conclude:

> Today, Chinese couples still are not given a choice about whether they practice family planning, how many children they have, when they have the allowed birth or births, whether or not to sign family planning contracts, or what form of birth control they will use.

Recent information clearly suggests that coercion is actually getting worse—not better in the PRC.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge Members to support my motion to instruct conferees.

This is clearly a humanitarian effort that should be supported by all.

Mr. Speaker, I am including a fact sheet on the Armstrong-DeConcini amendment at this point in the RECORD.

FACTSHEET

ARMSTRONG-DECONCINI AMENDMENT ON ASYLUM FOR PRC NATIONALS

Current Law: A section of the Immigration and Naturalization Act (8 U.S.C. 1103) empowers the Attorney General to issue policy guidelines to be followed in the adjudication of applications for asylum. The Attorney General issued guidelines instructing asylum adjudicators to give "careful consideration" to applications from PRC nationals who seek asylum because they have defied their government's population control policies.

Current Practice: The INS has not implemented these guidelines. It continues to seek deportation orders against PRC nationals who fear persecution because they have not complied with the government's "one couple, one child" policy. Moreover, the Board of Immigration Appeals in a May 12 decision to deport a PRC national, said that it was not bound by the DOJ guidelines.

Armstrong Amendment: The Armstrong amendment would codify and expand existing DOJ policy by requiring the Secretary of State and the Attorney General to promulgate regulations and guidelines that would require asylum and refugee adjudicators to give the "fullest possible consideration to applications from nationals of the PRC who express a fear of persecution upon return to that country because they refuse to abort a pregnancy or resist sterilization in violation of Chinese Communist Party directives on population."

WHY THIS AMENDMENT SHOULD BE ADOPTED

The Chinese government's population control policy that bars families from having more than one child is strictly enforced—often by means of compulsory abortions and sterilizations.

About 50 PRC nationals have sought asylum in the U.S., fearing stringent sanctions because of their defiance of their government's population control policy. DOJ guidelines, noting that the PRC government views such defiance as an act of "political dissent," state that "a finding of the requisite 'well-founded fear of persecution' under these circumstances is reasonable." This constitutes persecution for "political opinion" under the Immigration Act and would result in a grant of asylum.

The INS nevertheless continues to fight such asylum requests, even in the most extreme circumstances. For example, they are seeking to deport Mr. Zhao, a PRC national. In October 1984, according to court depositions, Chinese police burst into Mr. Zhao's home and brought his wife to a hospital in order to abort her child. Mrs. Zhao, who was in the ninth month of her pregnancy, was beaten and went into labor enroute to the hospital. Her child, born alive, was strangled by government officials while Mr. Zhao tried to intervene. Mr. Zhao subsequently escaped to the U.S. and sought asylum. Annette S. Elstein, an Immigration Judge in New York, ordered Mr. Zhao deported, arguing that he had not demonstrated a "well-founded fear of persecution."

An INS attorney in New York recently filed a brief in opposition to an asylum request from a PRC national who feared persecution because he had not complied with the "one couple, one child" edict. The INS brief argued that the request for asylum "does not rise to the level of a finding of a well founded fear [of persecution]" because the policy has been "applied to the nation as a whole." This directly contravenes DOJ guidelines which state that "a finding of the requisite 'well-founded fear of persecution' under these circumstances is reasonable."

The agency is also seeking to deport Mr. Yun Pan Lee, a Roman Catholic who was prohibited from working for a period of six months and whose family's supply of food and water was cut off after the birth of his second child. When Mrs. Lee became pregnant with their third child, Mr. Lee fled the country and sought asylum in the U.S. Mrs. Lee was subsequently compelled by the government to have an abortion. An immigration court judge, citing the DOJ guidelines, found in Lee's favor. The INS has appealed this ruling to the Board of Immigration Appeals.

The Board of Immigration Appeals has argued that it is not bound by the DOJ guidelines. In a May 12 ruling, the board found that these guidelines "were directed to the Immigration and Naturalization Service, rather than the immigration judges and this board." It ordered Jin Han Chang, who had sought asylum under the DOJ guidelines, deported.

Thus, neither the INS nor the Justice Department's Board of Immigration Appeals have implemented the DOJ guidelines. Indeed, the INS has made only the most minimal efforts to make its various offices aware of the guidelines. Despite the Attorney General's instruction to the INS Commissioner to "insure that these guidelines are immediately distributed to INS headquarters, all regional, district and local offices," it appears that the INS has not disseminated the policy guidelines. Duke Austin, an INS spokesman, recently told the New York Times that his agency's district directors were made aware of the guidelines at a conference held in San Diego last September, but that "no corresponding additional instructions were put out."

The INS continues to seek deportation orders against Chinese nationals who fear persecution because they have defied their government's "one couple, one child" policies, and the Board of Immigration Appeals continues to deny them asylum.

The Armstrong amendment would by statute apply the DOJ policy to all relevant agencies, including INS and the Board of Immigration Appeals. It would thereby assure that applications for asylum by Chinese nationals who fear persecution because they have defied the party's population control policies would be given the fullest possible consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to instruct.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker will appoint conferees upon his return.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I would note that yesterday I was unavoidably detained and happily detained for the birth of our second child, and in so doing unfortunately missed four votes.

Had I been present, Mr. Speaker, on the Donnelly amendment, recorded vote No. 267, I would have voted "no."

On the Stark amendment, recorded vote No. 268, I would have voted "aye."

On the Durbin amendment, recorded vote No. 269, I would have voted "no."

On the final passage of H.R. 3299, recorded vote No. 270, I would have voted "aye."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would inquire if the gentleman would like to add to that the name of the child and weight?

Mr. WISE. I would be happy to, Mr. Speaker. Alexandra Stewart Wise was born at 1:36 p.m. weighing 7 pounds and 14 ounces and she and her mother are doing fine.

WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE OVERSIGHT SUBCOMMITTEE INVESTIGATION OF GOVERNMENT-SPONSORED ENTERPRISES

(Mr. PICKLE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call my colleagues' attention to remarks I made yesterday in a special order of the House, concerning the efforts of the Ways and Means Oversight Subcommittee to better understand the risks associated with Government-sponsored enterprises. These remarks are printed on page H6649 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for October 4, 1989.

When I speak of GSE's, I am referring to organizations such as Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, Sallie Mae, and the Farm Credit System. GSE's are corporations created by Federal charter, which are backed by the implicit guarantee of the U.S. Treasury, but which are completely off the Federal budget.

I primarily want to alert the Members of the House that because GSE's have the implicit backing of the Federal Treasury, they represent an inherent risk to the taxpayer. Over the past 3 years these potential risks have become all too real, and Congress has had to spend tens of billions of dollars in bailouts. Mr. Speaker, let me be clear, I do not wish to leave the inference that any GSE is presently in financial difficulty, and I do not feel that there is any reason for public alarm. However, I do believe that these operations merit careful scrutiny.

It is for this reason that I joined with Congressman GRADISON and Congressman SCHULZE to initiate legislation requiring the Treasury Department to study and report on GSE's. The public, the Congress, and the administration all have a strong interest in seeing that GSE's are soundly managed so as to anticipate and minimize the risks inherent in carrying out their important public purpose. We hope to keep the House informed of the progress made by the Treasury Department in carrying out this study, and I urge my colleagues to give careful consideration to these important issues.

TRIBUTE TO JOSEPH WHEELER SEWELL, BASEBALL GREAT

(Mr. CALLAHAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, Monday will be a great day for the wonderful State of Alabama for on this day, 91 years ago, October 9, 1898, in the town of Titus, one of baseball's greatest players and one of Alabama's greatest sons was born. Named after his father's confederate war hero, Joseph Wheeler Sewell was born the son of a country doctor and loving mother, Wes and Sudie Sewell. Little did Joe's proud parents realize that three of their six children, Tommy, Luke, and Joe, would all make their mark as major league baseball players.

Upon his graduation from the University of Alabama in 1920 where Joe had met his future loving wife of 63 years, the former Ms. Willie Veal, Joe stopped in New Orleans where he helped the New Orleans Pelicans to the Southern League championship before making his way to the 1920 Cleveland Indians. In Cleveland, Joe was again instrumental as the starting shortstop to that team's winning its first-ever World Series.

Many remember Joe as the man who both preceded Babe Ruth in the batting lineup and roomed with Lou Gehrig for the 5 years that Joe was a New York Yankee, but Alabama remembers Joe Sewell as the most difficult man in baseball history to strike out. That's right—no one since the beginning of baseball has been tougher to whiff than the 5'8" Alabama son. I submit that Joe's strikeout records of fewest for a career—114 times in 14 seasons; most consecutive games played without striking out—115; and fewest strikeouts in a season for an everyday player of 3, done in both the 1930 and 1932 seasons, will stand for as long as the national pastime of this glorious Nation is played.

Great as these records are, Joe Sewell was also an excellent fielder who led his league in fielding twice, and as if all this weren't enough, Joe Sewell is also one of baseball's ironmen whose 1,103 consecutive games played still ranks sixth on the all-time major league list.

But Monday, on his 91st birthday, while he happily resides with his son Jimmy and daughter-in-law Sue at their home in Mobile AL, wants our Nation to recognize Joseph Wheeler Sewell not as a member of the Alabaman and National Baseball Halls of Fame, but as a great American and a wonderful Christian who has lived his life as a true American hero, a man who never refuses—even today—the autograph requests of this Nation's great and adoring youth who forever search for and need role models like Joe. On your big day Joe, this Nation salutes you. We hope you live for another 91 years. God Bless you Joe Sewell, and happy birthday.

WE SHOULD GET A MUCH BETTER EXPLANATION OF THE SITUATION IN PANAMA

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, when President Bush was elected, I, as many other people, applauded his statement that he wanted a kinder and gentler America. But I did not know that that was going to extend to Noriega. I must say that I, as many others, have been very, very perplexed by the administration's explanation of what happened.

We keep hearing they did not get enough invitations to the coup. I mean, how often do you have any information about a coup?

They then said, well, they did not have enough intelligence. My goodness, we have got South come down there. That is the headquarters of our commander of the whole south region, with tens of thousands of soldiers. And we are talking about not a huge continent, we are talking about Panama, very small place. What do you mean, with all that notice, that we did not know where Noreiga was and we did not know what to do and this and that and the other? I really find all of this very, very troubling.

I certainly hope that we can get a much better explanation. There has got to be more than we have heard so far or we are really in trouble.

THE UNITED STATES MISSED A GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY IN PANAMA

(Mr. DERRICK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, you know, it seems to me that I recall just a couple of weeks ago the President of the United States told the American people that he was committed to taking whatever steps are necessary to win the war on drugs.

Yesterday this administration and this country took a giant step backwards. It was given a golden opportunity to end a reign of terror, the golden opportunity to do away with a thug who has been indicated by two grand juries; given a golden opportunity to say to the rest of Central and South America that we mean what we say and we stand behind what we mean.

But I am sorry to stand in this well and tell you that the administration, the President, froze at the controls, froze at the controls, and has let an opportunity pass to do away with this tin dictator who is allowing the importation of drugs into this country that are killing our youth and going to the very roots of our society.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE DESERVE SOME ANSWERS ABOUT WHAT WAS OR WAS NOT DONE IN PANAMA

(Mr. SCHUMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, the American people deserve some answers about what was or was not done in their name in Panama.

For years we have been declaring war against drugs. Tuesday some reports indicate that we were given a chance to capture the most notorious drug dealer in the world. What did we do? Did we pass up an opportuntity to capture the man personally responsible, the man indicted in our courts for shipping tons of drugs onto our streets? That is the question the American people should have answered.

Mr. President, it is time for a full accounting. There are more different conflicting versions of what happened in Panama floating around, most from different people in your administration, than Carter has Little Liver Pills.

We have had one version saying the rebels did not want to give Noriega up; another version saying it was too risky to capture him; a third version saying it was a plot to trick us; and another version saying we could not make up our minds in time.

Mr. President, which is it? What happened? Why did we miss the opportunity and pass up one of the world's greatest thugs?

Mr. President, the American people support your tough words on drugs, but they would support tough action as well.

SOME REFLECTIONS ON THE PANAMA COUP

(Mr. DYSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, everyone in this country, and most of the civilians in Panama, followed Tuesday's attempted coup against General Noriega with hopeful expectation. We all would like to see Noriega toppled by the very troops who have been the basis of his support.

The coup, as we learned with disappointment, failed. A small company of PDF soldiers, whose primary responsibility is to guard Noriega's central command headquarters, took control of the building for a few hours. They lost it to Noriega-loyalist troops who laid siege to the headquarters almost as soon as the dissident officers claimed to have secured it.

My first concern is for the safety of American lives and property, and for the security of the Panama Canal. But tense and inherently dangerous as the situation was, there appears to have been no direct threat to U.S. citizens or interests.

Now the question is whether it would have been in our interest to have done more to make the coup attempt a success.

The facts on the coup are still coming in, but I can tell you this much. The very day of the coup a rumor began circulating that Noriega had been under house arrest, that the leaders of the coup had attempted to deliver him to U.S. custody, but that the U.S. had refused to accept him.

If it appears that there is some truth to this story. I am disappointed by what I have learned. As chairman of the House Subcommittee on the Panama Canal, I have worked to support this country's policy toward Panama. I have done so for two reasons. First, because I have always believed that an internal coup, initiated by the PDF, was the best solution to getting rid of Noriega. Second, because the administration has let me know, in no uncertain terms, that this is precisely what they believed as well, and that a coup would be the inevitable result of our pressure to isolate Noriega.

If it is the case that we have let our best hope for getting rid of Noriega slip away out of confusion or because we simply weren't prepared, I will have to reconsider my support for the administration's entire Panama policy. I believe many of my colleagues in the Congress are already wondering why we weren't more aggressively involved.

But while we wait for the smoke to clear and to get a complete picture of the coup attempt, there is something important to keep in mind.

The United States can drive a jeep into downtown Panama City and take custody of Noriega anytime we believe it will serve our interests to do so. We know precisely where he is at all times. We can disarm his guards, put him in handcuffs and toss him into an American jail in the span of a few short hours.

Our ability to do this isn't in question. The issue is only that, for the time being, such an action would not serve our interests or purposes. At this time, such an action would only compound our problems without in fact improving the situation in Panama very much.

Right now, if Noriega forces this country to take direct military action against him, we would certainly win the battle, but he would win the war.

Noriega should keep in mind that times change. He isn't invulnerable. The PDF have now made two attempts to depose him. They will or should make a third.

And he should keep in mind that the people of this country are not going to give up or go away. There may come a day when our interests are best served by taking Noriega forcibly into U.S. custody. If that day comes, the American people, I believe, would support such a move.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 2712, EMERGENCY CHINESE ADJUSTMENT OF STATUS FACILITATION ACT OF 1989

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees on H.R. 2712, the Emergency Chinese Adjustment of Status Facilitation Act of 1989:

TRIBUTE TO BONNIE PUGH

(Mrs. BOGGS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a formal farewell with family members and friends, to Bonnie Pugh, and to salute her exemplary service to this country. Bonnie Pugh, of course, is the wife of Robert Pugh, our Ambassador to Chad, who was killed on the fateful flight from Chad to Paris most recently.

Bonnie Pugh was educated at the University of California at Berkeley. She married a young Marine officer, and she was his stalwart companion throughout his military service. When he joined the State Department, Bonnie became one of those wonderful Foreign Service wives who extends the service of their husbands, rendering to our Nation.

I had the honor of knowing her work first hand when they were stationed in Greece. My daughter, Cokie Roberts, and her husband, Stephen, were there at the same time. We all had an opportunity to see some of Bonnie's fine work when her husband, Robert, was a congressional liaison for the State Department.

However, it was in Beirut where she really shone in her love and her extension of service to Members and to our country. It was there that she stayed the entire time that her husband was stationed in Beirut, giving comfort and strength and courage to the whole American community, and to those other diplomats who were strong enough and courageous enough to stay there.

It is a very sad note that a woman such as Bonnie Pugh had to be inadvertently engaged in an act of terrorism. I would say in her words, she would wish to be remembered making certain that she served all of the areas of our country's life and of our country's intention, throughout the world, and that she would be glad to be a martyr in the cause of peace.

PANAMA NEEDED THE UNITED STATES

(Mr. SMITH of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate indeed what happened on Tuesday in Panama. While I, like some of my colleagues before me, would criticize the President of the United States and the chain of command all the way down, for failing to be ready for an event for which we, ourselves, have been calling for months and months, and for failing to have the intelligence capability to know where the man whom we wish to have removed is, every single minute of the day, especially after notification in advance of an impending coup. Notwithstanding that, it is really a sad day because the losers in this are, once again, the people of Panama who have been denied the right to charter their own course, their own will, for democracy. Once again, the people of Panama have been given the short end of the stick. They had the guts to go and obtain, through an election process, a victory for freedom. They won that election, and it was stolen from them by General Noriega.

They then had the courage in the shape of a small band of loyal officers to decide if it was time to do something, for their own reasons, but also for democracy, and let it not be lost that they issued a call on the radio for immediate elections under OAS supervision as soon as possible, while they still had control.

It was through these people and the attempts that the Panamanians have shown that drew feelings, and we were not for them. We found a lot of reasons on Tuesday not to be there for the Panamanians, but nobody else was, either. The shame of this whole incident is that it mirrors the ineffectiveness in this whole hemisphere of policies not implemented, and rhetoric hollow in words.

It is time to start standing up for democracy. Not only do Americans desire that, but the Panamanians and others in this hemisphere deserve it.

TOO MUCH RECONCILIATION

(Mr. WISE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, after much debate, I voted against passage, final passage, of the budget reconciliation measure.

While there were several good features in this bill, such as child care provisions, I felt that the overall bad outweighed the overall good. For instance, the budget reconciliation bill is to reduce the deficit, but I have a sneaking suspicion the bill which was to reduce the deficit may end up increasing it.

Second, the bill almost completely eliminates major Medicare without replacing care for low and middle income, and comes on top of the capital gains reduction which only adds to the deficit while giving little relief to middle income persons.

Third, this bill became a legislative barbell, with more and more weighty matters getting hung on the end. After a while, Mr. Speaker, it simply cannot be lifted.

Finally, I am glad it is over. I am glad it is over, Mr. Speaker, because this reconciliation process is like the reconciliation process I used to see in practicing domestic relations law. Too much reconciliation, and after a while, nobody can talk to one another anymore.

NOBEL PEACE PRIZE

(Mr. LEVINE of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to stand before my colleagues and compliment the Dalai Lama for the receipt of the Nobel Peace Prize earlier today. There could be a no more deserving recipient of this extraordinary honor than the Dalai Lama. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Nobel Peace Prize is the perfect award for this noble champion of peace. I cannot help but compare and contrast with real sadness the Dalai Lama's face of peace that is presented to the world, with the face of repression and brutality provided and given to the world by the current government of the Chinese People's Republic. It is with real sadness, Mr. Speaker, that I heard that the government in Beijing was critical of the bestowing of the Nobel Peace Prize on the Dalai Lama, because, in fact, with the exception of that government, I believe that people throughout the world, including the people in China, have every reason to rejoice that a man of peace, a man who has symbolized nonviolence, courage, a man who has stood up to oppression, and a man who has symbolized nonviolence, has been awarded the Nobel Peace Prize earlier today.

The Dalai Lama has become, over the past 30 years, a symbol of peace and a leading international spokesman for the cause of nonviolent social change. His spiritual and political leadership of Tibetans has been the principal force for the preservation of the Tibetan culture and the Tibetan way of life. By his example, and by his leadership, nonviolence remains the tool of the Tibetan people, in their resistance to oppression.

He was selected to become the Dalai Lama at the age of 2, after which he pursued a rigorous 18-year course in metaphysics. In a recent Time magazine profile of him entitled "Tibet's Living Buddha," Time concludes that:

> The single most extraordinary thing about him may simply be his sturdy, unassuming humanity. He is, in his way, as down to earth as the Hardy Brown oxfords he wears under his monastic robes, and in his eyes is still the mischief of the little boy who used to give his lamas fits with his invincible skills at hide-and-seek.

Times quotes his brother as saying:

> I recall one summer day—I must have been about 7—when my mother took me to the summer palace to see his holiness * * * when we got there his holiness was watering his plants. The next thing I knew, he was turning the hose on me.

The Dalai Lama is renowned for teaching compassion and love rather than vengeance or hate. In response to China's repression of his own people, he has said:

> There is no point in developing hatred for the Chinese. Rather, we should develop respect for them and love and compassion.

Indeed, it would be difficult to devise an award that would take note of all the roles and functions which His Holiness was fulfilled in such an exemplary way. He is, of course, a spiritual leader. However, his spirtual leadership extends not only to Tibetan Buddists, but to all people of religious faith, both through his devout example and through his officiation at numerous interfaith services. As an international statesman, he kept alive the hopes and cause of his land and his people and has shown great leadership and initiative in advancing the cause of a peaceful resolution to the status of Tibet. And as an advocate of human rights, nonviolence and peaceful change he is an inspiration and example to all who seek justice. Truly, the Nobel is the only award that does justice to the work of this man.

I join my colleagues and his Holinesses' many well-wishers throughout the world today in celebrating the wise and fitting choice of the Nobel Committee in honoring the Dalai Lama's wisdom, his leadership, and the strength of the human spirit in the face of adversity, which his life so profoundly demonstrates.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 2505

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my name removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 2505.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLIN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

PANAMA AND NORIEGA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, the coup in Panama by mid-level officers against the notorious drug trafficker, Manuel Noriega, failed after several hours of fighting in the capital.

Rebellious troops occupied the Panama Department Forces headquarters in Panama City, but units loyal to Noriega regained control of the main barracks after heavy fighting.

Noriega, who was apparently held prisoner, condemned the uprising and called it "yet another attempt by the United States to prevent the implementation of the Torrijos-Carter treaties—on turning over the Panama Canal—and install a government of sellouts."

President Bush has denied that the U.S. Government instigated the coup attempt. However, other administration officials have said word had passed at least three times this week that an attempt against Noriega was imminent. Others have said that his fate was discussed with a U.S. officer while being held prisoner.

President Bush's desire that Noriega be ousted has been clear in numerous statements since he took office, including one in May when he called on Panama's Defense Forces in the strongest terms to reject Noriega. "The will of the people should not be thwarted by this man and a handful of these Doberman thugs," Bush said at that time, calling on Panamanians to "do everything they can to get Mr. Noriega out of there."

Yet in this instance, the President did nothing. The Bush administration had the opportunity to intervene on the side of the coup leaders. He missed a precious opportunity to oust Noriega.

The question is, did we know, Mr. President? And if we did know, as some in your administration suggest, why did we do nothing?

BANK EXAMINER WARNS OF INSUFFICIENT EXAMINATIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, on August 1, 1989, I outlined to the House some of the serious problems that I have found with the Comptroller of the Currency [OCC] supervision of our national banks. At hearings on the health of the deposit insurance funds before the Financial Institutions Subcommittee 2 weeks ago, the regulators played down problems of inadequate supervision.

The generals may say we are winning the war, but the troops in the field know better.

I have received a letter from a concerned OCC bank examiner—an individual on the front lines of bank supervision. The writer warned:

> I am afraid if you * * * [do] not do something soon the National Banking System could end up like the Savings and Loan mess. Remember they were "self regulated" and that is what the OCC wants their banks to do. Please require the OCC to spend more time in their banks doing on-site work with procedures to make sure all areas are reviewed. . . .

The examiner enclosed a copy of a recently completed OCC employee attitude survey that showed that 75 percent of OCC employees believed more on-site supervision of banks was necessary.

This examiner's worries trouble me. They come from someone on the front lines in our battle to preserve the safety and soundness of our Nation's banks. Further, they mirror concerns I raised to this body 2 months ago. And they bring home a principle that I raised earlier—we must act now to improve bank supervision—there is no time for delay.

Close bank supervision is the key to protecting the banking system. Where supervision is inadequate, as with the thrift industry, the costs to the American taxpayer can be astronomical. Yet, where adequate supervision is provided, the banking system can be operated in a safe and efficient manner, providing much needed funds to families and businesses throughout our country.

At the heart of the supervisory process is the full-scale, on-site safety and soundness examination. Correctly done, this examination provides regulators with important information on the financial condition of the institution. It will uncover fraud and mismanagement. It will protect the taxpayer from having to foot the bill for unscrupulous bank operators looking to fleece the American public.

Yet my review last August of the OCC's examination techniques discovered serious flaws in the OCC's supervisory system. Increased reliance is being placed on so-called off-site supervisory techniques—computer analysis of data, review of call reports, rumor analysis—at the expense of more traditional examination activities. On-site examinations, where the examiner goes into the institution annually, rolls up his sleeves and reviews the institution's whole portfolio, have been phased down. Now OCC employees share my concerns.

This deemphasis of on-site supervision is unacceptable. I again call upon the Comptroller of the Currency to reverse this trend and place a renewed emphasis on full-scale in-depth on-site examinations.

My concerns are even more pressing at this time because I believe that our Nation's banking system stands at a critical juncture. At the hearings before the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions, which I chair, it was made clear to me that potentially serious problems exist in the banking industry which, if not addressed now, may have serious repercussions down the road. Banks are failing in record numbers—nearly 1,000 have failed or received FDIC assistance in the last 6 years alone. Reserve amounts in the Bank Insurance Fund decreased by $4.2 billion last year. Problem banks, those rated 4 or 5 on the CAMEL rating system, number over 1,000, putting an additional $200 billion in assets at risk. Further, bank exposure to such high-risk activities as LDC debt and LBO transactions is substantial. Many of our Nation's major money center banks have recently acknowledged that large portions of their LDC debt portfolio will never be repaid and have suffered huge losses as a result.

This is not the time to be decreasing the level of on-site supervision in national banks.

The OCC must change its ways. The safety and soundness of our Nation's banking system depends upon it.

RECENT EVENTS IN TIBET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROSE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, recent events in Tibet and China have drawn the eyes of the world to the tragic circumstances under which the Tibetan and Chinese people suffer. Many firsthand accounts from tourists, human rights advocates, and journalists confirm that China continues to apply oppressive measures against the Tibetans that are reminiscent of the infamous "Cultural Revolution." Certainly, the world takes no pleasure in witnessing, and being reminded of, the inhumane and terrifying treatment that some people, or groups of people, mete out to fellow human beings. Unfortunately, mankind has not yet determined how to free itself of the recurrence of such tragedies as the Holocaust, the Killing Fields of Cambodia and the Cultural Revolution.

Perhaps one bright spot, in this otherwise abysmal situation, is that the world has become intimately acquainted with the character and leadership of His Holiness the Dalai Lama and the courage of the Tibetan people. Even under the most dire circumstances, the Tibetan people, as a whole, continue to heed the Dalai Lama's call to express their desire for independence from Chinese rule and to confront their oppressors in a peaceful manner. The Dalai Lama recently summed up his philosophy in a recent interview with a Time correspondent by saying, "As people who practice Mahayana Buddhist teaching, [Tibetans] pray every day to develop some kind of unlimited altruism. So there is no point in developing hatred for the Chinese. Rather, we should develop respect for them and love and compassion." In this spirit, the Dalai Lama has formally made proposals to the Chinese Government for a peaceful, negotiated settlement of the ongoing crisis in Tibet. Although the Chinese have rebuffed the Dalai Lama's offers to begin earnest negotiations on the future status of Tibet and have condemned international expressions of concern for the tragic situation in Tibet, the Dalai Lama and his representatives continue to pursue a peaceful resolution to the growing conflict in Tibet. Indeed, such leadership is rare today and can easily be placed in the same mold that made such leaders as Martin L. King, Jr. and Mohandas K. Ghandi.

I have had the great pleasure of knowing the Dalai Lama for a number of years, and I can personally attest to the fact that, in all my associations with him, whether in public or in private, he never fails to express his sincere concerns for the need of all human beings to act with universal responsibility and compassion toward one another. Although the Dalai Lama serves in many capacities, from the leader of the Tibetan people to a "simple Buddhist monk," he is known first and foremost as a man of peace, tolerance, and great understanding.

In these days when many world leaders have turned to terrorism as an expression or act against a policy or a government, I sincerely believe that the peaceful efforts of the Dalai Lama and the Tibetan people to end oppressive rule in Tibet should be strongly supported by all governments—not only in an effort to end human rights abuses in Tibet, but also as a strong statement that efforts to peacefully resolve conflicts take precedence over and transcend acts of violence and terrorism. It is my sincere hope that each of us will give careful consideration to the signiificance of the Nobel Committee's decision to award His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama of Tibet the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize; take heart to the plight of the Tibetan people; and renew our commitment to aid the Dalai Lama and the people of Tibet in their efforts to bring democracy to Tibet and to China through peaceful means.

H. CON RES. 209

Whereas His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama of Tibet is the spiritual mentor to millions of Buddhists throughout the world and the leader of the Tibetan people;

Whereas His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama of Tibet has persistently promoted justice, offered hope to the oppressed, and upheld the rights and dignity of all men and women regardless of faith, nationality, or political views;

Whereas His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama is a world leader who has admirably and with dedication advanced the cause of regional and world peace through adherence to the doctrines of nonviolence and universal responsibility;

Whereas His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama has, through his example, his teachings, and his travels, furthered mutual understanding, respect, and unity among nations and individuals; and

Whereas the Norwegian Nobel Committee has awarded His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama of Tibet the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress commends His Holiness the Dalai Lama for furthering the just and honorable causes that he has championed, and congratulates him for being awarded the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize.

THE DRUG AND ALCOHOL DEMAND REDUCTION EFFECTIVENESS DEMONSTRATION ACT OF 1989

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today, along with Mr. DELLUMS, chairman of the House District of Columbia Committee, Mr. FAUNTROY, D.C. Delegate, Mr. WHEAT, Mr. DYMALLY, and Mr. MORRISON of Washington, a bill which will:

First, establish a comprehensive demonstration program in the District of Columbia for the treatment of drug and alcohol abuse;

Second, provide for treatment of drug and substance abuse as a major line of defense against the drug problem;

Third, make inroads in controlling the massive increase in crime related to drug and substance abuse;

Fourth, provide for increases in worker productivity through coordination with social services and other interventions in the treatment process;

Fifth, assist in controlling the spread of AIDS through effective treatment and education concerning the role of substance abuse in the AIDS epidemic;

Sixth, accept that different severities and conditions of addiction will require different treatment modalities;

Seventh, incorporate the concept of triage and case management, key elements in the assurance of proper treatment referral and compliance;

Eighth, mandate the evaluation of clinical effectiveness and cost effectiveness of various treatment modalities and providers leading to the termination of ineffective approaches;

Ninth, require copayment by patients, while not denying treatment to the needy;

Tenth, mandate the development and implementation of an effective prospective payment system to control costs and ensure the most effective treatment of addiction; and

Eleventh, encourage a broad socioeconomic mix, but mandate that a minimum of 50 percent of the program's patients will be from the ranks of the working poor and the unemployed.

The bill which we are introducing rests on the well-founded concept that drug dependency is a chronic relapsing disease for which initial therapy must be followed by a prolonged period of followup care to prevent relapse. This concept has a medical and psychological basis and fits with the observations of law enforcement experts, who see recidivism as the usual outcome of programs which provide only initial treatment.

As a member of the House Committee on the District of Columbia, I believe we must do something to move forward the effort to limit the disastrous consequences of the drug abuse epidemic in the Nation's Capital. In the area of substance abuse treatment, we believe we can act to develop a comprehensive, responsible, cost conscious system of care to address the demand side of the war on drugs in the District of Columbia.

This bill fits closely with the President's national drug control strategy. We note especially the sections on pages 40–42 which focus on the need to improve system inefficiencies in the drug treatment and rehabilitation system and to promote demonstration programs which will make such improvements, gather data, evaluate effectiveness, increase coordination with other human service systems, assure accountability, and control costs. The legislation we have introduced includes many of these same objectives.

This bill allows entry into a treatment program only after the formal assessment of the individual's severity of addiction. With proper triage, the most clinically effective, most cost-effective treatment will be selected for each individual. Costly, ineffective treatments will not be reimbursable.

This bill also calls for the production of much-needed data on the effectiveness of various therapeutic modalities. Data will be collected on the number of applicants, time between application and start of therapy, severity of addiction profile, treatment regimen prescribed, compliance, duration of therapy, maintenance of secondary prevention regimen, and outcome. These data will be analyzed by an independent academic evaluator, allowing an objective review of the program.

The emphasis on the criminal justice approach to the control of drugs, or the control of the supply is, by itself, inadequate. This bill's treatment-based approach is a complement to law enforcement, not a replacement. The program will provide the methodology for establishing and monitoring treatment so that only effective therapeutic programs are paid for. The drug abuser will pay according to ability, but it does not deny therapy to the poor.

Now is the time to take action by mounting this tightly controlled, comprehensive approach to dealing with drug abuse treatment in the District of Columbia.

COUNT IT ALL: REDEFINING DEFICIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, American citizens deserve to know how much their Government owes. Today I am introducing a bill to redefine the term "deficit." My bill would require the President to include in his budget a statement of the estimated size of the deficit excluding trust fund transactions. This is the Federal funds deficit—the real deficit.

This is the most straight forward way of defining the deficit. The real deficit is the dollars the Federal Government borrows to fill the gap between its income and its spending.

Current procedures for calculating the deficit masks the size of the real deficit—the Federal funds deficit. The result is confusing, deceptive, and threatening.

The American people are confused about what the real deficit is. Rose-colored pronouncements deceive them into believing that the deficit is on a reducing diet when, in fact, the Federal funds deficit is growing fatter with the passing years. The capacity of the Federal Government to meet future obligations is threatened. Opportunities for the Congress to respond to national needs are curtailed by the booming growth in interest payments on the national debt.

Although supplementary documents provided with the President's budget do identify the Federal funds deficit, the principal budget document focuses on the "unified budget deficit." The unified budget deficit figure is reached by subtracting from the real deficit—the Federal funds deficit—the so-called surplus revenues collected by trust funds. Those are not surpluses. That money was collected for a specific purpose, whether it is spent this year, next year or 10 years from now.

The jungle of deficit confusion is easily seen by reviewing the data in table 1 covering the fiscal years 1980 through 1994. It includes the data for the Federal funds deficit, trust fund surpluses, the unified budget deficit, and, beginning with fiscal year 1985, the "maximum allowed deficit" under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit management scheme.

TABLE 1

[In billions of dollars; — deficit, + surplus]

Fiscal year	Federal funds	Trust funds	Unified budget	G-R-H maximum amount
1980	—82.6	+8.8	—73.8
1981	—85.8	+6.8	—78.9
1982	—134.2	+6.3	—127.9
1983	—230.8	+23.0	—207.8
1984	—218.2	+32.9	—185.3
1985	—266.4	+54.2	—212.3	—171.9
1986	—283.0	+61.8	—221.2	—144.0
1987	—222.3	+72.9	—149.7	—144.0
1988	—252.9	+97.8	—155.1	—136.0
1989	[1] —283.0	+121.0	—161.0	—100.0
1990	[1] —276.0	+135.0	—141.0	—64.0
1991	[1] —287.0	+143.0	—143.0	—28.0
1992	[1] —291.0	+150.0	—141.0	0
1993	[1] —304.0	+162.0	—143.0	([2])
1994	[1] —303.0	+175.0	—128.0	([2])

[1] Data in these lines are from table II–6, "The Economic and Budget Outlook: An Update," Congressional Budget Office, August 1989.

[2] Current law does not contain Gramm-Rudman-Hollings numbers for fiscal year 1993 and 1994.

Note: The "Trust Funds" column includes surpluses in the following trust funds: Social Security, Medicare, Military Retirement, Civilian Retirement, Unemployment, Highway and Airports and Airways.

Data sources: "Historical Tables, Budget of the United States Government, Fiscal Year 1990," submitted to the Congress by the President and "The Economic and Budget Outlook: An Update," Congressional Budget Office, August 1989.

Under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings scheme, the American people have been given empty promises that the budget deficit is being cut and that the budget will be balanced by 1992. The facts show just how false that assurance is. Not only will the budget not be in balance, but the August estimate of the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] projects a record high Federal funds deficit for 1992.

Further, in August the CBO estimated that the 1989 Federal funds deficit would be 250 percent larger than it was in 1980.

Such budgetary game playing is surely one of the reasons the American people view the Congress with deep cynicism. It is also one of the reasons the American people have been wary of agreeing to the steps which must be taken to control Federal budget deficit. There is no practical relationship between the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings maximum deficit amount and the real deficit—the Federal funds deficit.

Using the trust funds to borrow from tomorrow to pay today's bills threatens the Nation's capacity to keep its pension and health care pledges to senior citizens.

Because of the rising Federal funds deficit, net interest payments on the Federal debt has been stuck on the up escalator. A large share of that interest money is going offshore, to foreign creditors who have lent the U.S. Government money to pay its bills. In 1981, net interest on the debt was $69 billion. CBO has estimated that the net interest payments on the debt will reach $169 billion. That is a $100 billion difference.

More to the point, Congress had:

$100 billion less to spend on educating our children.

$100 billion less to fight the war on drugs.

$100 billion less to aid victims of disasters like Hurricane Hugo.

$100 billion less to help keep rural hospitals open.

$100 billion less to fund farm programs.

$100 billion less to flood control, highways, housing, generating private sector jobs, water and sewer systems, and public transportation.

It is time to strip the deficit debate down to the core of truth. It is time to abandon fantasy land and face up to the real world challenge of controlling the Federal funds deficit. My proposal to redefine deficit will put the problem face up on the table and help us hammer the deficit into surrender.

H.R. 3411

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PROJECTED DEFICIT.

Section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(27)(A) the amount (if any) by which estimated expenditures exceed estimated receipts of the Government, excluding trust fund transactions, for the current fiscal year and the fiscal year for which the budget is submitted, and the 4 fiscal years after that year; and

"(B) the amount (if any) by which expenditures exceed receipts of the Government, excluding trust fund transactions, in the prior fiscal year.".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendment made by section 1 shall apply with respect to any budget submitted by the President after the date of enactment of this Act as required by section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3026

Mr. DIXON submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 3026) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. 101-270)

The Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3026) "making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective House as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 6, 9, 10, 12, and 13, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Restore the matter stricken, amended to read as follows:

SEC. 137. For the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, the District of Columbia shall pay interest on its quarterly payments to the United States that are made more than 60 days from the date of receipt of an itemized statement from the Federal Bureau of Prisons of amounts due for housing District of Columbia convicts in Federal penitentiaries for the preceding quarter.

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 11, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19, 21, and 22.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3026) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the actions agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

FEDERAL PAYMENT FOR WATER AND SEWER SERVICES

Amendment No. 1: Appropriates $8,685,000 for the first quarter payment as proposed by the Senate instead of $34,740,000 for the full year payment as proposed by the House. The reduction of $26,055,000 below the House level will be paid by Federal agencies and other organizations from their own budgets. The conferees are recommending under amendment number 16 that the District's Public Works Act of 1954 be amended to allow for a one-year trial in which Federal agencies and other organizations will pay for water and sewer services provided to them by the District government. A further discussion of this issue may be found under amendment number 16.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE INITIATIVE

Amendment No. 2: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which appropriates $20,300,000 for fiscal year 1991 for the construction of the 800-bed Correctional Treatment Facility within the District of Columbia. The cost of the facility is estimated at $85 million with completion expected in November 1991. The $20,300,000 recommended by the conferees will provide a total of $70,300,000 in Federal Funds with the balance of $14,700,000 coming from long-term borrowings by the District government as provided for in the fiscal year 1989 supplemental (103 Stat. 117; Public Law 101-45, approved June 30, 1989).

Correctional Treatment Facility.—The conferees express concern about the need to mitigate the adverse effects that construction of the new Correctional Treatment Facility (CTF) being built in Southeast Washington will have on the historic Congressional Cemetery and the adjacent residential neighborhood. The conferees also agree that the CTF should be constructed as quickly as possible. The conferees direct that District officials continue to meet with representatives of neighborhood groups, residents, and the Cemetery association about mitigating the effects of the facility on their neighborhood. One option with merit could be an integrated landscaping plan designed to maximize screening of the neighborhood and Congressional Cemetery from the new facility.

The conferees are also concerned about the effect of water run-off from the construction site of the CFT onto the Congressional Cemetery. The conferees direct the District's Department of Public Works (DPW) to submit a plan by November 30, 1989 to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations to resolve the water run-off problem during construction and after the facility has opened. DPW may consult with any other appropriate agency of the District or Federal governments that it deems necessary in preparing its plan.

It is the conferees' express intent that these consultations and report are not intended to delay the project in any way whatever.

DRUG EMERGENCY

Amendment No. 3: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which appropriates $31,772,000 in Federal funds to close open-air drug markets, to increase police visibility, and to provide for speedier court processing of drug-related violent cases. These funds will be used to hire 700 new police officers, to provide eight additional Superior Court judges and supporting staff, and to fund drug prevention programs in the public schools and drug treatment programs in the Department of Human Services. A further discussion of these programs is included under amendments number 5, 9 and 10, and 12. Appointment of the eight additional judges is contingent upon enactment of authorizing legislation which is discussed under amendment number 18.

GOVERNMENTAL DIRECTION AND SUPPORT

Amendment No. 4: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which deletes $150,000 in local funds and language proposed by the House earmarking the funds for Admission to Statehood and inserts language proposed by the Senate that provides an additional $150,000 in local funds to remain available until expended to close open-air drug markets, increase police visibility, and provide for speedier court processing of drug-related violent cases. The conferees recommended the transfer of these funds to the Metropolitan Police Department under amendment number 5 for the purposes specified by the Senate amendment.

Census Regulations.—The conferees have become aware that prisoners housed at the District's Lorton Prison Complex are counted at the location under Census Bureau regulations. While this is the normal practice when taking a census, the unique nature of the Lorton Complex, i.e., the prison facility of one jurisdiction within the borders of another jurisdiction, was certainly not contemplated when those regulations were promulgated. As the Mayor's Commission on Budget and Financial Priorities begins its work, the conferees believe that the financial effects of this regulation should be considered as part of deliberations on the appropriate level of the Federal payment. The conferees also agree that the appropriate authorizing committees with jurisdiction over census matters and District government affairs may want to review the equity of the present regulations.

PUBLIC SAFETY AND JUSTICE

Amendment No. 5: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $861,341,000, of which $150,000 shall be derived by transfer from "Government Direction and Support"

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action appropriates $861,341,000 including $150,000 to be derived by transfer from "Government Direction and Support," instead of $833,206,000 as proposed by the House and $861,191,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase of $28,135,000 above the House allowance will finance additional activities in the District's war on drugs.

Metropolitan Police Department.—The conference agreement appropriates $250,041,000 including $150,000 to be transferred from "Governmental Direction and Support" instead of $232,411,000 as proposed by the House and $255,560,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase of $17,630,000 above the House level provides nine-month funding for the department to hire an additional 700 new police officers to increase police visibility on the streets, to close down open-air drug markets, and to stem the increases in drug-related crime in the Nation's Capital. With the 700 new hires recommended by the conferees and the 300 new police officers already included in the District's budget request, the Metropolitan Police Department will have a total of 5,133 authorized police positions in fiscal year 1990, which exceeds the previous department high of 5,100 reached in fiscal year 1970 and maintained through fiscal year 1974. The conferees recognize that it will not be possible to hire 1,000 new police officers early enough in the fiscal year to require the use of all of the funds provided and that reprogramming requests will no doubt be necessary for increased recruitment efforts and other measures designed to deal with the current emergency. The conferees are also recommending language under amendment number 7 to allow the $17,630,000 provided for the 700 new police officers to remain available until expended. District officials are directed not to use these carryover funds to replace part of the base in the Department's fiscal year 1991 budget. Nor is the department to absorb a disproportionate share of mandatory increases, such as pay costs, than other District agencies.

The situation with crime in the District should not be viewed as business as usual, and in order to provide police officials with maximum flexibility in managing the department in its efforts in the war on crime, the conferees direct that the drug emergency funds of $17,630,000 shall be available exclusively to the department with the first priority given to the hiring of new police officers to bring the level up to the authorized strength of 5,133. If not expended for personal services, the funds may be used to purchase goods and services in the non-personal object classes including support and other materials as well as capital items.

The conferees request that quarterly reports be provided to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations showing the amounts obligated and expended and the purposes, in detail, for which the funds were obligated and expended.

A summary of the number of sworn officers authorized and funded for fiscal years 1969–1990 follows:

METROPOLITAN POLICE DEPARTMENT—UNIFORMED (SWORN) POLICE OFFICERS

	Number authorized	Number funded
Fiscal year:
1969	4,100	3,341
1970	5,100	4,295
1971	5,100	5,013
1972	5,100	4,727
1973	5,100	4,974
1974	5,100	4,909
1975	4,750	4,700
1976	4,630	4,567
1977	4,470	4,333
1978	4,150	4,096
1979	4,120	4,120
1980	4,242	4,096
1981	4,025	3,880
1982	4,121	3,880
1983	3,958	3,880

Court of Appeals.—The conference action provides $4,996,000 for the Court of Appeals as proposed by the Senate instead of $4,707,000 as proposed by the House. The increase of $289,000 above the House allowance will cover mandatory fringe benefit costs and increases in the cost of computerized legal research as well as necessary expenses of replacing and maintaining court equipment and printing of the court's decisions. The increase agreed to by the conferees will provide interim assistance for the Court of Appeals in handling its caseload although it does not address the congestion and delay problems identified in recent studies of the court by various judicial organizations.

Superior Court.—The conference action provides $64,939,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $62,339,000 as proposed by the House. The increase of $2,600,000 above the House allowance includes $1,500,000 to fund eight additional associate judges, subject to the enactment of authorizing legislation, and 56 related staff to assist the court in attempting to address the critical emergency resulting from the increasing numbers of violent crimes cases. The conferees agree that the increases recommended are a conservative response to the action needs of the Superior Court and relate solely to the increases of 700 police officers. While the additional eight associate judges recommended by the conferees, the Superior Court will consist of chief judge and 58 associate judges. The conferees recognize that the eight new judges will not be appointed immediately since the appointment is contingent upon the enactment of authorizing legislation, and are commending language in amendment number 7 to allow these funds to remain available until expended so they can be used for their intended purpose and possibly reduce the Superior Court's requirement in fiscal year 1991. As noted earlier, appointment of the eight new judges is contingent upon action by the authorizing committee and is discussed under amendment 18. The conferees urge those committees to act swiftly in keeping with the emergency nature of the action by the conferees in recommending an additional appropriation of $31,772,000 for the drug emergency.

An additional $100,000 is included for overtime costs in the Superior Court to allow the Court to be open more hours to deal with the increased caseload.

D.C. Court System.—The conference action provides $22,125,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $20,178,000 as proposed by the House. The increase of $1,947,000 includes $1,500,000, for a security system for the courthouse that will use contract guards who will be trained, certified, deputized and supervised by the U.S. Marshals Service. The conferees direct that the courts and the District include this amount in the budget base for courthouse security in future years. The conference action also includes $374,000 and nine court reporter positions transferred from the Superior Court, $56,000 and one training officer position transferred to the Superior Court, and $129,000 to restore funds for staff training and staff overtime to better handle the increasing caseloads in the D.C. court and for premiums for judges' liability insurance which would not be necessary except for the fact that the Council for the District of Columbia has failed to complete action on legislation amending the D.C. Code to ensure appropriate liability for judicial employees comparable to that provided for medical employees under D.C. Code, sec. 1-1215(b). The need for this legislation results from the liability exposure created by the Supreme Court decision in the case of Pulliam v. Allen (1984) 104 S. Ct. 1970. This issue was first called to the attention of District officials in House Report 99-223, dated July 24, 1985. The report stated that —

• • • the Committee urges the Mayor and Council to pursue the expedited passage of legislation amending the D.C. Code to ensure appropriate coverage for judicial employees thereby eliminating the need for funds to cover insurance premiums in fiscal year 1986.

That was over four years ago.

Office of the Corporation Counsel.—The conference action provides $13,989,000 instead of $13,384,000 as proposed by the House and the Senate. The increase of $605,000 is for 10 additional attorneys and five supporting staff to assist the office in fighting the war on drugs which ranges from direct prosecution of juvenile drug offenders to defending anti-drug legislative initiatives and employee drug testing programs. The Office is also involved in bringing forfeiture actions against property used by drug dealers, fighting against false arrest and Constitutional tort lawsuits brought by drug arrestees, and dealing with the societal consequences of drug abuse such as abused and neglected children. The conferees agree that the Office of the Corporation Counsel is part of the prosecutional apparatus for the District and should be included in efforts to deal with the war on drugs.

Department of Corrections.—The conference action provides $232,529,000 instead of $227,465,000 as proposed by the House and the Senate. The increase of $5,064,000 will restore the undetermined reductions recommended by the Senate to cover the fiscal year 1989 fourth quarter payment to the Federal Bureau of Prisons which was forgiven in the fiscal year 1989 supplemental (103 Stat. 117, Public Law 101-45, approved June 30, 1989). The conference agreement provides $36,311,000 for payment to the Federal Bureau of Prisons to cover the costs of housing District inmates in Federal facilities as proposed by the Senate.

FIRE DEPARTMENT

Amendment No. 6: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate which would have required the District to maintain staffing levels of two-piece engine companies in accordance with the Fire Department Rules and Regulations until final adjudication by the relevant courts or October 1, 1990, whichever occurred later. The conferees agree that District officials are required to abide by the Fire Department Rules and Regulations and should not submit budget requests which are inconsistent with its own rules and regulations. While the conferees are deleting the subject language without prejudice, District officials are directed to submit budget requests which are consistent with, rather than contrary to, the District's existing rules and regulations.

Amendment No. 7: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following: : Provided further, That $17,630,000 for the Metropolitan Police Department and $2,600,000 for the District of Columbia Superior Court shall remain available until expended.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action provides that the additional funds provided to the Metropolitan Police Department to hire 700 new police officers and to the Superior Court for eight new judges and related staff in connection with the Drug Emergency shall remain available until expended. The conferees believe it will not be possible to hire 700 new police officers or to nominate and confirm the eight new judges at the beginning of the fiscal year, and are therefore recommending that those funds remain available until expended.

Amendment No. 8: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which earmarks $36,311,000 for payment to the Federal Bureau of Prisons to cover the costs of housing District inmates in Federal facilities. The $36,311,000 includes the fiscal year 1989 fourth quarter payment of $5,064,000 previously forgiven in the fiscal year 1989 supplemental (103 Stat. 117, Public Law 101-45, approved June 30, 1989).

PUBLIC EDUCATION SYSTEM

Amendment Nos. 9 and 10: Appropriate $691,120,000 of which $502,346,000 is for the public schools as proposed by the Senate, instead of $689,353,000 of which $500,579,000 is for the public schools as proposed by the House. The increase of $1,767,000 above the House allowance includes (1) $1,347,000 as proposed by the Senate for after-school activities to provide students with safe places to spend their out-of-school hours and constructive alternatives to street life, and (2) $420,000 as proposed by the Senate to fund 70 to 100 slots by contract in the Options Program at the National Children's Museum. The Options Program was developed by the National Learning Center to provide a drug intervention program of educational therapy for high risk students from ages 10 to 14.

Amendment No. 11: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: Provided further, That funds provided under this head in Public Law 100-202 (101 Stat. 1329-94) to match private contributions to the District of Columbia Public Schools Foundation shall be available until September 30, 1990.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action extends the availability of $200,000 in District funds for the D.C. Public Schools Foundation ACCORD Program to September 30, 1990 instead of September 30, 1989 as proposed by the Senate. The ACCORD Program is a partnership between business and civic communities, government agencies and the public schools charged with developing a five-year model demonstration project to provide high school students with necessary skills to obtain entry level career employment in both the public and private sectors.

This $200,000 was appropriated in fiscal year 1988 (Public Law 100-202, approved December 22, 1987) contingent upon receipt of $200,000 in private sector contributions which the Foundation has not yet raised.

The conferees request that detailed quarterly reports be provided to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations on the ACCORD Program setting out the progress made to date as well as a comparison of the program's goals and objectives with the accomplishments.

HUMAN SUPPORT SERVICES

Amendment No. 12: Appropriates $827,918,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $825,898,000 as proposed by the House. The increase of $2,020,000 above the House allowance will fund a program to locate and provide treatment on demand for drug abusers who are pregnant in an effort to combat the striking increases in crack cocaine infants who are born with an addiction to cocaine as a result of drug abuse by their mothers.

Project Volta.—The conferees find the amount of time it has taken the District's Department of Human Services to consummate a contract with Alexander Graham Bell Association for the Deaf on Project Volta to be completely unacceptable. It has been two years since $990,000 was made available for the early infancy detection program to identify hearing-impaired children. The conferees have been advised that the problem has been over a District requirement that contracts be entered into only for services rendered, which is a sound requirement. However, if District officials were committed to this project, a way would have been found to make a portion of the amount available as a grant, or to pay at the beginning of the month rather than at the end. The conferees direct that the amount made available for this program be made as a grant to the Bell Association. The conferees further direct that DHS make monthly reports to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations on the status of this project, including when the grant will be made. The reports are to continue until such time as the grant is made.

Emergency shelter and exorbitant costs.—The District has a serious housing problem. In 1984, the District provided services for a total 541 families. In 1988 that was the number who entered shelters daily.

The Mayor has pledged to end the use of the Capital City Inn. But, as noted in the news media, little progress has been made because as soon as people move out, the same number of persons need to move in. This need precludes the closing of any facilities, even those in such conditions as the Capital City Inn.

The District is also facing a new law which limits the stay for homeless people to 15 days in hotels and six months in transitional housing.

This year, the Federal Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) proposed goals and timetables for the District for the repair and habitation of vacant units for housing. Little action has been recorded.

Therefore, the conferees strongly request a thorough explanation of the status of the goals and timetables proposed by HUD and the identification of those officials responsible for implementation. Most important, the report should delineate the District's plan for breaking the pattern of homelessness and the use of hotels for those without shelter. The conferees request District officials to provide a report in time for review of the fiscal year 1991 budget.

Transitional housing needs.—It has recently come to the conferees attention that in order to comply with court orders on the provision of emergency shelter, as required by Initiative 17 (D.C. Law 7-86), the city plans to terminate two $300,000 programs that have longer-term goals.

According to city documents, the ConServe program is considered a model program that enables homeless families to improve their living conditions by helping them find apartments and providing rent subsidies for up to a year. This type of program is essential when the number of homeless families continues to grow, and 75 percent of the District's expenditures for homeless assistance is directed toward providing for family needs.

The other program, New Endeavors for Women, provides shelter, meals and counseling assistance, and after one year of operation has placed 80 percent of its women in permanent housing. New Endeavors operates from District-owned space that will have to be converted to emergency shelter by the first of the year.

These two programs, and others like them, provide homeless individuals with the means to become self-sufficient again and offer the best opportunity to break the cycle of homelessness and hopelessness.

PUBLIC WORKS

Suitland Parkway.—The conferees are aware that the National Park Service is currently renovating the Suitland Parkway. The Congress has strongly supported this project and has provided funding to complete the important safety and physical improvements to the parkway. The conferees are also aware that the District Government owns and is responsible for maintenance on that portion of the parkway within the District of Columbia. In order to accomplish completion of the total renovation to this gateway to the capital from the south, including the portion within the District of Columbia, the conferees direct the District to develop a plan, along with a schedule and cost estimates for completion, to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations by April 1, 1990.

CAPITAL OUTLAY

Amendment No. 13: Restates the total amount appropriated for the "capital outlay" appropriation as proposed by the Senate to clarify that the $20,300,000 for the Correctional Treatment Facility is included in that total and is not over and above the total. This amendment is related to amendment number 14.

Amendment No. 14: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which clarifies that $20,300,000 in Federal funds appropriated for fiscal year 1991 in amendment number 2 is available solely for the Correctional Treatment Facility to be constructed in the District of Columbia.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 15: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the number stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: 39,262.

Sec. 110A. (a) No funds appropriated by this Act may be expended for the compensation of any person appointed to fill any vacant position in any agency under the personnel control of the Mayor unless:

((1) The position is to be filled by a sworn officer of the Metropolitan Police Department; or

(2) The position is to be filled as follows:

(A) By a person who is currently employed by the District of Columbia government at a grade level that is equal to the grade level of the position to be filled; or

(B) By a person who is currently employed by the District of Columbia government at a grade level higher than the grade level of the position to be filled, and who is willing to assume a lower grade level in order to fill the position.

(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall not apply to any position for which the City Administrator certifies that:

(1) the position is necessary to the fulfillment of an identified essential governmental function; and

(2) the position cannot be filled from within the District of Columbia government:

(A) At a grade level that is equal to the grade level of the position to be filled; or

(B) by a person who is currently employed by the District of Columbia government at a grade level higher than the grade level of the position to be filled, and who is willing to assume a lower grade level in order to fill the position.

(c) The City Administrator shall submit the certification required by subsection (b) of this section to the Council on the 1st day of each month.

SEC. 110B. (a) APPLICATION FOR EMPLOYMENT, PROMOTIONS, AND REDUCTIONS IN FORCE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The rules issued pursuant to the amendments to the District of Columbia Government Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act of 1978 made by the Residency Preference Amendment Act of 1988 (D.C. Law 7-203) shall include the provisions described in paragraph (2).

(2) DESCRIPTION OF POLICIES.—

(A) POLICY REGARDING APPLICATION FOR EMPLOYMENT.—the Mayor of the District of Columbia may not give an applicant for District of Columbia government employment in the Career Service who claims a District residency preference more than a 5 point hiring preference over an applicant not claiming such a preference, and, in the case of equally qualified applicants, shall give an applicant claiming such a preference priority in hiring over an applicant not claiming such a preference.

(B) POLICY REGARDING PROMOTIONS AND REDUCTIONS IN FORCE FOR CAREER SERVICE EMPLOYEES.—In calculating years of service for the purpose of implementing a reduction-in-force, the Mayor may not credit an employee in the Career Service who claims a District residency preference with more than 1 year of additional service credit, and in the case of equally qualified employees, shall give an employee claiming such a preference priority in promotion over an employee not claiming such a preference.

(C) INDIVIDUALS SUBJECT TO PROVISIONS.—The amendments to the District of Columbia Government Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act of 1978 made by the Residency Preference Amendment Act of 1988 shall apply only with respect to individuals claiming a District residency preference or applying for employment with the District of Columbia on or after March 16, 1989.

(b) SCOPE OF 5-YEAR DISTRICT RESIDENCY REQUIREMENT FOR EMPLOYEES CLAIMING PREFERENCE.—

(1) CAREER SERVICE EMPLOYEES.—Section 801(e)(5) of the District of Columbia Government Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act of 1978 (section 1-608.1(e)(5), D.C. Code), as amended by the Residency Preference Amendment Act of 1988 (D.C. Law 7-203), is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(7)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Mayor may not require an individual to reside in the District of Columbia as a condition of employment in the Career Service.

"(B) The Mayor shall provide notice to each employee in the Career Service of the provisions of this subsection that require an employee claiming a residency preference to maintain District residency for 5 consecutive years, and shall only apply such provisions with respect to employees claiming a residency preference on or after March 16, 1989.".

(2) EDUCATIONAL SERVICE EMPLOYEES.—Section 801A(d) of such Act (section 1-609.1(d), D.C. Code), as amended by the Residency Preference Amendment Act of 1988 (D.C. Law 7-203), is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(7)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Boards may not require an individual to reside in the District of Columbia as a condition of employment in the Educational Service.

"(B) The Mayor shall provide notice to each employee in the Educational Service of the provisions of this subsection that require an employee claiming a residency preference to maintain District residency for 5 consecutive years, and shall only apply such provisions with respect to employees claiming a residency preference on or after March 16, 1989."

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action provides an employment ceiling of 39,262 instead of 38,475 as proposed by the House and 39,569 as proposed by the Senate. The increase of 787 above the House allowance relates primarily to the drug emergency and consists of 700 new police officers, 10 additional attorneys and five support positions for the Office of Corporation Counsel, eight additional associate judges and 56 support positions for the Superior Court, and eight court reporters for the Court system.

The conference action inserts language in section 110A submitted under section 132 of the District's budget which, according to information received by the conferees, is designed to reallocate existing personnel resources to eliminate nonessential positions and favor the filling of essential positions. As vacancies occur in areas where required services may suffer without refilling the positions, the language is supposed to provide an incentive to move existing personnel from nonessential positions where the existing employees may be underemployed, to the essential positions where employees and their capabilities and talents will be maximized.

The conference action inserts language in section 110B relating to a hiring preference system for career and educational employees of the District government. The conferees are sensitive to the issue of Home Rule, but are concerned that residency should not remain a prerequisite for employment with the District of Columbia government.

As urged in House Report 100-680 accompanying the fiscal year 1989 District of Columbia Appropriations Act (Public Law 100-462, approved October 1, 1988), the District government has taken steps to implement a hiring preference system that supersedes the residency requirement imposed upon District government employees since 1980.

The conferees have included bill language under section 110B that codifies major portions of the regulations proposed by the Mayor implementing the Residency Preference Amendment Act of 1988 (D.C. Law 7-203). The language recommended by the conferees is intended to assure that the District of Columbia government implements a residency preference system rather than a residency requirement for career and educational service positions.

The language recommended by the conferees makes the new preference system effective as of March 16, 1989. No provision of the Residency Preference Amendment Act of 1988 or any regulations promulgated pursuant to that Act are to be imposed retroactively on District of Columbia employees in the Career or Educational Services. Further, the District Government and the Board of Governors of the School of Law, the District of Columbia Board of Education and the Board of Trustees of the University of the District of Columbia shall not impose upon any employee in the Career or Educational Services an obligation of residency unless that individual selected a preference option on or after March 16, 1989. For the Career Service, the effect of the language proposed by the conferees provides:

A maximum five point preference to new employees;

Residency will be a tie-breaker to resident who claims a preference on promotions;

In case of a reduction-in-force, a maximum of one (1) year of service will be added to the service of a resident who claimed the preference;

The five (5) year District Residency Requirement will apply only to applicants who claim the preference and are appointed on or after March 16, 1989 and those individuals promoted on or after March 16, 1989 who claim the preference.

For the Educational Service, District of Columbia residency will be required of only those employees who have received or who will receive a residency preference in regard to their hiring or promotion on or after March 16, 1989. Such employees will be required to live in the District of Columbia for a period of five years following the date of their employment or promotion as is required under current law.

All Expected Service employees and Executive Service employees of the District hired after December 31, 1979, will continue to be required to live in the District of Columbia for the duration of their employment in the Excepted and Executive Services as required under current law.

The conferees agree that District officials are not required to provide the report concerning the hiring preference system that was requested in House Report 101-186 and Senate Report 101-124 accompanying H.R. 3026.

Amendment No. 16: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 133. (a) It is the purpose of this section to improve the means by which the District of Columbia is paid for water and sanitary sewer services furnished to the Government of the United States or any department, agency, or independent establishment thereof.

(b) Section 106 of title I of the District of Columbia Public Works Act of 1954 (68 Stat. 102; D.C. Code, sec. 43-1552) is amended by—

(1) striking in subsection (a) all that follows the sentence beginning with "Payment shall be made as provided in subsection (b)"; and

(2) amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Beginning in the second quarter of fiscal year 1990, the government of the District of Columbia shall receive payment for water services from funds appropriated or otherwise available to the Federal departments, independent establishments, or agencies. In accordance with the provisions of paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, quarterly payments to the District shall be made from funds deposited by said departments, establishments, or agencies in a United States Treasury account entitled 'Federal Payment for Water and Sewer Services'. In the absence of sufficient funds in said account, payment shall be made from funds available to the United States Treasury. Amounts made available to the District shall be provided no later than the second day of each fiscal quarter, without further justification, and shall not be less than the aggregated sum of the adjusted quarterly estimates provided for in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2) By April 15 of each calendar year the District shall provide the Office of Management and Budget, for inclusion in the President's budget of the respective Federal departments, independent establishments, or agencies, an estimate of the cost of service for the fiscal year commencing October 1st of the following calendar year. The estimate shall provide, for each fiscal quarter, the total estimated cost of such service and an itemized estimate of such costs by Federal department, independent establishment, or agency. The District's estimates on a quarterly or yearly basis shall reflect such adjustments as are necessary to account for actual usage variances from the estimated amounts for the fiscal year ending on September 30th of the calendar year preceding April 15th.

"(3) Each Federal department, independent establishment, or agency receiving water services in buildings, establishments, or other places shall pay from funds specifically appropriated or otherwise available to it, quarterly and on the first day of each such fiscal quarter, to an account in the United States Treasury entitled 'Federal Payment for Water and Sewer Services' an amount equal to the adjusted quarterly estimates of said services as provided for in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(4) The amount or time period for late payment of water charges involving a building, establishment, or other place owned by the Government of the United States imposed by the District of Columbia shall not be different from those imposed by the District of Columbia on its most favored customer.".

(c) Section 212 of the District of Columbia Public Works Act of 1954 (68 Stat. 108; D.C. Code, sec. 43-1612) is amended by—

(1) striking in subsection (a) all that follows ": Provided, That"; and

(2) amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Beginning in the second quarter of fiscal year 1990, the government of the District of Columbia shall receive payment for sanitary sewer services from funds appropriated or otherwise available to the Federal departments, independent establishments, or agencies. In accordance with the provisions of paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, quarterly payments to the District shall be made from funds deposited by said departments, establishments, or agencies in a United States Treasury account entitled 'Federal Payment for Water and Sewer Services. In the absence of sufficient funds in said account, payment shall be made from funds available to the United States Treasury. Amounts made available to the District shall be provided not later than the second day of each fiscal quarter, without further justification, and shall not be less than the aggregated sum of the adjusted quarterly estimates provides for in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2) By April 15 of each calendar year the District shall provide the Office of Management and Budget, for inclusion in the President's budget of the respective Federal departments, independent establishments, or agencies, an estimate of the cost of service for the fiscal year commencing October 1st of the following calendar year. The estimate shall provide, for each fiscal quarter, the total estimated cost of such service and an itemized estimate of such costs by Federal department, independent establishment, or agency. The District's estimates on a quarterly or yearly basis shall reflect such adjustments as are necessary to account for actual usage variances from the estimated amounts for the fiscal year ending on September 30th of the calendar year preceding April 15th.

"(3) Each Federal department, independent establishment, or agency receiving sanitary sewer services in buildings, establishments, or other places shall pay from funds specifically appropriated or otherwise available to it, quarterly and on the first day of each such fiscal quarter, to an account in the United States Treasury entitled 'Federal Payment for Water and Sewer Services' an amount equal to the adjusted quarterly estimates of said services as provided for in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(4) The amount or time period for late payment of water charges involving a building, establishment, or other place owned by the Government of the United States imposed by the District of Columbia shall not be different from those imposed by the District of Columbia on its most favored customer.".

(d) The first sentence of subsection (d) of section 207 of the District of Columbia Public Works Act of 1954 (68 Stat. 106) is amended to read as follows: "Whenever a property upon which a sanitary sewer service charge is a public park, or uses water from the water supply system of the District for an industrial or commercial purpose in such a manner that the water so used is likewise not discharged into the sanitary sewage works of the District, the quantity of water so used and not discharged into the sanitary sewage works of the District may be excluded in determining the sanitary sewer service charge on such property, if such exclusion is previously requested in writing by the owner or occupant thereof and approved in writing by the District government in advance of the billing period involved.".

(e) The amendments made by this section shall take effect January 1, 1990, and shall terminate September 30, 1990.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement amends the District's Public Works Act of 1954 to authorize the District government to bill and receive payments directly from Federal departments, independent establishments, and agencies traditionally funded under the account "Federal Payment for Water and Sewer Services." This provision is effective on a trial basis for fiscal year 1990 only and will be reviewed in connection with the fiscal year 1991 budget request to determine the efficiency and effectiveness of this new system of billing and collecting for water and sanitary sewer services which the District government provides to Federal departments and independent establishments. There are sound management and resource conservation reasons for Federal agencies to be more alert to their water consumption. One tool to heighten Federal managers' awareness of consumption would be the requirement that they budget and pay for these services.

The language proposed by the conferees in Section 133 of the bill authorizes the District government to receive direct quarterly payments from the Federal government. These payments, to be based on estimated usage, are to be made to the District by the United States Treasury not later than the second day of each fiscal quarter than the first day of each quarter under the present system. It is the conferees' intent that the District not bill individual Federal agencies. According to information provided by the Office of Management and Budget, a total of $38,100,000 has been budgeted in fiscal year 1990 within the budgets of various agencies for this purpose, even though the actual amount requested in the President's Budget for Fiscal Year 1990 (H. Doc. 101-4, page I-Z13) is $34,700,000 or $3,600,000 less. It should be noted that the District government has not requested this change in procedure and there is some question as to whether they are prepared administratively and/or financially to implement these revisions.

Since the Office of Management and Budget has reported that the required funds are included in agency budgets and concurrent with the sound management and resource conservation reasons for Federal agencies to be more alert to their water consumption as they are with their rental and maintenance costs, the language proposed by the conferees requires the United States Treasury to be responsible for the quarterly payments, including making the payments itself if funds for such payments are not available in the Treasury account "Federal Payment for Water and Sewer Services" by or on the second day of each fiscal quarter. It is the intent of the conferees that the United States Treasury, in conjunction with the Office of Management and Budget, ensure that Federal agencies budget for and quarterly reimburse the Treasury account. The conferees believe that this system will enhance Federal managers accountability for these resources while not burdening the District with directly billing and collecting from the Federal and independent agencies' accounts.

To ensure the accuracy of this system, the language directs the District to verify the estimated payment amounts by reading meters in Federal facilities not less than once per fiscal year. These actual usage readings will provide the basis for adjustments to estimated usage. The District Government, as part of each April 15th submission to the Office of Management and Budget, is required to adjust estimated costs to reflect actual usage during the most recently completed fiscal year. The conferees anticipate that the April 15th estimate of cost will reflect both actual usage for the fiscal year ended six months previously to April 15th and the estimated cost for usage commencing with the start of the fiscal year eighteen months hence or when the President's budget for which the April 15th estimated was furnished is enacted. Under this system, each agency's estimated costs will be adjusted for actual usage not later than two years after the conclusion of each quarter; for example, the actual usage for the first quarter of fiscal year 1989 would be reflected as an adjustment to the estimated costs during the first quarter of fiscal year 1991.

The conferees direct the District government to provide a report on the operation of this new procedure during hearings on the fiscal year 1991 budget.

Amendment No. 17: Amends language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate requiring the District government to pay interest on its fiscal year 1990 quarterly payments to the United States Treasury that are made more than 60 days after receipt of the itemized statement from the Federal Bureau of Prisons showing the amounts due for the preceding quarter. The language proposed by the House required such interest payments to be made for fiscal year 1990 and for every fiscal year thereafter whereas the language agreed to by the conferees is for fiscal year 1990 only. The conferees will revisit this issue during hearings on the District's fiscal year 1991 budget.

Amendment No. 18: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 138. Section 11-903, District of Columbia Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 11-903. Composition.

"Subject to the enactment of authorizing legislation, the Superior Court of the District of Columbia shall consist of a chief judge and fifty-eight associate judges."

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action changes the section number and amends the D.C. Code to increase the number of associate judges for the Superior Court from 50 to 58, subject to the enactment of authorizing legislation. The conferees agree to the need for eight additional judges because of the current and projected caseload resulting from the drug epidemic and the additional case filings expected from the 1,000 new police officers funded in this bill. Funds for the increase of eight judges and support staff are included under amendment number 5. It is important to the integrity of the criminal justice system that drug offenders be tried and punished as swiftly as possible after they are arrested.

Accordingly, the conferees urge the authorizing committees to act swiftly in keeping with the emergency nature of the recommendation made by the conferees in the accompanying bill.

Amendment No. 19: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the section number "138" named in said amendment, insert, "139"

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action changes the section number and allows the release of $6,700,000, appropriated in fiscal year 1988, to the consortium of institutions of higher education in the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area for the purpose of constructing and equipping an academic research library to link the library and information resources of the universities participating in the consortium. The conferees have been advised that the universities involved have committed a total of $9,000,000, excluding the value of the land which has been donated for the facility.

Amendment No. 20: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have rescinded language exempting the Federal payment to the District from the apportionment process.

Amendment No. 21: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which establishes a "Task Force on Substance Abusing Pregnant Women and Infants Exposed to Maternal Substance Abuse During Pregnancy". The conferees direct that coordination of services for pregnant substance abusing women and their infants will include linkages with medical care providers, local health departments, department of social services, providers of shelter to abused and homeless women, and public housing programs. The services for pregnant and post-partum females subject to coordination shall include substance abuse and addiction treatment (outpatient, inpatient hospitalization, and residential), prenatal and post-partum health care, support such as child care and transportation, education and skill building services such as parenting and job seeking classes, innovative methods of outreach to target women at risk early in pregnancy, effective screening procedures, and after care. Services for infants and very young children at risk shall also be subject to coordination, including direct, intervention, treatment or rehabilitation services, support, and resources for their biological or foster parents. Strategies for coordinating the delivery of services shall include co-locating multiple facilities, case management, and involving significant others such as the male partners of pregnant females to aid in outreach. In addition, coordinated training programs for social service, public health, and medical professionals working with pregnant substance abusing women and their infants shall also be made a priority.

The task force is required to submit a report to Congress within one year after the date of enactment of this Act at which time it will cease to exist.

Amendment No. 22: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 141. Notwithstanding any other provision of the laws of the District of Columbia, it shall not be an unlawful discriminatory practice in the District of Columbia for any educational institution that is affiliated with a religious organization to deny:

(a) the use of any facility service or benefit set aside for the practice or promotion of religion; or

(b) the granting of any endorsement, approval, or recognition, to any person or persons that are organized for, or engaged in, the promotion of any homosexual or heterosexual lifestyle or belief that is contrary to its religious doctrine.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees recommend language under section 141 which may allow discriminatory practices by educational institutions in the free exercise of their religious liberties where specific homosexual and heterosexual lifestyles or beliefs are contrary to that institution's particular religious doctrine.

H. Con. Res. 26: Mr. CHANDLER.

SENATE—Thursday, October 5, 1989

(Legislative day of Monday, September 18, 1989)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The prayer will be offered by the Senate Chaplain, the Reverend Dr. Richard C. Halverson.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, Redeeming the time, because the days are evil. Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is.—Ephesians 5:15-17.

Eternal God, perfect in truth and justice, in holiness and love, somehow help us to understand that Thy will is good, acceptable, and perfect, leading to our full potential, individually and corporately. Help us to see that indifference is worse than rejection. Help us to overcome the reluctance which keeps us away from Thee. Forgive the pride which refuses to acknowledge human limitations and look to Thee for help in time of need. Midst the controversy and conflict of legislation, lead us in paths of righteousness.

In Jesus' name. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

The majority leader is recognized under the standing order.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. This morning, following the time reserved for the two leaders, there will be a period for morning business until 10:30 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

Beginning at 10:30 a.m., there will be three rollcall votes in succession in relation to the flag-burning statute. The first will be a 15-minute vote on the Wilson amendment; the second a 10-minute vote on a Dole amendment; and the third, on final passage of the bill. The third is also a 10-minute vote. There is no time remaining for debate on this measure prior to the three votes.

Therefore, I urge my colleagues, since this will be a 15-minute vote followed by two 10-minute votes, to remain in the Chamber after the first vote so that we do not encounter the situation of other Senators having to wait for one Senator who leaves and then must return.

Once we have completed action on the flag bill, the Senate will return to consideration of S. 1711, the drug bill, with Senator HELMS to be recognized to continue debate on his amendment regarding Panama.

I alert Senators to the likelihood—indeed, I think it fair to say with certainty—that there will be votes throughout the day and into the evening.

It is my hope to complete action on the drug bill today, then to turn to other matters, including, at some point during the day, the catastrophic health care legislation.

Therefore, Senators should be prepared for a lengthy session today, and into this evening with the possibility of numerous votes.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my leader time, and I reserve the leader time of the distinguished Republican leader.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the time of both leaders is reserved.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum has been suggested.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. DOLE pertaining to the introduction of S. 1727 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

At 10:16 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has agreed to the following resolutions:

H. Res. 251. A resolution amending the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against Walter L. Nixon, a judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi; and

H. Res. 252. A resolution notifying the Senate of the amendment to the articles of impeachment against Judge Walter L. Nixon.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, AMENDED ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the message just received from the House of Representatives be spread upon the Senate Journal and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the information of the Senate, and that the clerk be instructed to read the message of the House in full for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will proceed to read the message in full.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

H. RES. 251

Resolved, That the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against Walter L. Nixon, a judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, are amended in the second paragraph of article II and in paragraph (2)(G) of article III, by striking "in any way influence anybody" and inserting "that in any way influenced anybody".

H. RES. 252

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate by the Clerk of the House, informing the Senate that the House of Representatives has adopted amendments to the articles of impeachment exhibited against Walter L. Nixon, Jr., a judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, and that the amendments will be presented to the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that counsel for Judge Nixon be allowed 3 days from today to file such responsive pleadings to the amended articles of impeachment as counsel may choose to file, and that the House managers be allowed 3 days from the filing of any responsive pleadings to the amended articles of impeachment by Judge Nixon to file a replication.

I further ask unanimous consent that the procedures authorized by sections 3 through 9 of Senate Resolution 127 of this Congress for the handling and printing of pleadings in this impeachment proceeding, including printing in the Senate Journal, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and as a separate Senate document, shall be utilized with respect to pleadings filed under this unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the various requests of the majority leader will be granted.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes.

The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCONNELL] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. MCCONNELL pertaining to the introduction of S. 1727 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. MCCONNELL. I thank the Chair, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Flag Protection Act of 1989. Even though I am a cosponsor of a constitutional amendment to protect the American flag, and I continue to believe that such an amendment is necessary to truly accomplish what we purport to do here today, I will support this statutory approach.

The flag is indeed a special symbol of our great land. As Justice Stevens said in his dissenting opinion in Texas versus Johnson, "It also signifies the ideas that characterize the society that has chosen that emblem as well as the special history that has animated the growth and power of those ideas. * * * The value of the flag as a symbol cannot be measured." The ideas born in 1776, and culminating in the Constitution of the United States, are ideas that have grown and the power of which even today we see being expressed in societies throughout the world.

My constituents have expressed to me their desire to see their flag protected. They all have different reasons, but they echo the words of Justice Stevens quoted above. Many have buried family members who have returned from foreign lands after laying down their lives to protect the values and ideas symbolized by the flag that draped their coffins.

I do not believe that preventing the burning or desecration of the flag impinges upon the first amendment rights which we all cherish. There is the alternative mode of expression available of uttering words critical of the flag and what it represents. That will not be altered by the constitutional amendment which I continue to support.

However, the matter before us tonight is an attempt to provide, by statute, the protection our flag deserves. Given the decision of five Supreme Court Justices that the statute in Texas versus Johnson violated the Constitution, I don't believe this vehicle will work. But I will support this effort until the Senate considers the constitutional amendment which will provide the protection the flag deserves.

THE FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, we are now ready for the vote on final passage of this bill. I want to take this opportunity to thank the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee for his efforts with this legislation.

I believe we share the same goal, that being the protection of the American Flag. We differ on the most appropriate way to protect the Flag in light of the Johnson decision.

While the Senator from Delaware is enthusiastic that a statute can adequately protect the Flag from physical desecration, I believe that any statute we pass will be suspect as unconstitutional before the current Supreme Court and we can only speculate as to how a different Supreme Court would rule on this matter.

Therefore, I have stated that while a statute might get results, and I will support this bill, a well drafted constitutional amendment is the most sound and prudent course to ensure the integrity of the American Flag.

We will soon have the opportunity to vote on a constitutional amendment. I see no reason why this Congress should not pass both measures. The Federal statute would be in place while the State legislatures act on a proposed constitutional amendment.

Again, I thank the distinguished chairman. We have accepted amendments which I believe improves this bill and I encourage my colleagues to support final support.

MOHAMED HASSAN GAWALY

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I was deeply saddened to learn of the untimely death in Cairo of Mohamed Hassan Gawaly, who was Minister at the Egyptian Embassy in Washington from 1985 through July of this year.

Minister Gawaly was a familiar figure to most of us in Congress, and a friend to many. He was a superb diplomat, who represented his country with true devotion and dedication. He was strongly committed to strengthening the United States-Egyptian relationship, as well as to the goals of peace and stability in the Middle East. His knowledge of the foreign assistance process was unmatched, and he understood the importance of cooperating closely with Members of Congress. My staff and I had the pleasure of working often with Minister Gawaly, and we always found that his professionalism and expertise made him an excellent representative of the Egyptian Government and people. I speak for many of my colleagues when I say how greatly he will be missed.

Minister Gawaly had completed his 4 year assignment in Washington in early August, and had returned to Cairo to assume new duties with the Egyptian Foreign Minister. He had previously served in the Egyptian Consulate in San Francisco, and at posts in the Soviet Union and Somalia. Between foreign assignments, he had served in Cairo as an assistant to the Foreign Minister and the Prime Minister. The Government of Egypt has lost a truly hardworking, dedicated servant; I am certain his future would have been great.

On behalf of my colleagues, I wish to extend my deepest condolences to Minister Gawaly's family and to his colleagues at the Egyptian Embassy in Washington and at the Foreign Ministry in Cairo.

RESTART OF THE SAVANNAH RIVER REACTORS AND BUILDING OF THE NEW PRODUCTION REACTOR

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, 2 weeks ago, Secretary of Energy Watkins announced that early next year the Department of Energy would restart the reactors at the Savannah River site and resume tritium production. This was the first critical step in ensuring that our Nation maintains its nuclear weapons stockpile in a usable state for the coming years.

This step, however, is only an interim solution. The reactors that will be restarted are almost 40 years old and are nearing the end of their design life. Since tritium, unlike plutonium, decays at a rate of 5.5 percent a year, the Department of Energy has placed the highest priority on continued production of tritium. To maintain a reliable source of tritium into the future, we must commence with the construction of the new production reactors or face an involuntary disarmanent of our nuclear stockpile.

In that regard, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert into the RECORD an article from the September 10, 1989, Aiken Standard, by Mr. Louis H. Roddis, Jr. titled, "Tritium Shortage Could Disarm U.S." Mr. Roddis is the former chairman of the Energy Research Advisory Board and former president of the American Nuclear Society.

I believe the article fully identifies the problems the United States is facing with regard to tritium production, the potential impact on our nuclear weapons stockpile, and the future of our Nation. I hope my colleagues will read the article and keep its message in mind when the Senate considers further funding for the construction of a new production reactor.

Thank you, Mr. President.

TRITIUM SHORTAGE COULD DISARM U.S.

(By Louis H. Roddis, Jr.)

We are witnessing serious problems in nuclear materials production in the United States, because weapons facilities built in the early 1950s are in deteriorating condition and cannot meet current defense needs.

These problems, if not corrected soon, could lead to a shortage of nuclear materials and a unilateral reduction in effective nuclear forces, with dangerous consequences for national security. There's a good deal of uncertainty about the rate at which this disarmament might occur, but there's no doubt about the direction of the trend, or the reason for it.

Events over the past 16 months show just how grave the problem is. In April 1988, the United States lost its remaining means of producing tritium and plutonium, essential ingredients of nuclear warheads, when the three existing reactors at the Savannah River Site in South Carolina were shut down for safety upgrades and other improvements.

TRITIUM DECAYS

Although plutonium lasts tens of thousands of years and stockpiles are reasonably satisfactory, tritium steadily decays into helium at a rate 5.5 percent a year, resulting in its loss. This means that tritium in a nuclear weapon must be replenished periodically to maintain the weapon's explosive yield. In fact, tritium not only enhances the strength of the explosion; it allows warheads to be smaller and lighter than they would otherwise be.

Even in the unlikely circumstance that no new warheads are built, the existing warheads would have to be refurbished with new stores of tritium. If supplies of the material become totally exhausted, the United States would be forced to retire about 1,200 warheads a year—effectively disarming us over a 20-year period. Therefore, even a temporary shortage could force this country to reduce its existing arsenal by removing tritium from some weapons to keep others in working order.

The government expects at least one of its military reactors at Savannah River to resume tritium production next year. However, the reactors are almost 40 years old and nearing the end of their original design lifetimes. For the long term, the United States cannot depend on its aging military reactors, if this country is to have an assured supply of tritium in the years ahead.

The U.S. Department of Energy, the agency responsible for the production of nuclear materials, has placed the highest priority on resolving this issue. The purely technical problem of developing new sources of tritium was examined by a special panel of DOE's Energy Research Advisory Board, of which I was a member.

After studying different technologies, the panel recommended construction of two new tritium-producing reactors—one a modern version of the heavy-water reactors that have supplied weapons materials during nearly 40 years of use at Savannah River. The new heavy-water reactor will have "passive safety" features and use modern electronics and computerization, improved control-room design and other state-of-the-art advances. It will be constructed at the Savannah River Site. And the reactor will be big enough to supply tritium for the entire nuclear weapons program.

The other reactor is the prototype of an advanced high-temperature gas-cooled reactor, and it will be capable of providing the nation with 50 percent of the needed tritium capacity. Because of a requirement to produce tritium at two different locations to ensure military security, the Department of Energy proposed building the gas-cooled reactor in Idaho.

Congress is presently considering this dual-reactor strategy. Some questions have arisen about the wisdom of constructing two new production reactors rather than obtaining tritium through other means.

Why not simply produce tritium at existing nuclear power plants? Two problems. First, designs based on light-water technology have never been used to produce tritium in the United States. Commerical nuclear plants would require major conversion, since the uranium fuel used in light-water type plants would not provide adequate tritium production without increased enrichment and with possible adverse effects on their safety. Second, the use of civilian reactors to produce tritium for military ends would require changes in the longstanding national policy of prohibiting the use of civilian reactors for such military purposes.

OTHER COUNTRIES?

Why not just obtain tritium supplies from other countries?

It's true that reactors presently operating in Canada and other countries produce tritium as a byproduct of their nuclear systems. For political reasons, however, the Canadian government has refused to export tritium even for industrial use or scientific research. Other nations are also unlikely to export the material. In any event, the United States should not depend on other countries for crucial nuclear materials.

What about building a linear accelerator to supply tritium?

The concept of using a high-voltage particle beam device, or accelerator, is not new. During the late 1940s it was considered as an alternative to the Savannah River-type reactors. Our panel rejected the accelerator approach because the technology is too immature even to estimate the cost of buildng a tritium-producing accelerator and because an accelerator would require about ten times as much power as a heavy-water reactor.

Why can't we just obtain tritium trapped in the heavy water that flows through the reactors at Savannah River?

TIME CONSUMING

Extracting tritium from heavy water would require construction of a new isotope separation plant at Savannah River. By the time this facility could be completed, however, a significant fraction of the tritium would have decayed.

Finally, some would have us stop tritium production together in hopes of achieving a strategic arms-control treaty with the Soviet Union. This seems to me a dangerously bad idea. These arms-control advocates ignore the reality that the Soviet Union can produce needed quantities of tritium in civilian reactors, and that its leaders have shown no inclination to stop producing the material. Wishful thinking about arms control cannot be allowed to dominate our consideration of the defense issue to the extent that we fail to maintain our strategic nuclear deterrent. If we halt U.S. production of tritium, it will take about 10 years to get a new reactor on line, while the Soviets continue producing nuclear weapons.

The real issue is whether we would prefer a world in which the Soviets have tritium-producing capability and we do not. Such an outcome seems to have little to commend it.

We can't stop producing tritium indefinitely, or we"ll be going into the next century unable to deter war or respond to threats to U.S. interests. Congress must move promptly to provide funds to begin building the new reactors. Our national security calls for no less.

(Louis H. Roddis, Jr, is a consultant on nuclear energy who lives in Charleston. From 1981 to 1984, he was chairman of the Energy Research Advisory Board, a group of outside experts that counsels the U.S. Department of Energy on science issues. He is a former president of the American Nuclear Society.)

FLAG DESECRATION STATUTE

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I support this statute, although I believe very deeply our flag is well protected without it. I am convinced the statute in no way threatens the integrity of the first amendment. On the other hand, I will oppose a constitutional amendment to protect the flag because such an amendment is unnecessary and diminishes the Constitution.

In reality, the American flag is vibrant and strong enough to need no protection. The flag protects itself. It is the fundamental symbol of our Nation. No one has the ability to damage it, because it stands for what we are and what we believe in and that idea does not merely reside in any one physical flag, but the very concept of our flag.

Nevertheless, I also believe that the physical integrity of the flag is something that we have the power and the right to protect. In my view, physically injuring the flag is no different from writing graffiti on a public subway: It is defacing public property, and the particular message that one seeks to convey is irrelevent. In protecting our subways, or our monuments, or our flags, from graffiti, burning or other forms of desecration, we are restricting malicious conduct against property—not speech.

I intend to speak in greater depth on this subject when we return to the issue in considering a constitutional amendment to protect the flag.

MOTOR VEHICLE AIR-CONDITIONER OZONE DEPLETION ACT OF 1989

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the efforts in the reconciliation measure, which will soon be considered by the Senate, to eliminate the use of dangerous chlorofluorocarbons [CFC]. I particularly want to commend Senator BAUCUS, chairman of the Committee on Environment and Public Works, for his longstanding efforts in this important area. I am pleased that as part of this package the committee included portions of legislation I introduced earlier in this session of Congress, S. 1051, the Motor Vehicle Air Conditioner Ozone Depletion Act.

My legislation would require the Environmental Protection Agency to set up the following minimum standards establishing a ban on the domestic sale or export of automobiles which contain air-conditioners that use CFC's. Beginning with model year 1993, 25 percent of the cars manufactured with air-conditioners in the United States, or imported into the United States, must be free of CFC's. This would increase to 50 percent for model year 1994, and to 100 percent by model year 1995. Just as important, this legislation requires the certification of all equipment used to install, maintain, and repair car air-conditioners, and requires that CFC's are reclaimed, recycled, or safely destroyed.

The committee provision contained in this bill will ban the sale of auto air-conditioners which are dependent on CFC 12 as a refrigerant by the model year 1994. This proposal also stops the practice of venting or releasing CFC's from auto air-conditioners and requires the recapture, recycling, and safe disposal of CFC's. It also bans by January 1, 1991, the sale of do-it-yourself CFC canisters.

Mr. President, by eliminating the largest end use of CFC's in our Nation, those used in mobile air-conditioners, this proposal will help meet the serious threat we face by the continued deterioration of our protective ozone layer.

We know what the consequences of damage to the ozone layer can be—they include increased incidences of cancer, skin cancer, cataracts, harm to marine life, and worldwide damage to agricultural crops. In addition, CFC's are greenhouse gases, and some scientists believe they will account for 25 percent of the total warming over the next half century.

Chlorofluorocarbons are very stable and can last in the atmosphere for decades. When CFC's reach the stratosphere 10 to 20 miles above the Earth, CFC molecules break apart releasing chlorine which depletes the ozone layer. One single atom of chlorine can destroy 100,000 molecules of ozone. Even if all CFC's were banned today, depletion would still continue for quite some time.

For these reasons it is imperative that the process of reducing and eliminating the use of CFC's is accomplished in the most expeditious manner possible. Again I am pleased with the CFC-reducing provisions in this bill and believe that they represent a major step toward saving the ozone and protecting the health and welfare of people everywhere.

THE 1,664th DAY OF TERRY ANDERSON'S CAPTIVITY

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to inform my colleagues that today marks the 1,664th day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

As Terry Anderson and each of the remaining hostages continue to be held, their families are, in a sense, also held captive.

I ask unanimous consent that an article on this subject from the Los Angeles Times be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the Los Angeles Times, Dec. 23, 1987]

HOSTAGES' KIN SEND LETTERS ASKING RELEASE

BEIRUT.—Families of eight Americans held by pro-Iranian groups expressed hope in letters published today that the kidnapers' "hearts will soften" and they will release the hostages this holiday season.

In the two letters published in the An Nahar newspaper, they also told the captives: "We pray that God will grant you strength, courage and grace during this long and painful ordeal."

The families said they were approaching the holiday season "with heavy hearts," but assured the hostages, "Your are not forgotten by us or by the American poeple.

"We work and pray for peace and justice throughout the Middle East and especially for the people of Lebanon."

One of the letters was addressed to the hostages and the other "to the captors of the American hostages in Lebanon."

In the second letter, the families said they sympathize with the Lebanese people who have suffered through 12 years of civil war.

"We pray daily for our hostages but we also hold the people of Lebanon in our hearts and prayers," they said.

"Let us pray together that this holiday season will mark the end of the pain and hostility that is tearing your country and our hearts to pieces."

Peggy Say, the sister of hostage Terry Anderson, the longest-held American, said from her home in Batavia, N.Y., that the letters also were published in the Beirut newspaper As Safir but she did not know of any personal letters sent to the hostages or their captors.

Say said she and her pastor, the Rev. Thomas Vickers of Batavia, wrote the letters and circulated them among hostage families for approval.

Say said the letters are more important this year than similar pleas in the last three years Anderson has been a captive because the kidnaping of Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite has left the hostages without much hope.

PROTECTING THE FLAG

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the debates of yesterday afternoon and this morning on the subject of the constitutionality of legislation such as H.R. 2978—which, I am convinced, attempts to amend the Constitution by means of a statute—would be incomplete if the arguments of the bill's proponents were allowed to go unrebutted.

Let me note at the outset that, of course, some statutes which are found unconstitutional can be cured by a legislative response, depending on the nature of the constitutional defect. The question is, is this such a circumstance? I think it is not. Of course, the Federal flag desecration statute itself has not been found to be unconstitutional. I have assumed, however, as have proponents of H.R. 2978, that the rationale of the Texas versus Johnson decision, striking down the Texas flag desecration statute, would invalidate the Federal flag desecration statute, 18 U.S.C. 700.

Despite the many assertions that H.R. 2978 is not an effort, in effect, to amend the Constitution, it was clear from the substance and tone of these debates that that is precisely what is being attempted here. The opinion of the Supreme Court in Texas versus Johnson was a constitutional decision; one which involved the application of the 1st and 14th amendments to the Constitution. For the reasons I explained yesterday at some length, no statute banning flag desecration will survive after the Texas versus Johnson decision.

The distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator BIDEN, presented three examples to support his assertion that he is not attempting to alter the Constitution by statute.

One of the chairman's examples is relevant to this issue, although readily distinguishable. The other two examples are so far off the point, and so utterly unhelpful, that I can only conclude that proponents of the statutory response to Texas versus Johnson are hardpressed to defend that approach on the constitutional merits.

The excerpt from Prof. Walter Dellinger's testimony, that "Congress is free to correct any flaw that may have rendered an act of Congress unconstitutional, in response to a Supreme Court decision," may serve to appear to provide a patina of academic respectability to the chairman's response to my arguments, but it obviously begs the question: Are the defects in the Federal flag desecration statute, in light of Texas versus Johnson, curable by statute? If not, the effort to overturn that decision by statute circumvents the Constitution. Again, I will not repeat the arguments I made yesterday concerning the futility of any statutory response to the Texas versus Johnson decision, but will briefly explain why the chairman's three examples are completely unavailing.

Two of the examples, Bowsher versus Synar and Buckley versus Valeo, are beside the point, with respect to the issue before us, namely, how can we assure protection of the flag from desecration.

Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976), upheld major portions of the Federal Election Campaign Act. The Court, however, declared the composition of the Federal Elections Commission violative of article II, section 2, clause 2—the appointments clause—with respect to all but its investigative and informative powers. Since a majority of the Commission's voting members were appointed by Congress, it could not engage in enforcement activity. Obviously, Congress can correct that error by reconstituting the Commission and it did so.

In Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714 (1986), the Court reviewed a part of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act under which mandatory spending cuts were put in place if the Comptroller General issued a report estimating that the budget deficit exceeded the amount permitted by the act. The Court held that the powers vested in the Comptroller General under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act violate the constitutional requirement that Congress play no role in the execution of the laws. It was easy for Congress to respond by giving its role, of designating mandatory spending reductions, to someone else. It did so by giving that authority to the Director of OMB.

Neither of these cases helps us decide whether Texas versus Johnson can be constitutionally redressed through a statute. They are simply not on point.

The Shacht v. United States case, 398 U.S. 58 (1970), is more on point, but still unpersuasive as a justification for H.R. 2978.

In Shacht, the Court looked at two Federal laws. One prohibited any person "without authority [to wear] the uniform or a distinctive part thereof * * * of any of the Armed Forces of the United States"; 18 U.S.C. 702.

Another Federal law said:

> While portraying Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps, an actor in a theatrical or motion-picture production may wear the uniform of that armed force if the portrayal does not tend to discredit that armed force; 10 U.S.C. 772(f).

Shacht did wear parts of an Army uniform in an antiwar theatrical production, and was not a member of the Armed Forces.

The Court indicated that 18 U.S.C. 702, making it an offense to wear a military uniform without authority, standing alone, is facially constitutional. But it does not stand alone, since 10 U.S.C. 772(f) authorizes such wearing in a theatrical production. The Court ruled that the last clause of 10 U.S.C. 772(f) is an unconstitutional infringement on freedom of speech because it allowed use of a uniform in a skit praising the Army, but not in one condemning the Army.

But the neutral protection of the military uniform does not, by analogy, support the so-called neutral protection of the flag. The neutral protection of the military uniform, which the Court indicated would be constitutional, serves other than symbolic purposes. For example, it can protect people from unscrupulous persons trying to con them. The misuse of a uniform could lower public esteem for the military, affecting recruiting, or lower morale in the Armed Forces. These are not symbolic purposes of a blanket ban on use of the military uniform, these are practical purposes. In contrast, the flag, unlike the military uniform, has only symbolic purposes. A statute protecting the flag, whether couched in neutral terms or not, only serves to protect the flag as a symbol. Thus, the constitutionality of a neutral statute prohibiting misuse of a military uniform does not support the constitutionality of a neutral flag desecration statute. The latter protects an object solely for its symbolic purposes. And Texas versus Johnson teaches us that desecration of this symbol for expressive purposes is constitutionally protected.

Moreover, Mr. President, the bill supported by Senator BIDEN, H.R. 2978, is not neutral. It permits the burning of the flag for disposal purposes—a respectful treatment of the flag—but for no other purposes.

One Senator made the observation that we should not lionize Gregory Johnson or his despicable act of political protest. I agree. But that lionization has already occurred. The Supreme Court has lionized Gregory Johnson by giving constitutional protection to his conduct. Congress has a duty to reverse that lionization, to restore to Congress and the States the power to protect the flag from physical desecration. If we fail to amend the Constitution, Texas versus Johnson will stand for the right to burn the flag—Johnson will in fact continue to be lionized by those who agree with him.

Among the other fallacious arguments heard in these debates, none is perhaps so disingenuous as the claim heard yesterday that passing a constitutional amendment to empower the Federal Government and the States to prohibit flag desecration would raise the specter of numerous, onerous, varying laws that could hardly be complied with. To begin with, it should be pointed out that the possibility of multiple laws being passed on the same subject is inherent in the nature of our Federal system. That possibility did not present a problem for the drafters of the Constitution, nor should it long delay us today. Many of the most fundamental matters of life and death with which legislators must deal—from murder to abortion—are addressed in State statutes which reflect the varying values of the States of this Nation.

It should also be pointed out that we already have 49 different flag desecration statutes, and no Senator has risen in these debates to point out a single problem that has occurred from the maintenance of these various differing statutes on the books for decades.

But even if there were some rational basis for the Nation to fear a multiplicity of laws on this subject, the most important answer to be made to this argument is simply: H.R. 2978 does nothing to prevent the possibility and, in fact, would, if the constitutional amendment fails, be an incentive to the enactment of a whole round of new, no doubt differing State statutes on flag desecration. The bottom line is this: If Congress can avoid the effect of the Johnson case by simply passing a law, then so can every State legislature and every city council.

If a constitutional amendment is passed to state clearly that Congress and the States shall have the power to prohibit the physical desecration of the flag, then most of the 48 statutes on the books will become enforceable without the need of further legislative action. Just as the mere fact that those statutes differ has presented no problem in the past, it can be anticipated that their variety will present no problem in the future.

If, on the other hand, H.R. 2978 becomes law—despite the Justice Department's assertion that its constitutionality "cannot be seriously maintained"—and no constitutional amendment is passed, then every State will be encouraged to enact new so-called content-neutral flag desecration statutes patterned after H.R. 2978. What variations there will be in each State can hardly be anticipated.

Implicit in the argument of those who advocate a single national standard for flag desecration is the apparent belief that H.R. 2978 would be given some preemptive effect. There is no basis for believing this: The current Federal statute has never been given such effect, but has existed alongside the various State statutes for years. Nor is there any language in the law to state the intention of Congress to preempt the State laws. This is as it should be. Flag desecration is a proper subject of State as well as Federal legislation.

Basically, I believe that those who fear the multiplicity of flag desecration statutes that could be enacted if Senate Joint Resolution 180 were to be adopted, actually fear the people and their elected representatives. They are the ones who will have the power to enact the statutes, and I trust they will do so in a responsible way. I regret that the critics of a constitutional amendment do not, apparently, share my faith in the wisdom and good sense of the people.

I'm also surprised at how many Senators have presented a single argument for the constitutionality of the statutory approach that bears no relation to the bill we are considering. One Senator accurately stated that, "Constitutional scholars testified before the Judiciary Committee that this proposal will pass muster by the Supreme Court because it outlaws flag burning in all circumstances." But H.R. 2978 does not outlaw flag burning in all circumstances. S. 1338 did, and that was the bill to which the testimony of the constitutional scholars appearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee was directed. The argument, even if once valid, simply has no applicability when applied to H.R. 2978.

A word should also be directed to the true positions of the constitutional law scholars who appeared before the Judiciary Committee. Far from being overwhelming in their support of the constitutionality of the statutory approach, they were more evenly divided between advocates of the statute and advocates of the amendment. But what I found most significant is the ironic fact that every law professor, historian, and lawyer who testified in favor of the constitutionality of the statute-only approach went on to urge that the Senate do nothing about the Johnson case or to otherwise cast doubt on the advisability of correcting that decision. Among those witnesses who agreed with the professed view of the majority of the committee that the result of Johnson should be overturned, there was a remarkable unanimity of opinion: Every witness—from Judge Bork to Charles Cooper to the Department of Justice—agreed that this result could be obtained only through the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution.

FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I would like to thank my very good friend and distinguished colleague, and the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, STROM THURMOND, for his assistance and cooperation in passing H.R. 2978. My good friend provided invaluable assistance in putting together the committee's four hearings and in ensuring that we had a knowledgeable and thoughtful complement of witnesses. As always, it is an honor and a pleasure to work with him.

DESECRATION OF THE FLAG

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act of 1989. I salute the Senator from Delaware and the other members of the Judiciary Committee for their prompt, yet thorough, review of this important matter.

This legislation will prohibit any individual from mutilating, defacing, burning, or trampling the flag of the United States. The measure would extend protection to any flag of the United States, or any part thereof, in a form that is commonly displayed. I believe this proposal will thwart intentional desecration of our flag.

Earlier this year, I was deeply disappointed by the Supreme Court's 5-to-4 decision to nullify the flag desecration laws of the States and the Federal Government. In my view, the American flag represents the preeminent symbol of our Republic. The American flag also serves as a living memorial to our Nation's brave war veterans, those still living, the over 1 million who died while serving, and those who today still bear the wounds of war.

The Supreme Court's majority opinion treats the American flag as just another symbol like many others, and thus held desecration of the flag to be a form of political expression protected under the first amendment.

I agree with Justice Stevens who stated in his dissent that the American flag is "more than a proud symbol of the courage, the determination, and the gifts of nature that transformed 13 fledgling colonies into a world power" and that "the interest in preserving that value for the future is both significant and legitimate."

I believe that this statutory approach, as recommended by a number of constitutional scholars, is the most appropriate and effective way to resolve this important issue. As some of my colleagues have noted, the constitutional amendment process is, as it should be, a cumbersome process. I favor this statutory approach because it provides a swift response to the Supreme Court's recent opinion. While I will consider seriously a constitutional amendment if it becomes necessary, I believe that we should first attempt to rectify this situation by a statutory remedy with an accelerated appeals process.

I yield the floor.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of H.R. 2978, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2978) to amend section 700 of title 18, United States Code, to protect the physical integrity of the flag.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Pending:

(1) Wilson Amendment No. 951, to prevent the defiling of the American flag.

(2) Dole Amendment No. 952, to require that desecration of the U.S. flag be public in order to be a criminal act.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 951

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. What is the business before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question before the Senate is on the adoption of the amendment by Mr. WILSON, amendment No. 951 to H.R. 2978.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware, Mr. BIDEN, to table amendment No. 951 of the Senator from California, Mr. WILSON. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced, yeas 31, nays 69, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 224 Leg.]

YEAS—31

Adams	Dodd	Mikulski
Biden	Glenn	Mitchell
Bingaman	Inouye	Moynihan
Boren	Johnston	Pell
Bradley	Kennedy	Robb
Bumpers	Kerrey	Sanford
Burdick	Lautenberg	Sarbanes

Garn	McCain	Wilson

So, the motion to lay on the table the amendment (No. 951) was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote recurs on the Wilson amendment No. 951 to H.R. 2978. The yeas and nays are ordered. The clerk will call the roll. This is a 10-minute rollcall vote.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BIDEN. I apologize. I did not hear what the Chair said was about to come next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote recurs on the Wilson amendment No. 951 to H.R. 2978.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I suggest we vitiate that vote.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, we do not have order.

Mr. DOLE. We want the yeas and nays on this vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered. Will the Senator restate his request.

Mr. BIDEN. I withdraw my suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are ordered on the Wilson amendment No. 951. The clerk will call the roll. This is a 10-minute rollcall vote, as is the one to follow.

The bill clerk called the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 76, nays 24, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 225 Leg.]

YEAS—76

Adams	Gore	Murkowski
Armstrong	Gorton	Nickles
Baucus	Graham	Nunn
Bentsen	Gramm	Packwood

Boren	Inouye	Metzenbaum
Bradley	Johnston	Mitchell
Bumpers	Kennedy	Moynihan
Burdick	Kerrey	Pell
Cranston	Lautenberg	Robb
DeConcini	Leahy	Sarbanes

So the amendment (No. 951) was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on the Dole amendment No. 952. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to table the Dole amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware to lay on the table the amendment of Mr. DOLE.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll. This will be a 10-minute rollcall vote.

The clerk will repeat the name and vote of each Senator after he responds.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 47, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 226 Leg.]

YEAS—53

Adams	Dodd	Lieberman
Baucus	Exon	Matsunaga
Biden	Ford	Metzenbaum
Bingaman	Fowler	Mikulski
Boren	Glenn	Mitchell

Durenberger	Mack	Thurmond
Garn	McCain	Wallop
Gorton	McClure	Warner
Gramm	McConnell	Wilson
Grassley	Murkowski

So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was tabled.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into last night, it was anticipated that there would be three votes this morning, all but the first to be 10-minute votes. Because one of the tabling motions failed, there will now be four votes and unless the consent is obtained, it will be a 15-minute vote.

I ask unanimous consent that the vote now on final passage be limited to 10 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on final passage of the bill, H.R. 2978. The yeas and nays have not been ordered.

Mr. HELMS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The clerk will please repeat the response of Senators. Hopefully, the Senators will heed unless they be recorded as not voting.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 91, nays 9, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 227 Leg.]

YEAS—91

NAYS—9

Chafee	Hatch	Kerrey
Dole	Humphrey	Metzenbaum
Grassley	Kennedy	Moynihan

So the bill (H.R. 2978), as amended, was passed.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to reconsider, Mr. President, the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. HELMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion to reconsider and motion to table?

Hearing none, the question is on the motion to table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I will only take a moment of the Senate's time—and it is a bit unusual for me. I always generally thank staff, but there is one particular staff member of mine, Jeff Peck, who has learned more about and is probably the Nation's leading expert, including the Court, on the constitutionality and all the law surrounding, not only all the law, but traditions and local customs relating to the flag and the use of the flag.

I have always known Jeff as an extremely fine lawyer. Jeff came back to the Senate at some great sacrifice, like many, many, if not all, of the staff members here do, and was assigned this topic. As I said, he literally, I believe at this moment is the leading expert in America on the constitutional questions relating to the flag. He has done a phenomenal job and has done more work on this than I think he ever, ever thought he would have to do on any single issue, particularly on the flag.

I just want to publicly thank him. There are many other staff members of mine and Senators on the Republican side of the aisle and in the Judiciary Committee who did phenomenal jobs. As I said, it is the first time in 17 years, I think, I ever publicly picked someone out, but this poor fellow has spent hundreds and hundreds of hours of doing nothing but research on this issue, and I want to publicly thank him.

Mr. President, I have nothing further to say on that except to ask the Chair, do we now move back to the drug bill?

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PRESIDENT'S 1989 NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the order, the Senate will now resume consideration of S. 1711, which the clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1711) to implement the President's 1989 National Drug Control Strategy.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Pending:

(1) Biden Amendment No. 924, to provide for civil enforcement procedures in the eviction from places maintained for manufacturing, distributing, or using controlled substances.

(2) Kennedy Amendment No. 934, to provide for substance abuse prevention and treatment programs.

(3) Helms Amendment No. 935 (to amendment No. 924), to provide authority for the President to use the armed forces of the United States to secure the removal of General Manuel Noriega for the illegal control of the Republic of Panama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] is recognized.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will suspend until there is order in the Senate.

The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair very much.

I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], who is chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, of which I am the ranking member, be permitted to call up a resolution with respect to the Dalai Lama receiving the Nobel Peace Prize, which he and I are cosponsoring. I ask that the order which provided for my having the floor be delayed until that is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from North Carolina very much indeed.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 75—CONGRATULATING HIS HOLINESS THE XIV DALAI LAMA OF TIBET FOR BEING AWARDED THE 1989 NOBEL PEACE PRIZE

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the Norwegian Nobel Committee has recognized His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama of Tibet with the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize for his personal struggle for the liberation of Tibet through peaceful means. It is my hope that this award will inspire and empower the Tibetan people and the people of China to pursue, in the words of the Dalai Lama, a "middle path" to peace, rejecting violence and embracing compromise through dialog.

Moreover, it is my prayer that this award will focus the attention of the international community to the plight of the Tibetan people and draw global support for their efforts to save Tibetan culture.

In the 88 years of the Nobel Prize's existence, surely no one has been more deserved than the Dalai Lama whose life philosophy has been one of reverence for all things living. In our interdependent earth, he affirms that man is not alone. Nature, too, has its rights in his vision of a better world, one that neither the Chinese, nor any other power, can morally violate.

Just 2 years ago, on September 22, 1987, His Holiness was my guest at a luncheon here in Senate. Our tribute today is an extension of our tribute then. In January I was one of many who nominated His Holiness the Dalai Lama of Tibet for the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize. I wrote then that the world may then note:

That a man of peace secured for his people a voice and a venue to meet the challenge to peace and freedom in his homeland.

Today the world did take note.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter to Mr. Egil Aarvik be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC, January 13, 1989.

Mr. EGIL AARVIK,
Chairman, Nobel Peace Prize Committee, The Nobel Institute, N-0255 Oslo 2, Norway.

DEAR MR. AARVIK: As you consider nominations for the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize, I urge you to give consideration to awarding this high honor to His Holiness the Dalai Lama of Tibet.

Since the diaspora of 1959, the Dalai Lama has shepherded the Tibetans in exile while struggling to secure peace and justice for his countrymen in Tibet. The Dalai Lama has never wavered from his advocacy for a peaceful resolution of the status of Tibet within the greater body of China. Even in the face of armed repression of the Tibetan people, the Dalai Lama has responded with pleas for non-violent resistance and constructive dialogue.

It is with this dialogue in mind, and in combination with his long record of inspirational leadership and a true commitment to the well-being of all the world's peoples, that I envision the Dalai Lama's nomination as a proclamation that his peaceful approach can be a persuasive tool in resolving a truly difficult and complex situation. The world may then note that a man of peace secured for his people a voice and a venue to meet the challenge to peace and freedom in his homeland.

The Dalai Lama's message, indeed his life, exemplify the ideals of the Nobel Peace Prize. I urge that his nomination be given your serious and favorable consideration.

With every good wish.

Ever sincerely,

CLAIBORNE PELL.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution. A similar one is being submitted in the House, I believe, at this very same time. It is being cosponsored by Senators HELMS, MOYNIHAN, BIDEN, PRESSLER, SIMON, SANFORD, and SARBANES.

If it is in order I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will send the resolution to the desk, the clerk will state the resolution.

Mr. PELL. I send it to the desk, Mr. President, but withdraw my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator wish to withdraw his request for immediate consideration?

Mr. PELL. I withdraw my request for immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is withdrawn.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this morning the Norwegian——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will suspend momentarily the Chair will inquire of the senior Senator from Rhode Island if he still wishes to introduce the resolution?

Mr. PELL. I thought by sending it to the desk I had submitted the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well, the concurrent resolution will be appropriately referred.

Is that the wish of the Senator?

Mr. PELL. Or held at the desk, I would hope.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would require a unanimous consent.

Mr. PELL. I thank the President pro tempore of the Senate for his indulgence. I ask this to be held at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to holding the resolution at the desk until further action?

If the Chair hears no objection, the request is granted.

Mr. PELL. I thank the President and relinquish the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, for the information of Senators who will be interested, I am sure, it is contemplated that this resolution will be cleared, perhaps quite soon today. In any event, it will be acted upon this evening before we leave.

Let me make a few comments with respect to the honor accorded to a good friend of mine and a good friend of Senator PELL's, the Dalai Lama.

Mr. President, this morning the Norwegian Nobel Prize Committee announced that they had awarded the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize to His Holiness, the Dalai Lama. The resolution we are introducing today commends the committee for having recognized the justice of the Tibetan cause and congratulates His Holiness for having received the award.

Mr. President, the cause of Tibet which the Dalai Lama has championed all his life is one which the American people unanimously support. We know that the people of Tibet have a separate language and culture and have had a national homeland on the high plateaus of Central Asia for centuries.

Nevertheless, beginning October 7, 1950 the Chinese Communist Army invaded and occupied Tibet. This unwarranted invasion and occupation which was completely contrary to international law has led to unprecedented suffering for the Tibetan people. Between 1959 and 1979 over 1 million Tibetans perished as a direct result of the executions, torture, and deliberately induced famine engendered by the policies of the Government of the People's Republic of China.

Since 1950 and particularly during the ravages of Mao's cultural revolution, over 6,000 monasteries, the repositories of 1,300 years of Tibet's cultural achievements, were destroyed and their irreplaceable legacy of art and literature to the world was lost or stolen.

On October 1, 1987, Chinese Communist police in the Tibetan capital of Lhasa fired on unarmed demonstrators, killing at least six and wounding scores of others. Since that time the people of Tibet have been victimized by a new wave of violence and repression culminating in the imposition of martial law on March 7, 1989.

Mr. President, the problem of Tibet is not a conflict between the people of Tibet and the people of China. The massacre of Peking on June 4, 1989, demonstrates that both peoples suffer from the effects of forceable imposition of the same Communist system. Having successfully imposed martial law on the people of Tibet in March, the Communists then extended it to all of China in May.

The founders of the Democratic Front for China have expressly recognized this point. At their recent meeting in Paris, their chairman noted that both the Tibetans and the Chinese democracy movement fight against dictatorship and for justice and human rights.

Mr. President, in spite of all of the crimes committed against his people, the temporal and religious leader of the Tibet, the Dalai Lama, has consistently pursued a policy of peace, hope, and reconciliation. Just as consistently, the Chinese Communists have rejected the hand of friendship offered to them.

Today I am pleased to join with the distinguished chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Mr. PELL, and others to commend the Nobel Committee and His Holiness. However, I do not believe this is enough. To be blunt about it, we need to pass sanctions and cause pain to the Communists in Peking so that they will release their stranglehold on the Tibetan and Chinese peoples. Their cause is just and they will prevail, but they need our help and they need it now.

Mr. PELL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HELMS. I certainly will, yes.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I want to commend the Senator for his words and speech and I associate myself with them.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Senator sincerely.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PRESIDENT'S 1989 NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 935 TO AMENDMENT NO. 924

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, momentarily I am going to ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to vitiate the yeas and nays on the pending amendment so I can send a modified form to the desk. Unless the distinguished manager, Mr. BIDEN, desires that I do that now?

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator would yield for a comment, the Senator from Delaware is not at this moment in a position to be able to grant that unanimous consent. I am checking with several of my colleagues who have a keen interest in this subject. I will be able to shortly tell the Senator from North Carolina whether or not we are prepared to do that, although it is being considered.

Mr. HELMS. I understand. I would like to save the Senate as much time as possible and not get into a rancor over this thing.

Mr. President, over the past several hours, several hours up to about 34 or 36 hours, I have managed to piece together the story of the tragic inaction of the United States on Tuesday in the face of a strong plea from patriotic Panamanians for help, but this cry for help went unheard, obscured by a cacophony of official international visits and a total lack of any advanced planning. I was intrigued to note that last night's TV news programs and this morning's news programs have confirmed the remarks that I had prepared to make last evening.

Mr. President, I believe the U.S. Government had advanced warning that an action was planned against General Noriega, and I also believe, to my sorrow, that no contingency plans had been set in place, other than to do nothing. I believe that the opposition troops in Panama had Mr. Noriega in captivity for at least 5 hours and I believe longer than that, and they were anxious to turn him over to the United States for trial but received not the slightest encouragement from United States officials. I believe that the leaders of our Government were perhaps a little bit too preoccupied with entertaining Noriega's strongest supporter in Latin America, the President of Mexico.

In any case, Mr. President, on Tuesday I discovered in my initial contacts with United States officials, both here and in Panama and elsewhere, that they had little information about what was happening in Panama and, frankly, some of them did not seem to care. I talked to secure lines; I talked to open lines; I talked to well-known and prominent people in this Government and formerly in this Government all of whom have exceedingly vast knowledge of Panama and the situation there.

A great deal of information, therefore, has come to me from various sources, both American and Panamanian. None of this information—none—was restricted by security classification. Some of my sources were in direct contact with the opposition forces in general headquarters. Yesterday, I received further information which corroborates the information that I received earlier, and it is my intention to share that information with the Senate today.

Frankly, it is a mystery to me that one obscure U.S. Senator can assemble information from open sources that appears to be more complete and more accurate than anything the administration has chosen thus far to make public. In fact, the administration, which is my administration, has not even been able to spell correctly the name of the leader of the opposition forces Major Giroldi. For their information it is G-i-r-o-l-d-i.

I mention this to emphasize that I decided not to attend any classified hearings or briefings on this matter so that I would be able to speak publicly—originally I intended to do it last night—but in any case, I wanted to speak publicly about the information that I assembled. With that in mind, Mr. President, let me summarize Tuesday's events for the purposes of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and anybody else who may be interested.

Tuesday morning at 7:45 Panama time, which of course was 8:45 Eastern time, troops in opposition to the criminal regime of Manuel Noriega entered the general headquarters of the Panama Defense Forces at the time that Noriega arrived, and they placed him under detention. This was the first step, do you not see, in a carefully planned scenario. Indeed, two members from Noriega's own special security forces were part of this operation, and they were reporting on his every movement.

I realize that there have been attempts to deny that Noriega was ever held in custody, but the truth is beginning to emerge even on that. Now it is being acknowledged, but until last evening, sources were still, in this administration, saying they were not sure whether he was ever in detention. But my sources, and they are credible, assure me that Noriega was, in fact, held for 5 hours in the general headquarters and that his detention was a key element in the fruitless negotiations that were carried on with U.S. officials.

About 9 a.m. Panamanian time, the opposition troops went to talk to officers of the United States Southern Command. They told the U.S. officers that they were holding Noriega captive and they requested U.S. assistance to take custody of Noriega and remove him to the United States. That is what they reported to me Tuesday and since. However, the U.S. officers informed the opposition troops that the Southcom did not have the authority to apprehend Noriega and that the opposition troops would have to bring Noriega to the U.S. base.

Now let me say parenthetically right now that that is the purpose of this amendment. There is no question about the President having the authority to do what should have been done Tuesday. This amendment simply spells out, reaffirms that he does have that authority.

You say, "Senator, why are you offering this amendment?" I will tell you why I am offering this amendment. I want there never to be another occasion where the Keystone Cops run around and bump into each other and say we do not know whether we have the authority or not. I want it spelled out in a reaffirmation which is contained in this amendment.

The opposition troops stated they did not have the military capability to take Noriega out of the general headquarters and bring him to U.S. authorities. Somehow this scenario has been twisted in various public pronouncements and confidential pronouncements that I have heard about to imply that the opposition troops refused to turn over Noriega to the United States. Not so. They were eager to turn over Noriega, but the fact is that the United States refused to leave the United States base in Panama to get him. Those are the facts, ma'am, as they used to say on television.

Mr. President, I am informed that at this point, Southcom contacted the Joint Chiefs of Staff in Washington. The wheels on the bureaucracy grind slowly, always, but they just totally almost shut down Tuesday. Eventually, the Joint Chiefs reported back that their decision was not to make a decision. Southcom had to report back to the opposition troops that they could not help in any way.

Various representatives of the news media have told me that the Department of Defense originally put out press guidance sheets and orally to deny that the United States Government was ever asked for help by the Panamanian opposition troops. Unfortunately, I am told by unimpeachable sources within the administration that the DOD press guidance was incorrect.

So where does that leave us? The decision to do nothing conforms completely to the opinion of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who has told me personnally in the past on another occasion that he is opposed to any kind of military action in Panama. He is entitled to that opinion. I would not deny it. But as I believe I said to him at the time, it is difficult for this Senator to understand what the purpose of a military force is if it is not to defend U.S. vital interests.

Something has been said about armchair generals, we do not need armchair generals at the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

It has also been reported to me from nonintelligence sources that Southcom asked the CIA to assist but that the CIA refused. At some point during this debate I hope the distinguished chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, my good friend from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], may speak so far as he is privileged to speak, because of the classified nature of a lot of material. But I reiterate that I have not received any classified material so I am free to speak and say what is on my mind, and that is what I am doing at this moment.

In any event, Mr. President, meanwhile civilian representatives of the opposition had contacted me by 9:30 Washington time on Tuesday asking me to urge the administration to make a show of military force around the general headquarters and to block the highway from Tocumen Airport to the general headquarters to prevent Noriega's troops from entering the city. That could have been easily done and should have been done.

I immediately tried to reach various high officials in our Government, but, as I said earlier, they were previously indisposed. They were, as the saying goes, I suppose, wining and dining with the President of Mexico, which is all right, but they had about a third or fourth level bureaucrat answering the phone down at the State Department. And as Sam Ervin used to say, quoting a town character in Morgantown, "he did not know anything and he had that tangled up," so it was impossible to get through.

I am told that representatives of the civilian opposition in Panama also contacted the administration directly to ask not for combat but simply for a display of military force and assistance in getting Noriega out of Panama.

Meanwhile, back at the ranch, or back at the State Department, a so-called task force was finally set up to deal with the situation, if you can call it that, because everybody else was done at the White House meeting with the Mexican President. This task force was constituted at the Deputy Assistant Secretary level. Moreover, the task force had authority only to "monitor the situation", not to make recommendations or decisions. We all know how that goes in this city. No one was available at a higher level to give information to Senators. And by that time other Senators were calling, and they tell me they had the same situation confronting them that I did. As a matter of fact, one Senator has stated that when he asked for more information, what do you reckon this task force told him? They said, "Senator, turn on CNN television."

I have information that no high level meetings on Panama were held until 2:30 Tuesday afternoon when Secretary Baker and Assistant Secretary Aronson went to the President to tell him that the coup attempt had failed. Of course it had failed. What else did they expect?

Meanwhile, the opposition troops in the general headquarters began to negotiate with Noriega. They were trying to stall for some time, still hoping, do you not see, that up there in Washington, DC, somebody would make a decision that would be helpful in terms of moving back to a democratic government in Panama and getting Noriega, the drug trafficker, the money launderer, indicted by the United States Government and wanted in Miami for trial.

But while the opposition troops were waiting for the U.S. bureaucracy to make a decision, what happened? Noriega's troops had time to mobilize and move to recapture the general headquarters.

If you will look at a map of Panama, you will see that Noriega's major military base is at Rio Hato, which is a former United States World War II airfield 75 miles west of Panama City. Rio Hato is the headquarters of the 7th Infantry. The 7th Infantry is commanded by Capt. Lucho Gonzalez, one of Noriega's faithful associates who is widely believed to share in Noriega's drug profits. Noriega has his own luxurious house at Rio Hato. Rio Hato is also reported to be the refuge for the notorious Colombian drug kings Pablo Escobar and Jorge Ochoa. The executive officer of the 7th Infantry is Capt. Mario del Cid. Captain Cid has been publicly accused by the Spadafora family—and I hope nobody in this Chamber will ever forget what happened to Dr. Spadafora. The Spadafora family is still trying to get justice. Captain del Cid has been publicly accused, as I say, of being present at and participating in the torture and decapitation of Dr. Huga Spadafora.

Members of the Spadafora family have been in my office on a number of occasions and, of course, they are not going to get any justice in Panama with Noriega there.

So it is clear that the 7th Infantry is the hard core of Noriega's support—brutal men who have no future other than serving Manuel Noriega. About 300 troops from the 7th Infantry were flown to Tocumen Airport in Cessna 212 light planes and one 727. Tocumen Airport is about 12 miles east of Panama City where the general headquarters is situated. There is only one major highway that leads from this airport to the city, and that is the Interamerican Highway. It crosses several bridges, and do you know what the opposition forces had hoped for and asked for? They asked simply that there be a display of U.S. force blocking this highway at strategic points, thereby preventing any troop movement from the airport. They did not get it. We were too busy doing nothing in Washington, DC.

Moreover, another Panamanian military base is at Fort Cimmaron, about 15 miles east of Tocumen Airport and here is based the Battalion 2000 under the command of Maj. Federico Olochea.

According to reports I have received—and I believe them to be accurate; no one has misrepresented them—Olochea remained neutral during the action. Nevertheless, Battalion 2000 was created by Noriega in 1983 as the military unit that would protect the Panama Canal in the year 2000 when the canal is supposed to be fully turned over to Panama. This Battalion 2000 is especially loyal to him.

So the scenario is that the two military units met at Tocumen Airport, a combined force of about 1,300 men. From there they took 19 2½-ton trucks and 4 armored vehicles and headed down the Interamerican Highway toward the general headquarters.

Meanwhile, about 11 a.m. Panama time, the opposition troops announced in a communique that Noriega was under detention and was on a list of senior officers to be retired from the Defense Forces. At that point, the opposition troops declared victory. They stated that the arrest of Noriega was not a political action, but an internal action against the senior officers. This was an attempt to get breathing space.

Nevertheless, do you not know that the Noriega troops had already rallied together at Tocumen and were on the road? They were going to rescue that thug, that drug trafficker, that money launderer, that brutal dictator. They were able to move down the highway unimpeded and arrived at the general headquarters in about 20 minutes. I guess it is worthy of mention that this road takes them right past the United States Embassy in Panama. Had they met with fully armed U.S. troops in full force on the highway, they would never have dared even to open fire.

The Noriega troops surrounded the general headquarters, but did not enter because their leader was captive at that time inside. Instead, the forces of the Department of Investigations [DENI]—the feared intelligence unit responsible for many detentions, interrogations, and disappearances in Panama, began to round up the mothers and wives of the leaders of the opposition forces, and forced these mothers and wives to telephone the leaders in the general headquarters. The message of the women was simple: Please surrender, or we will be killed.

By this time, the opposition troops had been told that the United States was not going to do anything. But the point is that the whole plan had been predicated upon the concept that the United States, as we have said over and over again, was anxious to apprehend Noriega, and would give at least passive support to the action. They took us at our word, and they made a mistake.

At 1:30 p.m. Panama time, a Panamanian helicopter landed at the general headquarters and took Noriega away. About half an hour later, the opposition troops surrendered. Hundreds of opposition troops were taken into custody and herded into buses and taken away. Who knows where they are now?

About 6:30 p.m. Panama time, Noriega went on television live and said that he was in control of the situation and would investigate the situation to see what happened. You bet your boots. I do not know how many people are already dead there as a result of the typical Noriega investigation.

The leader of the opposition troops, Maj. Moises Giroldi—they called him Moses—is now dead. We know that. I received a report from Panama that Noriega personally shot the major. Administration spokesmen have been saying that there was "confusion" because the major was supposedly pro-Noriega. Yet persons knowledgeable about the Panamanian Defense Forces say that he is a professional officer untainted by drug corruption concerned about the future of the Panamanian military—exactly the sort of person the United States should have been cultivating.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a list of other Panamanian officers executed after the movement collapsed be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PARTIAL LIST OF PANAMA DEFENSE FORCE OFFICERS OPPOSING NORIEGA KILLED DURING AND AFTER ATTEMPTED COUP

Major Moises Giroldi
Captain Tejada
Captain Sandoval
Lieutenant Bonilla
Lieutenant Concepcion
2nd Lieutenant Ortega

PARTIAL LIST OF PDF OFFICERS IN OPPOSITION TO NORIEGA CURRENTLY HELD PRISONER

Col. Julio Ow Young
Col. Guillermo Wong
Lt. Col. Palacios Gondola
Major Agustin Degracia
Major Agustin Pajarro
Captain Nicasia Drake
Captain Sanchez
Captain Jesus Balma

NOTE.—In addition to these military officers killed and jailed, there are also hundreds of troops who were killed or are now in prison.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this morning the security forces—including the DENI and the G-2—began to arrest key leaders of the civilian opposition. I am informed that Guillermo Endara, the opposition leader who was elected President in the elections Noriega canceled last May, has gone into hiding. Ten others that we know of have been arrested.

Mr. President, three military groups in Panama have attempted to take action against the Noriega regime. The first attempt was led in March 1988 by Col. Leonid Macias. All the men involved were tortured and jailed. To this good day, no one knows whether they are alive. The second action was led by Col. Eduardo Herrera, who was Panama's Ambassador to Israel. United States officials brought him back to the United States from Israel last year to plan an action against the regime. He started organizing his plan, but certain circles in the U.S. Government—lower echelon officials who kept Noriega on the U.S. payroll for years and years—complained that Herrera's plan might result in the death of Noriega—an accusation that Herrera strongly denies. The third action was yesterday's abortive attempt. After this can anybody imagine that any member of the Panama defense forces can be expected to act against Noriega? I cannot imagine it.

In this instance, the United States was informed at least 2 days in advance that opposition forces intended to apprehend Noriega. And that was done. In fact, the opposition forces report that U.S. officials even encouraged them to go ahead. But at the moment of truth, the United States was nowhere to be found.

Mr. President, this is why I proposed my amendment. I did it Tuesday evening.

I thought about it a lot. I reviewed in my mind the repeated suggestions that I heard throughout the day from our Government that well, you know, the authority to do this or that is not certain.

All this amendment, which is at the desk, is intended to do is eliminate at least the argument the next time, if there is a next time, because I want the amendment to say that this Congress reaffirms the President's authority, authority that he already had. And there should never have been any doubt about it in anybody's mind. We are always contending over and over again that the President's authority is vague or unclear or that Congress would never support military action to depose Noriega or help the Panamanian people to restore a constitutional government.

If this amendment is approved, there can be no doubt in anybody's mind.

Mr. SYMMS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HELMS. Let me say one more thing, and I will be happy to yield, provided I do not lose my right to the floor.

In accordance with suggestions from Senators whom I respect, and who support what I am trying to do, it is my wish, my intent, if I am permitted to do so, to modify the original amendment to abbreviate it somewhat, and focus on the point I have tried to make. Let me read what I propose to be the modified amendment:

Notwithstanding any other provision of the law, the President's authority is hereby reaffirmed to use the Armed Forces of the United States to secure the removal of General Manuel Antonio Noriega from his illegal control of the Republic of Panama in order to, A, bring General Noriega to trial in the United States under the terms of his February 1988 indictment on drug trafficking charges; and B, protect the Panama Canal pursuant to the Panama Canal Treaties of 1978.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the distinguished Senator from Idaho without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I want to compliment the Senator from North Carolina on his excellent statement. It is a sad statement, but I think it speaks to the very problem in Central America.

It is obvious to this Senator that the policy of this administration—our administration—is not to exercise our rightful role in Panama. And it is absolutely tragic.

We watched the election fraud in Panama earlier where two out of every three people voted for the legitimate opposition to General Noriega. We say we are for a democratic process on one hand, and then when those two out of three people that had no guns had to confront the one out of three people who voted for Mr. Noriega and had all the guns, they had a fraudulent election.

I related this story to my constituents in Idaho and reminded them that one of the reasons that we have free and fair elections in the United States is that all people are allowed the right to own firearms, so the politicians and the Government authoritarians cannot overrule the people in the elective process.

Following the Panamanian elections, I called the administration and stated—that the world opinion, which so much foreign policy is based on in this modern world, would have most likely supported the United States if we exerted our military strength and placed into power the people who won the election legitimately.

If our policy is to not exert the rights of the 1977 treaty to protect the American interests pursuant to the Panama Canal Treaty, or replace General Noriega with the rightful people who won the election, we might as well make that our new Government policy.

There is a great deal of confusion about which side the United States of America is on. There is no question in this Senator's mind that we are the most powerful Nation on Earth. We have the strongest military, the best trained and equipped, the most capable, experienced and educated officers, and the best NCO corps; there is no question in mind that we have the strongest ability in the military.

We have the strongest economy in the world too, but it takes one other portion to that. You have to have a strong political will. If we do not have the will to export the ideas of freedom and to occasionally use our military strength to see that the interests of our people are protected in our own backyard, all I can say is, God, help us.

I think the Senator has done a great service to this country, and I am happy to see that many Members are interested in this. The American people need to know this story, so they can, in fact, relay their outrage to their elected officials that America should do better than this.

I have heard the replies of the administration about our inaction in the failed coup: "We were not sure, it could have been a trap."

Even if that is the case, why should we apologize to anyone if we attempt to see that the people who truly won the election in Panama are placed into power? Is that such an immoral, improper, or unethical position for the United States of America to be in? What does our Constitution mean?

How can we export freedom to those people in the world that reach out for it and cling to it; how can we export it if we cannot stand upright in Panama where we have bona fide interests by treaty which, incidentally, this Senator was not in favor of, but is the law of the land?

I think we need to have this showdown now. It is not that I do not have great respect for our President, our Secretary of Defense, or the Secretary of State, whether they are Republicans or Democrats. It is an American issue.

The Senator from North Carolina is absolutely doing his country and the Senate and the administration a favor by bringing this issue up, and I salute him for it. I am happy to be able to support his amendment.

I do not know whether he is asking for cosponsors, but, if he gets to that point, I would like to be added as a cosponsor.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Senator. He is not only eloquent, he is right, which is more important.

The Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] and Senator SYMMS and Senator WALLOP have asked to be cosponsors, and I ask unanimous consent that they be added.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the names of the cosponsors will be added.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I would be glad to yield to the Senator from New York on the same conditions I yielded to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have no objection if he wants to yield for a question, but I have been here for some time hoping to speak briefly in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HELMS. There will be time for that. Senator D'AMATO has been here as well.

Mr. SIMON. With due respect to the Senator from New York, I believe I have been here longer. If the Senator from North Carolina wishes to yield for a question from the Senator from New York I have no objection, but if it is to yield for a speech, I do object and I want to speak.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. HELMS. Very well.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I raise a question with the Senator from North Carolina. Is it the view of the Senator from North Carolina that the United States should have come to the aid of those who raised this coup against General Noriega?

Mr. HELMS. As I think I made clear in the statement, and I know it is a rhetorical question, the Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. D'AMATO. We have heard some public reports, if I am not mistaken, that there was a question as to the character of the individual leading the coup, Major Giraldi, who, by the way, I understand has been executed. Does the Senator agree with me that choir boys do not lead coups? Wasn't that a rather limp, lame excuse put forth as to why we would not go to the aid of those leading the coup?

Mr. HELMS. I share the Senator's view, of course.

Mr. D'AMATO. There was a question also that seems to arise that there was some concern that possibly this was a ruse to entrap the United States into undertaking an action against Noriega. Does that seem credible when we had our own helicopters flying over observing the situation?

Mr. HELMS. I hate to be critical of an administration which I support, but again, as Senator Ervin used to say, I say to my friend from New York that does not even make good nonsense.

Mr. D'AMATO. I am also told there was a very real question as to what was taking place. But I understand that the PTF headquarters is visible from our installations on the mountaintop and that it could be seen that there was indeed a battle taking place, in addition to telephonic communication with the rebels or those leading the coup against Noreiga. So again it would seem incredible that this was a ruse.

Mr. HELMS. The Senator from New York and this Senator have been to Panama, and we know the geographical and topographical case. No, it does not make sense to me.

Mr. D'AMATO. I think it was, if I am not wrong and the Senator might correct me, that it was President Franklin Delano Roosevelt who said that America is the arsenal of democracy. Would the Senator agree with me that our arsenal seems to have run out of firepower at a critical time at this juncture?

Mr. HELMS. I think the Senator made an interesting observation. While he brings up Roosevelt, I wonder how Teddy Rossevelt would have reacted to the coup.

Mr. D'AMATO. I would like, at the appropriate time, to make some observations in the form of questions in support of a policy that would say America has not only a right but an obligation to come to the assistance of those who seek democracy and particularly the people of Panama in their own hemisphere. I commend the Senator from North Carolina for having the courage to raise this issue. Whether or not this amendment is adopted, the overall principle is the issue here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina may yield only for a question.

Mr. D'AMATO. I thank the President.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, under the same conditions as available to the previous two Senators, I will be glad to yield to my friend and neighbor, Senator SIMON.

Mr. SIMON. I thank my colleague.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I know it is well motivated. If the question were in the United States Senate should we somehow send the message to the people of Panama that we do not like Noriega, that would be unanimous. There is no question about that.

But let me add, in fairness to this administration, that the account that we just heard from the senior Senator from North Carolina differs dramatically from the account we heard yesterday afternoon from the Secretary of Defense and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, not in minor details, but it differs dramatically. I am not in the position to know whether the Secretary of Defense and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs are right or whether the Senator from North Carolina is right. But there was a dramatic disparity.

I happen to agree with the Senator from North Carolina on the matter of spending U.S. money in elections in other countries. He opposed use of United States tax funds in the election in El Salvador, and so do I. He opposed the use of United States tax funds in the election in Nicaragua, and so do I. We may differ on why it should be done.

My own reason for opposing it is, No. 1, I think this is a decision the people in these countries ought to be making freely and without our interference; and No. 2, it is counterproductive.

If were running as a candidate in some other country where the United States was putting money on the other side, I know that I would make it the issue that the opposition is a puppet of the United States. So I agree with the distinguished Senator from North Carolina on that issue.

But for that same reason we ought to be very, very careful in how we exercise our military might and what we do in Latin America particularly. The image of the United States in——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair wishes to interrupt the Senator from Illinois. It is the Chair's desire to protect the rights of Senators. Should the Senator from North Carolina leave the floor and go into the cloakroom, he would have yielded the floor.

The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, in order not to inconvenience my senior colleague, if I could just ask for the floor on my own, but that is his preference, I would be pleased to do that.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. HELMS. I understand. We are trying to work out a scenario. I do not know how to address this matter. I see no point now in my holding the floor. I know the Chair would recognize the first Senator who seeks recognition here after I have made my comments.

I am going to yield the floor and let the Senator from Illinois have it in his own right.

Mr. SIMON. I thank my colleague from North Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator yields the floor.

The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the image of the United States in Latin America is too frequently the image of a bully and exploiter. Sometimes that image is accurate. Sometimes it is inaccurate. But we should not conduct ourselves in such a way as to reinforce that image.

When we indicated Noriega and then took some actions immediately afterward, there were a great many people in Panama who were strong opponents of General Noriega, who said to us, "What you are doing is really reinforcing the power of Noriega." And I fear they are correct.

What we ought to do is let the people of Panama make that decision, make clear we are on the side of human rights, but also make clear that we are not going to interfere in their process.

This brings up a very basic question that we have not faced in Congress. It is a very fundamental question. Should we use the power of U.S. troops, the power of U.S. weapons, to overturn governments we do not happen to like? Let us face it, that is about two-thirds of the governments on the face of the Earth. If we are going to do that, we are going to be heavily involved everywhere.

Or do we say we stand up for human rights as we did under President Jimmy Carter? One of the things that happened after his Presidency and during his Presidency is we saw the change from dictatorships in Latin America and elsewhere. The cause of human rights was aided. Do we stand up that way and say we will use American force when American interests are directly threatened or American citizens are directly threatened but only then? Otherwise, the people of Panama and the people of other countries have to make their own decision about who is to rule in the country.

It seems to me that basic decision is one we ought to be making. I think the American people back it. I think it is prudent. Right now, when there is some difficulty in any country, the government in power can take extreme action and say it is because of the CIA. And there has been enough evidence of our involvement from time to time that it becomes plausible. It hurts us politically and does our cause no good.

My understanding—and I have not heard this directly—my understanding is that the administration opposes the Helms amendment, and properly so. The President of the United States has ample authority right now to deal with any emergency that arises in Panama or anywhere else on the face of the Earth. I see no reason for the passage of this particular amendment. The President of the United States, I think, or the administration is right in opposing this particular amendment.

In general, when we are in doubt, our policy overseas ought to be a bipartisan policy. When we strongly differ, as the Senator from North Carolina does, then it is proper to offer this kind of an amendment. But I think the majority of us, I hope, will draw the conclusion that it is not wise, nor prudent to pass this kind of an amendment.

Mr. President, I question the presence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of no quroum has been raised and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, perhaps it is worthy of the record at this point. This is not the first time that I discussed on this floor the activities of Mr. Noriega and his former boss, Omar Torrijos.

I had staff do a little research. On February 20, 1978, more than 11 years ago, I did my best to discuss the problems which the United States would have, in my judgment, if we went into partnership with a drug trafficking regime. In that speech, I noted how deeply Noriega—and I called him by name on February 20, 1978—how deeply Noriega was involved in drug running activities of the Torrijos regime. Noriega was in fact a front for a boss.

Let me read you a few words that I said over 11 years ago. And I am quoting myself.

> The (Panama Canal) Treaties would make us an intimate partner with a corrupt regime which uses the machinery of government for criminal gain. The benefits which will be conferred on Panama will be placed in the trust of this corrupt regime. The daily knowledge of the citizens of Panama that the United States is supporting this regime in power and pouring millions of dollars into corrupt hands will inflame hostility and hatred against us. The overriding object of the treaties purportedly is to improve relations with the Panamanian people; but it is far more likely that our relations will become worse.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my statement of February 20, 1978, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Senate, Feb. 20, 1989]

DRUG TRAFFICKING IN PANAMA: AN APPRAISAL OF THE PROPOSED PARTNER OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, tomorrow, under a unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will go into a closed session to discuss the allegations that have been brought against Panama with regard to trafficking in drugs. Such a procedure has both advantages and disadvantages. While it will allow Senators to examine and debate material now sealed in the files of the Select Committee on Intelligence, it will also prevent the American people from forming their own conclusions of the evidence. We have seen in the fruits of the Warren Commission the distrust and uncertainty which such a procedure breeds when it is applied to deeply felt, emotional issues. There must be no hint of coverup, no suggestion that secrecy has been imposed to silence politically damaging revelations.

If these treaties are ratified, the American people will be entering a 22-year partnership that confers great benefits upon a foreign government—benefits that could have been kept for the American people. The American people will be justifiably angered if it turns out that the Panamanian Government is controlled by an international gangster.

A major problem involved in the discussion of such matters in a closed session is that it imposes serious constraints upon any Senator who participates. A Senator must bend over backwards to avoid discussing privileged matters; he has to err on the side of too much caution. Sometimes the procedure has the effect of putting a gag upon knowledge already in the possession of a Senator before he is given access to classified matters. Since the Senator from North Carolina has not yet had access to the files of the Intelligence Committee, he would like to discuss today the publicly known issues and facts before the record is closed. What I hope to do today is to lay down some basic principles as a public framework for the closed debate tomorrow.

BASIC PRINCIPLES

Here are the considerations we ought to keep in mind:

First. The issue is not an internal matter of Panama. The Panamanian drug traffic has very much involved the health and welfare of the United States.

Second. The Panamanian drug traffic is not a matter which is to be viewed as a problem in which many nations are involved in the general context of international relations; we have always had a special relationship with the Republic of Panama.

Third. Panamanian drug traffic has itself been stamped with a special character; the role of Panama has been unique and far reaching.

Fourth. The overwhelming evidence on the public record of the Panamanian drug traffic in the early seventies is not to be dismissed as past history; the participants today occupy positions of trust in the present regime in Panama.

Fifth. The absence of aggressive investigative or diplomatic action by the United States since the signing of the Kissinger-Tack agreement of February 1974 is not to be taken as evidence that Panama has been "cleared"; rather, the obvious self-interests of both governments suggest either a cover-up or a temporary cessation of activity during negotiations and Senate debate.

Sixth. Although it is important to sift all evidence relating to the complicity of Omar Torrijos himself, Torrijos himself is not the issue. The focus should be on Panama as such; its form of government; its record of enforcement and cooperation over the past 10 years; and the complicity of a broad range of Panamanian officials and their relatives and friends.

Seventh. The evidence we are looking for with regard to the Panamanian dope traffic does not have to be limited to the type of evidence that would convict in a U.S. court. We are debating the conferring of a great benefit in Panama, at great expense to ourselves, and we are not trying to convict in a court of law.

Eighth. Finally, it is not correct to treat the Panamanian drug problem as a side issue to the treaties; for the treaties would place the United States in an intimate and mutual partnership with Panama that would be unparalleled in our relationship with any other nation in the world. Moreover, the provisions of the treaty and its related agreements place our Nation in the position where the United States is specifically prohibited from enforcing drug traffic controls in a U.S. Government facility that has great potential for criminal abuse.

THE EVIDENCE

The evidence now available shows that Omar Torrijos has aided, abetted and protected the drug traffic in Panama. In brief form, the evidence for the complicity of high Panamanian officials in the narcotics traffic is this:

First. Panama's geographic location and its transportation facilities make it an ideal location for the transfer and control of narcotics shipments either by sea or by air.

Second. In a 1973 report based on testimony and on-the-spot investigation by the House Merchant Marine Committee, Panama was found to be the conduit for one-twelfth of the heroin coming into the United States—enough for the daily supply of 20,000 addicts.

Third. Cases involving drug trafficking reached the highest levels of the Panamanian Government. Omar Torrijos and his Foreign Minister Juan Tack led public efforts to discredit and cover up revelations of such drug trafficking incidents.

Fourth. Moises Torrijos, brother of Omar, was indicted by a grand jury of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York as a coconspirator in a New York case in which five Panamanians were convicted and imprisoned for narcotics trafficking. The indictment still stands, and Moises Torrijos is liable for arrest if he steps on U.S. soil.

Fifth. According to the sworn statement of Leland L. Riggs, Jr., former Customs attaché at the U.S. Embassy in Panama, a warrant had been issued to arrest Moises Torrijos on the basis of the indictment, and that he, Riggs, was ordered to arrest Moises upon his scheduled arrival in the Canal Zone from Spain by passenger ship. However, Moises was forewarned, disembarked in Venezuela, and arrived by air, landing in Panama. Mr. Riggs points out that only the U.S. State Department and the CIA had advance knowledge of the planned arrest, and "Moises Torrijos could only have been alerted to the planned arrest by U.S. authorities."

Sixth. John Ingersoll, then Director of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs, traveled to Panama, met with Col. Manuel Noriega, Chief of Panamanian Intelligence, and with Gen. Omar Torrijos, and discussed the indictment and warrant.

Seventh. Moises Torrijos had earlier been Panamanian Ambassador to Argentina, and had been declared persona non grata for his activities in that country. Even though he was persona non grata in Argentina, even though he was indicted in the United States, even though his government had been informed of the indictment, he was named Ambassador to Spain. He now enjoys high favor and currently is also director of treaty information for Panama. Despite this new responsibility, Moises Torrijos has never come to the United States since his indictment, not even for the treaty signing ceremony on September 7, 1977.

Eighth. The arrest of Raphael Richard Gonzales at the John F. Kennedy Airport on July 8, 1971, with 151 pounds of heroin, led to a series of arrests and convictions of Panamanians and to the indictment of Moises Torrijos. Richard was the son of the Panamanian Ambassador to the Republic of China (Taiwan) and was attempting to use a diplomatic passport to bring in the heroin without customs inspection. Under international law, Richard was not entitled to a diplomatic passport; yet he bore such a passport signed by the Panamanian Foreign Minister, Juan Tack. Richard had made successfully four previous such deliveries of heroin undetected.

Ninth. The arrest and conviction of Joaquin Him Gonzales, air traffic controller of Panama's Tocumen International Airport, pointed up the crucial role which Tocumen has played in international smuggling. Him directed planes carrying millions of dollars worth of heroin to special areas of the airfield, where the cargoes were guarded by uniformed members of the Panamanian Guardia Nacional. Him was arrested in U.S. territory in the Canal Zone, and convicted in Texas, where he had arranged heroin deliveries. He was also an associate of Moises Torrijos.

Tenth. The Yolanda Sarmiento case points up the role of the Colon, Free Zone in international smuggling. Intended to be a duty-free location for the import, display, and sale for export of manufactured goods, the Free Zone is not under the control of Panamanian Customs, but of the Guardia Nacional. According to Leland Riggs, Jr., the U.S. Customs attaché in Panama, Yolanda Sarmiento was responsible for shipping 100 pounds of heroin monthly to the United States. This heroin was stored in the Colon Free Zone. The Free Zone is 50 miles across the isthmus from Tocumen Airport; reportedly the heroin was shipped from the airport to the Free Zone in Guardia trucks. The United States recently agreed to the expansion of the Free Zone by leasing Old France Field, which is in U.S. territory, to Panama for $1 a year.

Eleventh. Another Torrijos brother, Hugo, is in charge of the Panamanian state gambling casinos and the national lottery, operations which generate large amounts of unaccounted-for cash. He also owns a large nightclub which is a center for prostitution and retail drug dealing. The arrest of Gerado Sanclemente for narcotics in June 1977 created consternation. Sanclemente is married to a cousin of the Torrijos brothers; he was induced to come to Panama from Colombia and to set up various business enterprises under their protection. He lived in a building owned by Hugo, which was also the offices of the National Casinos. His apartment in this building was the center of drug dealing. According to depositions taken in Panama, Hugo intervened to urge Sanclemente to give himself up. Subsequently, Sanclemente was taken to a medical clinic near a private airport used by the Guardia and Government planes; he escaped from the clinic and was taken away by a waiting plane.

Twelfth. A third Torrijos brother, Marden, is traveling ambassador extraordinaire for the Government of Panama. Although no further information is available as to his duties and activities, the documented use of diplomatic passports for narcotics trafficking casts a cloud over the legitimacy of his appointment.

Thirteenth. Several investigative sources report that Omar Torrijos is a business partner with Frank Marshall Jimenez in several businesses relating to transportation, including trucking firms, buslines, and nonscheduled airlines. Also included in their interests is a freight forwarding firm that controls shipments into and out of the Colon Free Zone. Marshall is a fugitive from Costa Rica a former member of the Costa Rican legislature, who used his legislative immunity to cover extensive liquor smuggling operations. When his immunity was lifted by Costa Rican authorities and arrest threatened, Marshall fled to Panama.

IMPLICATIONS

The facts related above have profound implications for the consideration of the Senate during the debate on the Panama Canal treaties. The first considerations go to the integrity of the Panamanian Government; the second go to the effect on the treaties of the treaties themselves.

It is sometimes said that the integrity of the Panamanian Government or the character of its leaders are irrelevant to the treaty debate; it is said that the treaties represent the universal aspirations of the Panamanian people no matter what government might be in charge. Nevertheless, the only way that we can deal with the Panamanian people is through their government. It is self-evident that the treaties are agreements made with the government, not with the people. Therefore, even if it be granted for the sake of argument that the treaties do represent the aspirations of the people, if the government is deeply flawed it cannot be the vehicle for the fulfilment of those aspirations.

Although corruption exists in almost every government, including our own, the key to integrity is whether there also exist the checks and balances which can identify that corruption and eliminate it. No one can pretend that the Panamanian Government is a representative government, or that it contains checks and balances. Even outside the governmental system, there are no political parties, no free press, or other countervailing political forces. In form it is a military dictatorship, in practice it is a flefdom for the Torrijos family and their favored cronies.

Although the Panamanian Government has made a great show of narcotics enforcement, in practice most of those arrested are small dealers, or third country nationals who are attempting to muscle in on the territory. The market for the Panamanian dope trade is not Panama, but the United States. Only those with the right connections can prosper; those who are arrested know that they are subject to extortion if they want their freedom.

This posture is evident in the restrictions which were placed upon U.S. agents working out of the U.S. Embassy in Panama. They received cooperation from Panama only so long as their cases dealt with "little people." Before they could proceed to investigate a case, permission had to be obtained from Panamanian officials: the moment the case involved any member of the National Guard or substantial amounts of drugs, permission was denied. On the side of the U.S. Government, State Department officials worked hand in glove to reinforce these restrictions on U.S. narcotics agents. The actions taken to thwart the impartial justice of the U.S. judicial system in the case of Moises Torrijos is a sensational example; but the daily effect of similar actions in operational activities is bound to have a chilling effect on the effectiveness and output of U.S. narcotics agents.

The impact of the narcotics trade upon the United States hardly needs to be discussed. It takes a toll not only in the thousands of addicts whose lives are ruined, but in the climate of crime and fear in our cities, the toll of robberies, injuries and deaths suffered by thousands of innocent citizens, the increased costs of welfare and medical attention, and the social costs of the decay of our great cities. The fact that Panama's leaders would participate in or condone such injuries to the United States should make us pause before we confer substantial benefit upon them.

IMPACT OF THE TREATIES

The ratification of the treaties would have the following impact:

First. The treaties would make us an intimate partner with a corrupt regime which uses the machinery of government for criminal gain. The benefits which will be conferred upon Panama will be placed into the trust of this corrupt regime. The daily knowledge of the citizens of Panama that the United States is supporting this regime in power and pouring millions of dollars into corrupt hands will inflame hostility and hatred against us. The over-riding object of the treaties purportedly is to improve relations with the Panamanian people; but it is far more likely that our relations will become worse.

Second. Panama would take total jurisdiction over customs. The treaties and related agreements specifically provide that offenses in narcotics trafficking will be under Panamanian jurisdiction, even in the canal operating areas. At the present time, U.S. Customs officials are able to search ships, make arrests (as, for example, in the case of Joachim Him, and in the attempt on Moises Torrijos) and to pass on information to Customs officials waiting at ports in the United States. None of this will be possible under the treaties.

Third. Panama will take charge of the Ports of Balboa and Colon, including piers, warehouses, and security. Thus it will be possible for a corrupt government to control completely the shipments of narcotics by sea, just as the Panamanian Government now controls Tocumen Airport.

Fourth. The Panama Canal Company presently has an Internal Security Division, which includes a narcotics intelligence unit. When the treaty is implemented, the canal organization no longer will collect narcotics intelligence. The canal operation, which has thousands of Panamanian workers, many of them in daily contact with foreign ships, will be a U.S. Government agency under the treaty; yet the United States will not be able to enforce or even collect information on the violation of U.S. narcotics laws on U.S. Government property.

Fifth. The unique geographic location of Panama at the midpoint between the two continents makes it ideally suited as a center for drug smuggling by airplane. The United States will be hampered in its drug enforcement programs because we will no longer have agents free to operate in the Canal Zone; U.S. enforcement personnel attached to the U.S. Embassy will continue to be under restrictions from officials who put good relations with Panama above the broader interests of the American people.

Mr. President, in order to provide a basis for the debate on the drug problem tomorrow, I ask unanimous consent that the following documents be printed at the conclusion of my remarks:

First. The statement of Leland Riggs, Jr., for the use of the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers;

Second. A series of articles by UPI reporters Nicholas Daniloff and Cheryl Arvidson on the drug situation in Panama:

Third. Excerpts from the book, "The Secret War Against Dope," by Andrew Tully, dealing with the Raphael Richard case;

Fourth. Excerpts from a 1973 report of the House Merchant Marine Committee dealing with narcotics trafficking in Panama.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

STATEMENT OF LELAND L. RIGGS, JR.

I, Leland L. Riggs, Jr., being duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

Leland L. Riggs, Jr., am a retired Special Agent in Charge of the United States Drug Enforcement Administration. I am familiar with facts involving narcotics intelligence collection in Central America.

I first became a criminal investigator for the U.S. Bureau of Customs in January, 1964, after having spent 8½ years as a highway patrolman. I was first assigned by the Bureau of Customs to duties in California where I conducted narcotics smuggling investigations for a period of 6½ years. Therefore, I was promoted from Customs Special Agent to Senior Customs Representative and was transferred to Mexico City, Mexico. Inasmuch as I am bilingual and speak Spanish, my assignment to Mexico was deemed to be advantageous to the agency.

While assigned to Mexico City, I had sole responsibility for Customs narcotics intelligence gathering and for conducting follow-up investigations forwarded to me by our domestic offices of investigation. My area of responsibility included not only the Republic of Mexico but additionally all of Latin America. However, 95 percent of my investigative time concerned either Mexico or the Republic of Panama.

During the time I was in Mexico in 1970 and 1971, I conducted several investigations in Panama. Subsequently, in June of 1972, I was appointed Customs Attache and instructed to establish an office in the American Embassy in Panama City, Panama. This occurred during the period when the entire Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs agents force had been expelled persona non grata from Panama. I served as Customs Attache until July 1, 1973, at which time the Drug Enforcement Administration was formed, and I then also assumed command of the Panamanian functions of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs when the Bureau of Customs functions were merged with those of the BNDD. In short, I became the Special Agent in Charge of the combined office.

I left Panama on June 17, 1974, to become the Special Agent in Charge of the DEA District Office in Brownsville, Texas. Thereafter while on temporary assignment as Project Manager for a special DEA operation in Colombia directed against clandestine cocaine processing laboratories in Colombia, on November 30, 1975, I was attacked, beaten, and pushed off a retaining wall to a street below and suffered several fractured vertebrae, a broken ankle, kidney damage, and assorted cuts and bruises. The DEA subsequently retired me on August 24, 1976, for medical disability reasons.

When I first began conducting investigations in Panama, the BNDD Agent in Charge advised me that we had to be very careful about informing Panamainan government officials concerning our work since they were corrupt and also involved in narcotics trafficking. I soon learned from personal experience that this advice was sound.

During September, 1970, I traveled to Panama to conduct a follow-up investigation regarding a Yolando Sarmiento case involving shipments of heroin from Panama to New York. Although I do not have presently in my possession intelligence reports prepared by me at that time, I do recall certain aspects of the case. Yolanda Sarmiento reportedly was smuggling approximately 100 pounds of heroin monthly into the United States. This heroin was reported to be stored in the Colon Free Zone in the Republic of Panama.

The Colon Free Zone is a large, fenced-in, heavily guarded section of Colon, Panama, on the Atlantic side where duty-free items are displayed in numerous stores for purchase, by persons and businesses based primarily in South America. I was advised by U.S. Canal Zone officials and a confidential source that the Guardia Nacional controlled and guarded this enclosed area. I later did manage to gain entrance with a U.S. Canal Zone official: however, we were only permitted to go into the showcase areas of the various stores. The Colon Free Zone is entered at a gate guarded by uniformed members of the Guardia Nacional. Although the Government of Panama does have a Customs Office and there are Panamanian Customs Agents, Panamanian Customs does not have responsibility for control of the Free Zone.

During 1970, United States Customs Agents in New York were able to effect the arrest of Yolanda Sarmiento, Emillo Diaz Gonzales, and others: however, Yolanda Sarmiento was released on bail, subsequently fled the country, and became a fugitive in Argentina. As best I recall, Emillo Diaz Gonzales escaped from prison in New York and is believed also to have fled the country.

My efforts to continue a follow-up investigation of the Sarmiento case were essentially unsuccessful because of the problem inherent in free movement within the Colon Free Zone resulting from the control of the Free Zone by the Guardia Nacional of the Government of Panama.

During my trips to Panama. I became aware of a BNDD investigation concerning the Panamanian chief air controller, Juaquin Him Gonzales. Juaquin Him was reportedly directing heroin from Panama into Texas and using his official capacity in the Government of Panama to facilitate the movement of this heroin. He was subsequently indicted by a U.S. Grand Jury in Texas and was arrested when he entered the U.S. Canal Zone to attend a softball game. Juaquin Him was tried and convicted for facilitating the transportation of narcotics into the United States.

I understand that the arrest of Juaquin Him caused considerable dissension between the Ambassador and the U.S. narcotics agents in Panama. I experienced similar problems in connection with the Raphael Richard-Moises Torrijos case.

I learned of the Richard-Torrijos case after my assignment as the Customs Attache to the American Embassy in Panama. In fact, I became directly involved in the investigation concerning Moises Torrijos, now Panamanian Ambassador to Spain, and Raphael Richard Gonzales, the son of the then-Panamanian Ambassador to Taiwan. Richard was arrested on the evening of July 8, 1971, at John F. Kennedy Airport in New York in possession of 151 pounds of heroin. Immediately prior to his arrest, he claimed diplomatic immunity and asserted that his suitcase could not be opened and searched due to his diplomatic passport. A U.S. customs inspector advised him that he was accredited as a diplomat in Taiwan, not in the United States, and therefore had no diplomatic status in the United States. Also arrested that evening was Nicolas Polanco, a reported chauffeur-bodyguard of Moises Torrijos. Moises Torrijos was then the Panamanian Ambassador to Argentina; and he is the brother of Dictator Omar Torrijos.

The day following the Richard arrest, Guillermo Alfonso Gonzales was also arrested upon his arrival in New York City from Panama for the purposes of accepting delivery of the heroin Richard had attempted to bring into the country. Others arrested the same day were Jose Francisco Oscar San Martino, an Argentine, and Cesar and Amarico Altanirano, both Panamanians.

Subsequent investigations of the same case led to the indictment of Moises Torrijos by a Grand Jury of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York. Torrijos was indicted as a co-conspirator with the above-mentioned defendants. Thereafter, a warrant for the arrest of Moises Torrijos was issued by the U.S. Court for the Eastern District of New York. On the basis of the evidence of a warrant, I was instructed to be on the alert to effect an arrest in the event Moises Torrijos traveled from Spain through the U.S.-controlled Panama Canal Zone.

During either late 1972 of early 1973, I was advised that Moises Torrijos, accompanied by his wife, was traveling from Spain to Panama on a passenger vessel. Subsequent information showed that the vessel would dock in Cristobal, Panama, within the U.S.-controlled Panama Canal Zone. Arrangements were therefore made to effect the arrest of Moises Torrijos in the U.S. territory upon his arrival. However, Moises Torrijos was obviously informed of his impending arrest and departed the vessel at Caracas, Venezuela, where he flew by commercial airliner to Tocumen Airport within the Republic of Panama. When the vessel arrived, only Mrs. Moises Torrijos disembarked. Inasmuch as the only parties aware of the planned arrest of Moises Torrijos other than BNDD were the U.S. Department of State and the Central Intelligence Agency, Moises Torrijos could only have been alerted to the planned arrest by United States authorities.

During my tenure as Special Agent in Charge of Drug Enforcement, I did not have another opportunity to effect the arrest of Moises Torrijos. In fact, during my tour of duty as Customs Attache before assuming command of the combined Customs and BNDD forces, I was advised that Washington officials of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs traveled to Panama, met with Colonel Noriega, Chief of Panamanian Intelligence, and with General Omar Torrijos, and alerted them both to the existence of an indictment and warrant concerning the General's brother, Moises. To the best of my knowledge, the warrant for the arrest of Moises Torrijos is still in existence and presumably, if he touches U.S. soil, he is still liable to arrest.

During my tour of duty in Panama, several cases which were presented to the Panamanian enforcement officials were mysteriously terminated or not given proper attention. Due to my knowledge of their involvement, many cases were not presented to Panamanian enforcement officials so as not to compromise my investigation. Finally, I did not feel that I had the full support of the diplomatic community in the pursuit of my assigned mission in Panama, especially in those matters which tended to implicate officials of the Government of Panama. In any event, due to the eventual assignment of a State Department employee as the narcotics coordinator, I was relegated to a secondary position. Similar conditions now exist in most embassies where Drug Enforcement personnel are assigned, and in almost all cases the Department of State employee has no narcotics training nor expertise. It is my opinion that Department of State personnel are placed in the position of narcotics coordinator primarily to insulate and protect the activities of the Department of State from any so-called disrupting incident regarding narcotics enforcement directed against an official of the host government.

Given under my hand and seal on this the first day of December, 1977, in the City of Washington, District of Columbia.

LELAND L. RIGGS, Jr.

UPI INVESTIGATION OF DRUG TRAFFICKING IN PANAMA—PART I

(By Nicholas Daniloff and Cheryl Arvidson)

WASHINGTON.—Since 1971, the U.S. government has received a stream of allegations linking Panama's Supreme Revolutionary Leader, Gen. Omar Torrijos, his family and associates to drug trafficking, a UPI investigator has disclosed.

The allegations—some from officials, others admittedly second-hand—come from informants, drug pushers and agents. They are in files of the Canal Zone government, the Drug Enforcement Administration, the U.S. Army, the CIA, and congressional committees.

Attorney General Griffin Bell wrote Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., last October that a grand jury had reviewed allegations against Torrijos and found insufficient evidence to warrant action.

The Justice Department says Torrijos has been "neither the subject nor target of an investigation." Federal drug enforcement chief Peter Bensinger states the disclaimer more cautiously: "General Omar Torrijos has never been the target of investigation."

President Carter is aware of the allegations. Carter, Bell and Bensinger met last fall to discuss their implications in the uphill battle to win Senate ratification of the treaties that would turn the Panama Canal over to Panama.

The allegations prompted the Senate to schedule a rare closed session Feb. 21 to examine them.

Treaty supporters call the drug questions peripheral to the canal issue.

But Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., says they involve the integrity of the Panamanian government and its ability to stand behind the agreements.

The current Senate ratification battle is so close opponents feel the drug issue could defeat the treaties. Supporters, short of the needed two-thirds majority, have accepted changes in the treaties, but hope to avoid the volatile drug issue.

United Press International began its investigation in January. Two UPI reporters examined scores of documents, many supplied by treaty opponents. These included investigative reports, affidavits, congressional testimony and interviews with officials in Panama and Washington.

Among at least 45 files on "the Panama connection" compiled by DEA, there are dossiers on Omar Torrijos, his brother Hugo, head of Panama's casinos; his brother Moises, Panama's ambassador to Spain; Col. Manuel Antonio Noriega, chief of Panama's intelligence service; and other officials and associates.

During the investigation, UPI confirmed that Moises Torrijos was indicted in the Eastern District of New York for heroin trafficking in 1972. A bench warrant for his arrest was issued May 16, 1972.

An attempt to arrest Moises Torrijos in December 1972 in the Canal Zone failed, according to several sources, because the Torrijos brothers were tipped by high U.S. officials. So far as is known, Moises is still subject to arrest on U.S. territory.

UPI also learned of a series of unusual actions to safeguard DEA files on the Panamanian situation. The files were moved several times during one week in October and rumors circulated on Capitol Hill that some documents may have been removed.

U.S. concern about narcotics smuggling through Panama goes back to the Vietnam War period. U.S. narcotics agents estimate up to 47 tons of narcotics arrive in this country from Panama each year.

This volume has led U.S. officials to suspect that the "Panama connection" operates either with the aid or negligence of Panamanian officials.

"There's no doubt that senior officials in that country are involved," one former official told UPI. The source, who asked not to be named, had direct responsibility for stopping the narcotics flow from Panama.

Panama, linking the oceans and North and South America, is a natural transit point for contraband. Whenever goods are consigned to bonded warehouses for transshipment, smugglers have opportunity to hide drugs in legitimate cargoes.

For at least the last 17 years, drug agents have watched goods and passengers transiting the canal, the U.S. Canal Zone, Panama's free trade zone at Colon and Panama City's Iocumen International Airport.

One airport official, Jose Delgado, was named by two Panamanian informants as a connect for cocaine packages from Colombia destined for Omar Torrijos.

Former Panamanian intelligence agent Alexis Watson told House investigators Jan. 5 about an incident he witnessed at the airport in November 1976:

"There is a Colombia guy . . . he says he is Torrijos' second cousin. He used to come to Panama each week. When he came . . . this is something that I investigated and I saw the package . . . he carries some packages. He was received by Torrijos himself. They went to a place in the free zone of the airport . . . a guy named Delgado, and left the package there."

Watson told House Merchant Marine Committee investigators he did not see the contents, but was convinced they were drugs. He said a Panamanian Air Force pilot told him he was flying to El Salvador to deliver just "one package that Delgado has from Torrijos."

A second Panamanian informant also named Delgado and others in sworn testimony: "Their actions and involvement with Torrijos and other Panamanian officials make it highly probable that they are either actively involved or at least very knowledgeable of narcotics being smuggled into and out of Panama."

Watson told House investigators the Transit S.A. company, which he said was operated by Omar Torrijos and Noriega, handles Colombian coffee with cocaine inside.

Watson said in November 1975 he saw associates of Torrijos take "three sacks of two kilos of cocaine" out of coffee bags. He said Carlos Duque, manager of Transit S.A., and Orejita Ruiz, a former Torrijos bodyguard, and a Lt. Col. Cecilio Fisher of the National Guard were involved. The second Panamanian witness also said Duque and Fisher were in the drug traffic.

In 1972, Watson also said he saw Omar Torrijos, Panamanian President Demetrio Lakas and a suspected drug dealer named "Padilla" in Lakas' office dividing about $200,000 in $100 bills. "I think if Padilla is there, it was drugs," Watson said.

Noriega, who last week called Watson "a paranoid and an embezzler," was praised recently by Bensinger for anti-narcotics efforts. But in DEA intelligence reports, Noriega is mentioned along with other drug traffickers.

Watson also testified Noriega ordered him in 1971 to release Padilla's brother and an American he had arrested in Panama City.

"I called my commander and told him I had two people with cocaine, five or six pounds. I gave their names, I had their identification in my hand. Immediately I received the order. 'Put those people on liberty.'"

The House interviewers asked: "Who was your commander?"

WATSON. "Noriega."

INVESTIGATOR. "You called Noriega on the radio?"

WATSON."He didn't speak to me, but the order received by radio said: 'Number One says to free those people.'"

INVESTIGATOR. "'Number One' meant Noriega?"

WATSON."Yes."

The congressional testimony meshes with the picture emerging from the following DEA documents:

A 1973 document states that Colombian suspect Andres Velasquez planned a trip to Tocumen Airport to make a drug drop for the Torrijos brothers.

A 1974 report quotes an informant as saying Frank Marshall Jimenez "worked directly with and for Gen. Omar Torrijos in Panama and that between the two of them, they control the contraband traffic from the free zone of Colon, Panama."

It also states the Torrijos brothers "own 33⅓ percent interest in the gran Hotel de Costa Rica and that the gambling casino there was operated by the Torrijos interests . . . This hotel has been suspected of being a contact point for international narcotics couriers."

A 1975 document states Ramiro Rivas, owner of a Panamanian cement company, tried to buy a freight company to help move drugs for Omar and Hugo Torrijos.

In an interview, a high U.S. diplomat in Panama criticized Omar Torrijos of retaining Hugo as director of national casinos: "It's just too much of a temptation."

Hugo Torrijos' name surfaced when Panama seized 145 pounds of cocaine at Tucumen Airport on June 9, 1977.

One suspect was Gerardo Sanclemente, a Colombian married to a Torrijos relative Gloria Nubia Quinceno. Sanclemente allegedly helped move narcotics through the airport. He carried a "courtesy of the port" card, which assured him favored treatment and a letter from Hugo Torrijos to Delgado.

Senora Sanclemente quoted Hugo as telling her in a phone call, "I want Gerado to give himself up, it's the only way I can help him. I want him to call Dario Arosemena (chief of Panama's equivalent of the FBI) at 22-2415, and turn himself in; he won't be mistreated or anything."

Sanclemente complied. Because he was ailing, he was confined to a hospital near Panama City's Paitilla airport.

In October of last year, a second suspect held in Paitilla medical center bribed a guard and escaped to Colombia. Rumor's swept Panama City that Sanclemente had escaped, too. U.S. authorities in Washington and Panama City denied the rumors.

Questions about Hugo Torrijos' activities still circulate.

"Hugo Torrijos has a background from 20 years before as a cocaine addict," Watson told investigators. "Everybody in Panama knows. If you ask someone in Panama, 'Where can I buy cocaine.' They will tell you, 'go to Hugo."

Watson recalls, too, seeing Omar and Hugo publicly snorting cocaine in a bar run by Hugo in 1961: "We started drinking when about 12 midnight, I saw him and Hugo take drugs. And I asked (a companion) what is Omar doing?

He said: "They are big, so you don't have do anything about it."

Watson is convinced Omar Torrijos no longer handles drugs personally.

Omar can't be so stupid to handle this thing in that way, Watson told UPI in a telephone interview Feb. 10 before leaving the United States for a hiding place abroad. Watson fears his disclosure will provoke Torrijos to reprisals.

Next, the supreme leader's brother—an indictment and a tipoff.

PART II

WASHINGTON.—One of the best documented instances of Panamanian government involvement in narcotics led to the indictment of Omar Torrijos' brother Moises, now Panama's ambassador to Spain, for heroin trafficking.

A two-month UPI investigation of the case turned up allegations that the Panamanian "Supreme Revolutionary Leader" was tipped off to the indictment against his brother by high U.S. officials and that Moises was able to evade arrest.

On July 3, 1971, Rafael Gonzalez, the 23-year-old son of the Panamanian ambassador to Taiwan, was arrested at New York's Kennedy Airport with 154 pounds of heroin in his suitcase.

Richard was carrying a diplomatic passport signed by Juan Tack, then foreign minister, who represented Panama in canal treaty negotiations during the Nixon-Ford years.

Richard claimed diplomatic immunity, but customs agents determined he did not have legitimate diplomatic status.

Also arrested was Nicholas Poianco, chauffeur for Richard's uncle, Guillermo Gonzalez, a former bodyguard of Moises Torrijos, was believed to be a ringleader in heroin smuggling.

Customs agents discovered the trip was Richard's fifth trip with similar amounts of heroin, according to police reports. On previous trips, Guillermo Gonzalez had accompanied Richard, but this time, Richard and Polanco were to telephone Gonzalez in Panama on delivery of the heroin.

The agents persuaded Richard to call his uncle and urge him to come to New York. When Gonzalez arrived, he was arrested. Three others, an Argentine and two Panamanians, also were arrested. Gonzalez was convicted of heroin smuggling and sentenced to seven years in prison.

When the news reached Panama, according to one Panamanian who was present, Col. Manuel Noriega, Panama's intelligence chief, told an associate. "You heard this———kid stuck his foot in it?"

Another Panamanian informant told House Merchant Marine subcommittee investigators that the associate replied, "Yes, yes, we're going to fix it."

Subsequent investigations resulted in the indictment of Moises Torrijos as a co-conspirator in the transportation of heroin. The indictment was handed down by a grand jury in Eastern District of New York, in May 1972 and a bench warrant for the arrest of Moises was issued on May 16, 1972, U.S. sources said. As far as is known, the indictment and warrant remain in force, meaning Torrijos is subject to arrest on U.S. territory.

A former high government official familiar with the case told UPI the evidence against Moises went far beyond helping obtain a diplomatic passport for Richard: "I've been told fairly recently that we have one hell of a good case against Moises Torrijos."

At the time of the Richard arrest, Moises was Panama's ambassador to Argentina. Later in 1971, he was recalled at Argentina's request after causing offense at a diplomatic reception. He was then assigned as Panama's ambassador to Spain.

The indictment has never been unsealed although the Miami Herald last October quoted Justice Department sources as confirming its existence.

UPI learned that U.S. narcotics agents tried to arrest Moises Torrijos in Decmber 1972 but failed because other U.S. officials apparently had tipped Omar Torrijos to the indictment.

UPI was told by three sources that John Ingersoll, former head of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs—DEA's predecessor—went to Panama and passed the information to the Panamanian leader.

Retired DEA agent Leland Riggs, who tried to apprehend Moises Torrijos, gave a sworn affidavit to a Senate Judiciary subcommittee stating he was assigned to the case on his arrival in Panama in June 1972: "I was instructed to be on the alert to effect an arrest in the event Moises Torrijos traveled from Spain through the U.S. controlled Panama Canal Zone."

Riggs said in December 1972, "I was advised that Moises Torrijos, accompanied by his wife, was traveling from Spain to Panama on a passenger vessel. Subsequent information showed that the vessel would dock in Cristobal, Panama, within the U.S. controlled Panama Canal Zone."

Riggs said arrangement were made to arrest Torrijos in Cristobal when the ship arrived.

"However, Moises Torrijos was obviously informed of his impending arrest and departed the vessel at Caracas, Venezuela, where he flew by commercial airliner to Tocumen Airport within the Republic of Panama. When the vessel arrived, only Mrs. Torrijos disembarked.

"Inasmuch as the only parties aware of the planned arrest of Moises Torrijos other than BNDD were the U.S. Department of State and the Central Intelligence Agency, Moises Torrijos could only have been alerted to the planned arrest by United States authorities," the Riggs affidavit said.

UPI determined that on June 21, 1972, six months before the arrest attempt, BNDD chief Ingersoll went to Panama to discuss the indictment with Omar Torrijos.

The following is a second-hand account which Senate investigators say they obtained from a "principal" at the meeting:

Omar Torrijos was sitting in a hammock with his feet propped up and smoking a cigar when Ingersoll and his group arrived.

Ingersoll told Torrijos he was reluctant to discuss the situation but "in fairness" he thought the general should know that his brother, Moises, had been indicted in New York for heroin smuggling and a warrant had been issued for his arrest.

"The guy at the meeting said Torrijos made no move at all. He continued to smoke his cigar and there was no change in his facial expression. He didn't even take his feet down," the Senate source said.

Ingersoll offered to send someone to Panama to discuss the indictment with Moises, but the general said that wouldn't be necessary. But some time later, Torrijos contacted U.S. officials to send someone to meet with his brother.

Riggs, when questioned informally by Senate investigators, said he didn't know about the Ingersoll trip. But Riggs said his diary noted a Jan. 30, 1973, visit to Panama by Jerry Strickler, who Riggs identified as head of a Latin American division of BNDD in Washington.

After discussions with American officials, Strickler and agent Ed Heath met with Moises Torrijos, a session Riggs said he had assumed was the "first official notification" of the indictment.

UPI reached Ingersoll in Paris where he now works for IBM. He was asked about his trip to Panama in June 1972.

"I don't know what you're talking about," Ingersoll replied. "You expect me to remember what I was doing in June of 1972?"

Ingersoll said he had traveled to Panama "several times" to meet with Omar Torrijos but told the reporter to ask "the DEA people." * * *.

"I'm not denying or confirming it, and I suggest to you that if you want a denial or a confirmation that you refer your quote allegation unquote to the Department of Justice," Ingersoll said.

UPI learned from three sources—all in narcotics enforcement at the time—that a "government decision" led to Ingersoll's meeting with Torrijos where information on Moises' indictment was relayed.

Two sources said they believed the decision was made to put "pressure" on the Torrijos government.

One said the purpose was to reinstate agents who had been expelled from Panama in March 1972, after press leaks about the Richard investigation implicated Moises and Tack. The other source said Ingersoll might have offered to "go light" on Moises if Panama would strengthen anti-narcotics efforts.

The third source said the trip was made to avoid "an international incident." He said three White House meetings were held to discuss the tipoff. At these meetings, the source said, were Ingersoll, Egil Krogh, chairman of Nixon's cabinet level narcotics committee, Vernon Acree, former U.S. customs commissioner, and State Department representatives.

Ingersoll, the source said, got the assignment because of his "acquaintanceship" with Torrijos "and could approach him on a discussion basis."

"After the indictment was returned, there was a lot of concern and consternation over that fact because it did involve the brother of Torrijos. . . . The concern was if he came to the United States, he would be arrested. I think some of the State Department people were concerned over the fact that this might cause or create some kind of international incident," this source said.

PART III

WASHINGTON.—A UPI inquiry into drug trafficking allegations against Panamanian strongman Omar Torrijos poses questions about what happens when U.S. foreign policy objectives and narcotics law enforcement collide.

Several sources interviewed by UPI during a two-month investigation left a clear impression U.S. officials sometimes give "preferential treatment" when drug investigations—often based on hearsay—lead to officials of foreign governments, including but not limited to Panama.

The policy goes back at least to the early 1970's. It exists, sources indicated, because diplomatic and political considerations frequently take preference over narcotics enforcement efforts. In these cases, it is not deemed in the best U.S. interest to vigorously pursue the leads.

It also was suggested that despite known Panamanian government involvement in drug dealing, U.S. narcotics agents still need a working relationship with the country's police to stop other drug smuggling to the United States.

"Some (cooperation) is better than none," one current drug official commented.

A former enforcement official told UPI. "We have to do business there. If they're corrupt, we have to find out how they're being corrupted."

"I have no doubt that what the U.S. government really knows about these allegations will eventually become known," one American diplomat in Panama said.

"But in the meantime," he said, "the United States is in a real dilemma. Our intelligence files contain potentially libelous information on many world leaders. Are we to make these known to the public? Or should we withhold them because they may be libelous and because their release might affect foreign policy interests?

The Carter administration inherited this policy, but the practices followed in the past became highly meaningful when Carter's negotiations reached agreement on treaty proposals to phase out U.S. control of the canal.

Alleged drug involvement by Torrijos, his brothers and his government may be peripheral to the question of ratifying the treaties, as their supporters claim, but it also could bolster opponents attacks on the integrity of the Torrijos regime! In fact, conservative opponents concede the drug allegations may now be their only hope to stop the treaties.

Faced with intense conservative opposition and an uphill ratification battle last fall, the Carter administration apparently decided last fall to take extraordinary efforts to keep the drug questions out of the public eye.

Included were administration pressures to quash a congressional inquiry that could have brought some allegations to light, secret movement and possible removal of DEA documents relating to the drug charges, and a decision to limit congressional access to the materials by giving them to the Senate intelligence committee.

In late September, Sen. James Allen, D-Ala., a leading treaty opponent, held the first hearings on the treaties before his Judiciary subcommittee.

Allens' subcommittee knew nothing of the drug allegations, Instead, it was fousing on reports involving U.S bugging of Omar Torrijos.

The subcommittee wanted to find out whether Torrijos used knowledge of the bugging to blackmail American negotiators into making concessions. This suggestion was later denied by the Senate intelligence committee.

Allen's subcommittee issued two sets of subpoenas to an Army sergeant who supposedly sold the information to Torrijos and top officials of intelligence agencies and the Justice Department.

The first subpoenas dealt specifically with the bugging incident. A second set—far more broad—was issued later, Quentin Cronnelin, staff director of the Allen subcommittee, believes the broad scope of the second subpoenas caused alarm because they might have opened up the drug issue.

Attorney General Griffin Bell, in a Sept. 29 letter to James Eastland, D-Miss., chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said the subpoenas were "overbroad" and said they "could result in a serious misunderstanding" between the Intelligence and Judiciary committees.

The administration enlisted help from Senate Democratic Leader Robert Byrd, like Eastland a member of Allen's subcommittee, and from the top members of the intelligence committee—Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-

Hawaii, and Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz.—to stop the Allen hearings.

After what one individual described as "the most intense pressure I've ever seen" on Allen, including threats of Senate censure, the Alabama Senator backed off. The hearing was canceled and the subpoenas became moot.

About this time, two vocal treaty opponents, Sens. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Bob Dole, R-Kan., were getting hints of raw intelligence data in government files relating to the Torrijos regime and narcotics.

The Allen subcommittee hearings were cancelled on Sept. 30—a Friday.

Documents and rumors circulating on Capitol Hill suggest that on the following Monday, there was a White House meeting between Bell, President Carter and others.

The Justice Department confirms that Bell met with Carter that day, but the White House claims to have no meeting recorded. However, the White House press office said that Carter might have met with Bell without a record of the session being made.

Congressional sources told UPI that at the Oct. 3 session and at another meeting later that week—reportedly Thursday, Oct. 6—there was considerable discussion about the drug material and its ramifications on the treaty debate if it became public.

A suggestion reportedly was made to Carter that he classify all government doucments on the subject as "national security" material.

The President rejected this suggestion, sources said, and accepted a second option—limited disclosure to "safe" congressional sources, including the Senate intelligence committee, Byrd and Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker.

UPI ascertained that Bell and DEA chief Peter Bensinger did, in fact, brief Baker, Byrd, Inouye and Goldwater Oct. 6 on the drug allegations.

According to congressional sources, at this meeting Byrd told Bell and Bensinger that the best way to keep the lid on the drug allegations would be to send the files to the intelligence committee where strict security could assure "no leaks."

Later in the day, sources said the same briefing was given House Speaker Thomas O'Neill, who reportedly told Bensinger that "under no circumstances" should the files be sent to any House committee because of possible leaks.

A large number of drug files were moved from DEA to the Senate intelligence committee in late October or early November. Senators must sign a pledge not to reveal what they read in committee files under threat of action by the Senate Ethics Committee.

An intelligence committee report based on these documents was presented in secret session to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and a "sanitized version" is due to be released soon.

A closed session of the Senate will also be based on the material in the hands of the intelligence committee.

Although administration officials have repeatedly stated that all the government's files relating to Panama drug ties were sent to the intelligence committees, UPI was told that some material may have been removed before it reached Capitol Hill.

There have been suggestions that some sensitive material may have been placed in Bell's office safe or may have been destroyed.

In addition, UPI received reports that the DEA files relating to Panama were moved at least four times during one week in October—all but once without the usual accounting and receipting procedures to protect them—before they reached the intelligence committee.

Dole made the first public mention of files being moved from the DEA headquarters to its Washington field office during Senate debate on Oct. 13. The movement of files also came up with State Department officials during a hearing by Allen's subcommittee Nov. 15.

But when UPI attempted to get more information, reporters had to gather details indirectly, apparently due to a Bensinger warning on Oct. 7 that any DEA employee who leaked material on Panama would be fired and face criminal charges.

Congressional sources gave UPI details said to come from a DEA employee afraid to provide information directly to reporters. The information passed through two people before being relayed to UPI.

UPI was told that on Oct. 7, the Panama files were moved under high security from their normal storage site in DEA to the 10th floor of the building. One of the offices on the 10th floor is that of Gordon Fink, assistant DEA administrator for intelligence.

The following was the procedure as described to UPI:

With armed guards posted, the files were spread across table tops and examined, and particularly sensitive material removed. Bill Link, an assistant to Bensinger, was identified as supervisor of the operation.

Once the files reached the 10th floor, Link reportedly ordered the normal procedure known as a "paper trace"—requiring people in possession of files to sign receipts for them—suspended.

The files were sifted until 9 p.m. Between 11 p.m. and midnight, Bensinger went to the White House to brief Carter. Carter reportedly voiced concern over the impact of the information on the treaties if it became public.

The White House said it had no record of a late night visit by Bensinger on Oct. 7 but because of the lateness of the hour, conceded it might not have been recorded.

On Saturday, Oct. 8, an individual provided details on the file movement to a congressional source. At that time, he expressed concern about the security of the files.

On Sunday, Oct. 9, the files were moved to the field office. They were returned to headquarters Thursday, Oct. 13, to an individual identified as "Goe," head of Latin American security. Bob Goe is chief of the Latin American section of the Office of Intelligence.

A former high federal narcotics enforcement official, being interviewed on a different subject, volunteered that he had heard the files also were moved at during that week to Bell's office.

"I know first hand that when all this erupted (the allegations of Torrijos' involvement in drug traffic), the files were moved from DEA to Justice," the source said. "I was told. There's no question about it."

A congressional source said he understood some material might have been put in Bell's office safe.

UPI also was told that on Oct. 11, a DEA secretary for routine reasons asked for a file labeled "Panama-Miami." She was denied the file and questioned for three hours by Fink's security division to find out if she was the source of a leak.

UPI was also told—again by congressional sources who said the material was coming from high in the DEA—that the Panamanian drug files allegedly contain information about members of Congress.

These sources said at least one current senator is named as receiving a campaign contribution that may have come from a foreign government and that the files hint of intelligence work done by DEA involving members of Congress.

Dole filed a Freedom of Information request with the DEA on Oct. 14, 1977, for material on the Panamanian drug allegations. He listed 45 specific files relating to the possible involvement of Torrijos, his family and his government in drug dealing.

After some delay, Dole received a 75-page report with none of the material requested. Dole said it was "heavily censored" and "almost totally sanitized."

"All I ended up with was a bunch of newspaper clippings," the senator said.

When Dole protested, Bensinger replied that DEA "was conforming to the specific request and direction of the Senate leadership of both parties that files regarding Panamanian officials and the family of Gen. Omar Torrijos be made available specifically to the Senate intelligence committee."

Bensinger told Dole: "We have complied fully with that directive and have furnished them complete file information. As we indicated at that time, Gen. Omar Torrijos has never been a target of investigation."

But, in an earlier letter to Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., Griffin Bell conceded Omar Torrijos was the object of a grand jury investigation.

Helms had written Bell in October enclosing a raw intelligence file naming Omar Torrijos and asking for information.

Bell responded that DEA learned CBS planned a report on the document, and the Justice Department public information office "informed CBS that a grand jury investigation based on the report had failed to produce any evidence linking the chief of state to the illegal drug traffic."

In practice, Bell said, "DEA and the Department of Justice should not give credibility to such hearsay allegations by announcing the steps, if any, taken to investigate them."

Bell said he therefore had instructed the Justice Department spokesmen to state that none of the allegations have resulted in investigations of Torrijos.

The order stuck: to this day the Justice Department refuses to state there was a grand jury investigation of Omar Torrijos.

Dole, on his return from Panama, wrote Bensinger that Omar Torrijos had promised to contact DEA and help the senator secure the drug files. But Bensinger replied with information about cooperation between the Panamanian authorities and the DEA on drugs. Dole fired back a letter saying, "I believe you misunderstood the point of my communication to you."

Bensinger then conceded there were two matters involved and suggested "with respect to DEA file material, I would again recommend that you contact the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence which has copies of all DEA files regarding this matter."

When UPI requested a briefing on the Panamanian drug situation from DEA, reporters were told there could be no questions about Torrijos.

UPI tried to contact Leland Riggs, a retired DEA agent who once attempted to arrest Moises Torrijos, about an affidavit the agent gave to Senate investigators.

A congressional source placed an introductory telephone call for the reporter. After declining to answer four calls from the reporter, Riggs told the congressional staffer he had received word from an individual in DEA whom he knew and trusted. Riggs said the DEA official cautioned him "not to talk to anybody except the Senate Intelligence Committee."

"I'm on ice," Riggs said.

UPI also sought to reach a DEA agent in Denver who had been involved in the investigation that led to the indictment of Moises Torrijos. The agent, Wilbur Place, said he needed permission from Bensigner before talking to anyone.

That, he conceded, was unlikely.

THE SECRET WAR AGAINST DOPE

(By Andrew Tully)

CHAPTER 10—DIPLOMATIC STEW

Cases like that of the heroin-carrying picture frames have caused United States Customs inspectors everywhere to adopt an amiably sardonic attitude toward their more glamorous colleagues in the investigative Customs Agency Service. The mostly anonymous inspectors, many of them now women, like to joke that the sleuths are "the first line of defense against junk—after us." In point of fact, this is true because the overwhelming majority of dope smugglers try to sneak their stuff into the United States through the legal channels provided by the Customs inspection routine. If the inspector misses the contraband in a suitcase or picture frame, the agent has no case. But in the past decade Customs inspectors have become more than just people in uniform who paw through a traveler's personal effects with infuriating care. They have been trained in their own investigative procedures. They have learned to recognize the smuggler's "profile," to be suspicious of numerous visa and entry stamps showing extensive travel and to take a second look at an individual whose passport bears the seal of a country with a casual, if not corrupt, attitude toward smuggling. Among other characteristics, the average inspector tends to view with leery eye the wayfarer with diplomatic credentials. He has learned that some members of this elegant tribe are wily practitioners of the old shell game and that it is unwise to take them on faith. Thus the interest shown in a young Latin American who arrived in the United States on a summer evening in 1971.

As any poker expert can testify, a successful bluff depends to a large extent on an accurate appraisal of the other player's intelligence. Raphael Richard Gonzalez, twenty-four, son of the Panamanian Ambassador to Nationalist China, was handsome and personable, but he was not very bright. It had never occurred to him, apparently, that United States Customs inspectors knew a thing or two about the international regulations applying to diplomatic passports.

When Richard arrived at New York's Kennedy International Airport from Panama shortly after 7 p.m. on July 8, 1971, he was carrying a diplomatic passport that showed he was a member of the ambassador's family. The passport bore a B-2 visa issued at the United States Embassy in Panama for multiple entries into the United States until August 31, 1974. With a special elegance befitting his position, Richard presented the passport to Customs Inspector Joseph Ania, who greeted him with the courteous respect due an envoy's son.

But if Ania was courtly, he also had the instinctive suspicion of his breed. He wondered about that multiple-entry visa and about Richard's luggage, which consisted of four large Samsonite suitcases and an attaché case.

"What's in your bags, sir?" Ania asked Richard.

"Summer clothing," replied Richard, abstractly.

Ania hefted one of the large suitcases. It seemed unusually heavy for a bag containing "summer clothing." He also noted that when he turned the suitcase from one end to the other, the contents shifted.

Customs, in the person of Inspector Joseph Ania, had good reason to be interested in travelers entering the United States from Panama. Despite the preceding eighteen months, the little "republic" operated by the strong man General Omar Torrijos had become one of the principal conduits for illicit dope trafficking aimed at the American market. One estimate was that as much as one-twelfth of the heroin used by American addicts passed through Panama, which means that approximately 20,000 drug users in the United States got their daily supply by this route.

Moreover, the Panama Canal Zone was an American military base, and law enforcement people were concerned over the statistic which revealed that one-third of the prison population in the Zone was incarcerated on drug charges. Diplomatically, too, there was the danger that the narcotics traffic could complicate months-old negotiations on a new Panamanian sovereignty over the 500-square mile Zone but keep the defense and operation of the canal under American control.

There was also gossip, some of which found its way into print in American newspapers, that cronies of General Torrijos and officials of his regime were involved in the heroin trafficking and were stashing huge profits in Swiss bank vaults. Thus Richard's diplomatic passport made him suspect rather than giving him the privileged respectability such a document commonly bestows on its holder. Customs had no desire to meddle in foreign policy, but the bureau willy-nilly had an official, obligatory curiosity about the baggage of potential smugglers.

"Would you mind opening your bags?" Ania asked Richard.

Richard politely demurred. Waving his passport languidly, he told Ania, "I have diplomatic immunity."

"I'm afraid not," replied Ania. "Your passport shows that neither your father nor you is accredited to the United States, only that your father is accredited to Taiwan. Immunity granted only by the country to which a diplomatic is accredited."

There was a brief legal discussion. Then Richard informed Ania that, anyway, he was in transit to Madrid and therefore his luggage was subject to examination only when it reached its final destination. If that was true, Ania retorted, why was Richard's luggage not in the custody of Braniff Airlines for transshipment to Spain? Richard as unable to account for this. "It's the airline's fault," he said. At any rate, Richard was not about to stand still for an examination there and then of his luggage.

Inspector Ania went through channels. He notified Supervisory Inspector Leonard Simon of the impasse, and Simon escorted Richard to a small conference room for a little chat. Richard steadfastly refused to open his bags. He now explained that, anyway, he had lost the keys to the luggage. Thereupon, Simon dispatched an aide on an errand. The aide was back in a few minutes with a set of duplicate keys obtained from a large Customs collection at the airport.

Simon opened all four suitcases and the attaché. case. None contained clothing or toilet articles. They did yield 140 plastic bags of white powder. A simple field test of the powder revealed a positive finding for heroin.

Special Agent John Giery was summoned, and he placed Richard under arrest for violation of the federal narcotics laws. After Richard had been informed of his rights under the Constitution. Agent Giery offered the young man some fatherly advice. Richard thought things over, then agreed to cooperate.

He told his interrogators that he had traveled from Panama with Nicola Polanco, "a kind of bodyguard." Polanco, said Richard, had already cleared Customs and had observed his arrest from the "Fishbowl" area of the observation deck in the International Arrivals Building. Both Richard and Polanco had been instructed to contact the heroin shipper, an uncle of Richard's named Guillermo Alfonso González López, upon their arrival in New York. Richard gave Agent Giery González' telephone number in Panama—645-357.

An alert was placed with the New York Telephone Company to put a hold on any calls to the Panama number. Meanwhile, according to Richard's instructions, the agents checked the young man into Room 897 of the McAlpin Hotel at 34th Street and Broadway.

At about 10 p.m., Customs got a call from the telephone company. Agents forthwith descended on a public telephone booth at 42nd Street and Eighth Avenue. There they arrested Polanco while he was waiting to get through to González. An agent hung up the phone for Polanco. Customs hoped to have its own little chat with González, later, an eventuality Polanco's warning call would have thwarted.

Thus when agents escorted Richard to his room at the McAlpin about midnight, they were delighted to hear the telephone ringing. Richard had his instructions. When the caller turned out, as hoped, to be González, he told his uncle, "Everything is okay."

The agents heard González ask Richard why he was so late checking into the hotel.

"I got lost," Richard told him. He also informed his uncle that Polanco, by then incarcerated in a cell in the Federal House of Detention, was "downstairs getting a sandwich."

"Okay," González told Richard. "I'm leaving on a Lan-Chile flight arriving at ten o'clock this morning at Kennedy. Stay in your room and wait for me."

As the official Customs report put it: "Arrangements were made in New York for the expected arrival of Guillermo González." Some arrangements. A call was put through to the Customs office in Miami, and instructions were given to the agent in charge there to put a man on the plane González would be taking to New York. Thanks to Richard, the Miami office could be provided with a description of the youth's uncle—Panamanian, five feet, five inches tall, slim build, about 135 pounds, mustache, black hair, white complexion, forty-two to forty-six years of age.

Then Richard talked some more. He told his interrogators he had made five previous flights from Panama to the United States with heroin in his luggage—four in the fall of 1970 and one in January, 1971. On all these flights, Richard said, González accompanied him as "bodyguard."

González arrived at Kennedy Airport at 11:30 a.m. via Miami. Unknown to González, it was a couple of Customs agents who escorted him to a taxicab operated by Special Agent Mario Sessa. González told Sessa to take him to the McAlpin Hotel. En route, the Panamanian informed Sessa that he had a friend in the Hotel Edison and asked if Sessa knew the Edison address. Sessa gave him the address. González thanked him and remarked that he must remember to call his friend that night.

Upon his arrival at the McAlpin, González went directly to Room 897, where he greeted Richard and made some small talk. Then, with Customs men eavesdropping, González told his nehew to place a call to the Hotel Edison. When the call was put through, González took the phone and was connected with an Oscar San Martín in Room 834. González and San Martín arranged to meet in the bar of the Edison within the hour. When González hung up, he was arrested by agents who had been sequestered in an adjoining room.

Like Richard, González was willing to talk. He explained that his arrangement with San Martin for delivery of the heroin required him to place the four suitcases and attaché case in the locked trunk of a rented car, then leave the car in a public parking lot and deliver the parking ticket to San Martin. Ten minutes later, agents had rented a car and stashed Richard's luggage in the trunk. Under surveillance, González drove to a parking lot at 1250 Broadway where he left the car, then set off to deliver the parking ticket to San Martin.

With Customs men still dogging his footsteps, González dutifully arrived at the Hotel Edison, where he met San Martin and turned over the ticket. With González and his guardian agents standing by, San Martin placed a phone call from the hotel lobby. González then departed with his agents, while other Customs men remained to keep an eye on San Martin. Within a few minutes, a man later identified as Américo Altamirano arrived at the Edison and had a brief conversation with San Martín, after which San Martin returned to his hotel room under surveillance.

Agents followed Altamirano to a building at 310 West 47th Street. He left the building several minutes later, accompanied by a man later identified as his brother, César. The brothers walked around in aimless fashion for more than twenty minutes before arriving at the lot where the rented car was parked. There they separated, with César proceeding to the parking lot office while Américo strolled about in the immediate neighborhood.

César presented the parking ticket to a uniformed attendant named Duane Lane, whose full-time job was special agent of the Bureau of Customs. Lane drove the rented car from its space and delivered it to his customer. Then, as César attempted to climb into the car, he was arrested. When César refused to talk, his brother, Américo, was arrested on a nearly street. At about the same time, agents arrested San Martín at the Hotel Edison.

It was a little after 4 p.m. on July 9, 1971. It had taken Customs less than twenty-four hours to round up all six persons involved in the smuggling attempt. Agents had seized 151 pounds of pure heroin with a street value estimated at up to $27,000,000—enough to supply the habit of every addict in New York City for almost a month.

The apprehension of Guillermo Alfonso González López also provided the Customs' Intelligence Division with some raw intelligence to be squirreled away for possible use on another day, in another case with diplomatic ramifications. On González' person were found various papers and an address book, which, in Customs' carefully calculated—and absolutely necessary—double-talk, "indicated" that González had had "associations with" some big names in Latin-American governmental and diplomatic circles, including at least one head of state, at least two ambassadors, assorted Cabinet ministers, and a couple of high-ranking military officers.

As one Customs official put it: "All these names make fascinating reading, but we couldn't lay a glove on their owners even if we had admissible evidence. They're a problem for their own countries unless they get in trouble on American soil and even then we probably couldn't hold them. In the meantime, we're not in the business of toppling foreign governments no matter what kind of creeps they have running their stores."

Besides, Customs at the time was preoccupied with its part in the final disposition of the case of Raphael Richard, et al. As receiver of the heroin, Óscar San Martin drew the stiffest penalty—a twelve-year prison sentence on each of three indictment counts, to run concurrently. Gonzalez, the operation manager, got seven years in the pen, and Richard three and a half years after both pleaded nolo contendere. Americo and César Altamirano each got two years, but charges against Richard's bodyguard, Nicolas Polanco, were dismissed by the United States Attorney's office after he had served almost six months in jail awaiting trial.

Meanwhile, however, Congress had become inquisitive about the drug situation in Panama, and in March, 1972, Customs' intelligence on official Panamanian involvement in heroin trafficking became a matter of public record. The vehicle of this exposé was a draft report by the unlikely Panama Canal subcommittee of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee headed by Representative John M. Murphy, Democrat, of New York.

The connection lay in the fact that the subcommittee had been studying and conducting hearings on the United States position in Panama vis-a-vis the future operation of the Panama Canal and jurisdiction over the Canal Zone. Among the experts to which the subcommittee turned was Customs Commissioner Myles J. Ambrose, who arranged a briefing for the panel by a group of special agents on January 24.

In a far-ranging review, the briefing agents cited some chapter and verse on thirty major heroin seizure cases during the preceding eighteen months. The seizures ranged from 13 pounds to several hundred pounds, and five of the seizures—or one-sixth of the total—involved the Republic of Panama. According to the subcommittee's draft report, "The briefing team concluded that based on the Customs investigation" the Richard case "reached into the highest levels of Panamanian officialdom and included Moises Torrijos, the brother of General Omar Torrijos, and the Panamanian Foreign Minister, Juan Tack."

The report on the briefing also noted that Nicolas Polanco, Richard's bodyguard, was a chauffeur for Richard's uncle Guillermo Gonzalez, and that Gonzalez was a longtime friend and former bodyguard of Moises Torrijos. Added the report: "The Customs agents claimed that because Richard's father was in Taiwan at the time of these transactions that he got his diplomatic passport from Moises, who had access to them as a Panamanian ambassador. Customs confirmed the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs' report that Juan Tack had signed the diplomatic passport."

Although the subcommittee acknowledged that narcotics trafficking was "basically an American problem run, in part, by Americans and criminals in other countries . . . as in every other part of the world, local nationals and officials succumb to the enticement of easy money and are lured into the drug traffic. This has happened in Panama."

The subcommittee was almost as rough on the State Department, which it charged "has had an historic policy of ignoring or denying the involvement in the narcotics traffic into the United States of high-ranking officials of friendly foreign governments . . . The question is [whether] the United States is negotiating a treaty that involves a 70-year, five-billion-dollar U.S. commitment, not to mention the security of the United States and this hemisphere, with a government that condones or is actually involved in a drug-running operation into the United States."

Although it flopped, the Richard caper combined two smuggling methods—one as old as international relations and the other a product of the jet age. A proper diplomatic passport has been the perfect laissez-passer for the carrier of contraband since the days of ancient Canaan. Travel by commercial airline enables the dope supplier in Marseilles to promise speedy, often same-day delivery to the wholesaler in New York. Miami or Chicago, and payment within a matter of days. It has brought to the narcotics trade the rapid turnover of the supermarket.

However he travels, an accredited diplomat's person and baggage are safe from customs inspection. The same is true of the individual traveling with a head of state or high government leader paying an official visit to a foreign country, no matter how clerkly his status. By courtesy and tradition, none of the visiting team's baggage is examined: and, of course, the diplomatic "pouch"—which might be as big as a piano box—is always inviolate. Occasionally, however, authorities are able to gather enough evidence of suspicious associations to move against even these privileged persons, in what might be called "the international interest"—for want of a handler term.

Excerpts From Report on Activities During the 92d Congress of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries

An Overview of the Narcotics Problem in Panama

One of the most pressing problems facing the United States—drug use and drug trafficking—has apparently not been overlooked by the young Americans in the Panama Canal Zone. According to reports coming to the Subcommitte, young dependents of military and civilian families "turn on" to "Panama Red", the local brand of marijuana, as readily as their counterparts in the United States turn to similar hallucinogenic drugs. A large percentage of the prison population in the Canal Zone is being held on drug charges.

Subcommittee investigators have been told that American G.I.'s have sought assignment to Panama because of the easy availability of cheap high grade dope. And this is not a recent development. As far back as 1968 members of the 101st Airborne Division reportedly volunteered for duty at the jungle training schools in Panama because of the lure of drugs. The Subcommittee has been told by U.S. drug law enforcement officers that the Panamanians have complained about the use of marijuana by U.S. troops and have charged that our G.I.'s have corrupted Panamanian troops by introducing them to drug use during what they ironically describe as "joint" maneuvers.

Since a clamp-down on major Mexican airports, Panama has become the conduit through which passes enormous quantities of dope—an estimated one twelfth of the heroin in a recent one year period—used by U.S. addicts. This means that at one point in time roughly 20,000 American drug addicts were getting their daily supply by this route. Large quantities of cocaine have also transited the Zone into this country.

With the increase in heroin and cocaine coming through the Canal Zone, the possibility of drug epidemics that have plagued our military bases and the dependents of both military and civilian support personnel in most parts of the world is a constant threat. This happened for example, in the sprawling U.S. air base, Ching Chuan Kang (CCK), Taiwan, on Okinawa, in the Philippines, and, of course, on a massive scale in Vietnam. Wherever this happens, our military strength is sapped, our image before the people of the host countries is tarnished and our capabilities to operate defense positions and vital installations such as the Panama Canal are diminished.

Given the sensitive nature of our current relations with Panama, we cannot afford to have the picture distorted by the use of drugs or the activities of mercenary American nationals, "soldier of fortune" pilots, and others who are making small fortunes by running thousands of pounds of the world's illict dope through the Republic of Panama. There are, of course, many points surrounding the United States where criminals transship narcotics into the United States—but these areas do not have a canal vital to the defense and commerce of the Americas and the entire world.

As Chairman Garmatz of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee said in mandating the Subcommittee, we must keep abreast of all of those factors affecting the smooth and efficient operation of the Canal.

The narcotics traffic is a threat to our people there, to their children, to the American image in that country and to the relationships between our two countries. We must not let international dope peddlers and drug traffickers imperil the American position in Panama. It should be and must be stopped as quickly as possible and the Subcommittee intends to see that the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs Panama Task Force does this as quickly and efficiently as they did in Okinawa where a special BNDD led task force arrested 71 traffickers in nine months—mostly American servicemen and dependents—and all but wiped out the traffic on that island which contains 50,000 U.S. troops and civilians.

The Subcommittee in no way wishes to cast all of the blame on Panama or its officials for the sudden emergence of Panama as a pipeline for heroin and other drugs into the United States. It is basically an American problem run, in part, by Americans and criminals in other countries. * * *

* * * * *

Another case which prompted the original BNDD assessment of Panamanian official involvement centered around Joaquin Him Gonzalez, a notorious smuggler who was arrested in the Canal Zone by U.S. authorities on February 6, 1971. Within two weeks he was brought to Dallas, Texas, for his active participation in the drug market and tried for conspiracy.

Him Gonzalez was international transit chief at Panama's Tocumen Airport and he used his high position to protect shipments of drugs to the United States. He was accused on this occasion of sending to Dallas somewhat over a million dollars worth of heroin. Gonzalez was allegedly a Torrijos protege and this relationship was made clear when the Panamanian Government mobilized all its resources, something it had not done until that point, for the offender to be returned to Panama. Reports in the press cited the "angry outbrust" and "outraged" protest of the Panamanian Government—led by Juan Tack—over the arrest of Gonzalez.

An indication of the duplicity of certain Panamanian officials is found in a comparison of their public statements and their private or official actions in this regard. For example, in October 1972, Colonel Manuel Noriega, the Intelligence Chief of the National Guard, proclaimed a desire for Panama to become the enforcement center for fighting the drug traffic in Latin America. Yet that same month intelligence reports of the United States Government sustains the 1971 BNDD assessment and we still find that Panamanian officials and security agents are allegedly involved in narcotics trafficking. A similar "offer" was made on April 8, 1972, which received worldwide publicity. However, U.S. officials, when questioned by the Subcommittee, were unaware of any direct contact by the Panamanian Government which would have brought this about.

The arrest of Manuel Rojas Sucre, the nephew of Panama's Vice President Arturo Sucre at Kennedy International Airport on December 3, 1972, with cocaine, liquid hashish, and a diplomatic passport (his mother is Panama's consul general in Montreal) is further indication of a need for continued efforts by the United States Government to impress upon the Panamanians the seriousness with which we view the drug problem.

THE POSITION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The State Department has had a history policy of ignoring or denying the involvement in the narcotics traffic into the United States of high-ranking officials of friendly foreign governments.

While the Department has taken a "soft" approach to the narcotics problem generally, in Panama it has reached an absurd extreme. For example, the Subcommittee was told by the director of the BNDD that as a result of the strong Panamanian objections to the arrest of Him Gonzalez it is highly doubtful that the State Department would ever again allow the arrest of a Panamanian national in the Canal Zone; BNDD agents claimed the Panamanians were only paying lip service to narcotic drug enforcement and that the big trafficking was going on full tilt with the knowledge, sanction and even involvement of certain Panamanian officials and Guardia members.

After a preliminary Subcommittee report was released in March of 1972, on the involvement of Panama's Foreign Minister and others in that government in the narcotics traffic, three BNDD agents assigned to work out of the U.S Embassy in Panama City were declared persona non grata and given 12 hours to leave the country. This ultimatum was delivered on national television by Foreign Minister Juan Tack. This was done after Tack had arranged for the agents to sign letters written by the U.S. Ambassador in Panama denying they had discussed with the Chairman of this Subcommitee the relationship of government officials of Panama to narcotics smuggling into the United States. In subsequent testimony before this Subcommittee, one of the agents stated that he had, in fact, discussed with staff members of the Subcommittee such high-level involvement. There were public denials by various administration agency heads of the charges made in the Subcommittee report—the most heated coming from the Department of State. However, a recent government document supplied to the Subcommittee compiled from information and intelligence gathered by the several agencies with a responsibility for international narcotic law enforcement reached the following conclusion on the so-called "Latin connection":

"Generally speaking, the greatest detriment to effective enforcement in Latin America is corruption. The corruption goes all the way to the top of some Latin American governments. One of the more glaring examples of official corruption is the country of Panama, . . ."

This Subcommittee is in accord with the proposal made by the authors of this report when they concluded:

". . . Because of the known involvement of Panamanian government officials in the international narcotics traffic, the U.S. Government should take a firm stand in the current negotiations of a new treaty for the continued use of the Panama Canal Zone.

"The new treaty should continue to vest authority for the Canal Zone in the Canal Zone Police. The U.S. should not abrogate its authority to arrest fugitives from the U.S. who appear in the Zone, regardless of their nationality. The U.S. should not forego the right to remove such fugitives to the appropriate federal jurisdiction. By taking a strong stand, the U.S. will continue to provide adequate protection to the large number of U.S. citizens who reside in the Canal Zone. It will also prevent international traffickers from obtaining refuge in the Zone as they now do in Panama. More importantly, it will also demonstrate to the rest of the continent that the U.S. is completely serious about controlling the flow of narcotics into the country. It is recognized that by taking this stand, the Government of Panama will attempt to retaliate by creating incidents similar to those that occurred in 1964."

In summary, the Department of State has put a higher priority on placating an increasingly hostile and demanding regime in Panama than it has on taking a firm stand against government that is a major factor in allowing the international flow of heroin and cocaine presently inundating the United States. This is in spite of a wealth of evidence and intelligence that would dictate a firmer course of action.

The question that has apparently been left for the Congress to answer is: Is the United States negotiating a treaty that involves a 70 year—5 billion dollar U.S. investment, not to mention the security of the United States and this hemisphere with a government that condones or is actually involved in a drug-running operation into the United States?

In view of the weak reaction of the Department of State to the narcotics traffic in Panama, it is the conclusion of this Subcommittee that it is incumbent on the Subcommittee to let the Congress—and in turn the Panamanians—know that the United States will not tolerate the use of diplomatic channels and the attendant immunity to be used to funnel drugs into this country.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, a number of Senators, as I indicated earlier, suggested to me that while they agreed with the amendment I had offered on Tuesday, they would feel somewhat more comfortable emphasizing that the President already has such authority as the amendment proposes to grant.

Senator may recall—or they may not—that I had stressed that point in my statements both on Tuesday evening when I offered the amendment, and earlier today, as well as during various conversations with individual Senators. I say again, in an effort to accommodate the concerns, I expressed the willingness to modify the amendment slightly to say that "the President's authority is hereby reaffirmed to use the Armed Forces of the United States" rather than the original text which says "the President is authorized to use the Armed Forces."

I personally do not see much difference, but if it will help other Senators, I am certainly willing to make the modification. As a matter of fact, I have it here to offer if, as, and when I am allowed to do so.

I had also included in the amendment that the purpose of using force was to protect the people of Panama in their struggle. And it is a struggle, psychologically, physically, and every other way, to rid themselves and rid their nation of the brutal oppression of the Noriega regime and to restore the constitutional government of Panama.

As Senator SYMMS and Senator D'AMATO have so eloquently said, I share the view that the United States Senate should stand with the courageous people in Panama who have attempted to get rid of Mr. Noriega.

The Senator from Delaware, my good friend, Mr. BIDEN, appeared on Tuesday night to be particularly troubled by these aspects of the amendment. Thus I expressed to him that evening a willingness to delete these two provisions, leaving the text,

To bring General Noriega to trial in the United States under the terms of his February 1988 indictments for drug trafficking charges and to protect the Panama Canal pursuant to the Panama Canal treaties of 1978.

I am willing to make those changes if they will meet and resolve the concerns of any Senator. However, I am well satisfied with the amendment in its original form. If it is the preference of the managers to vote on it in its original form, so be it. That is the way I want it to be. But I am trying to accommodate Senators in their concerns and, therefore, I have modified the amendment and it is ready to be sent to the desk.

I realize the administration has been working all night long, trying to get some amendment up which I understand Senator WARNER is going to offer, which would dilute what I have attempted to do. Senator WARNER was good enough to advise me that he was going to do that and I appreciate that. I respect and admire the Senator, even though I do not agree with him in this instance.

I do not think we ought to water down what ought to be done and what I am trying to do. But, if they want to play games on this, I can always come back on the same drug bill and offer the modified amendment and have Senators vote on that. I made clear at the outset, this morning, when I took the floor that my interest was in saving a little time for the Senate. I do not know much about the rules, but I know a little bit, and I believe that sooner or later I can get a vote on a modified version notwithstanding anything that has gone on before.

Furthermore, I have had only one call from the upper echelons of the administration about this entire matter. They have been dealing with others. It is the old game of circumvent and dilute.

We will see. Senators can take their stands. They can vote yea or nay, pro or con. I am used to that. But I still say we need it on the record that the Congress of the United States has reaffirmed the President's authority to do whatever is necessary, using our military forces, to bring Mr. Noriega to account in Miami, FL, on the drug charges, the money laundering charges on which he has already been indicted. And also to protect the Panama Canal, which is part of the treaty. Both things, admittedly, are in the law now.

But there were a lot of folks in the administration, purporting to speak for the administration. And by the time they bumped into each other in the corridors, it was too late. The next time, if there is a next time, I want some action, and I do not want to have any excuse. I do not know whether there will be another time. I imagine there are a lot of people in Panama who are sick to their stomachs of the help they did not get on Tuesday. Not to mention some of the excuses that have been voiced since.

So, this is not a personal thing with me except that I am absolutely convinced that we ought to stop dillydallying and live up to all of what we have been saying, in all of our exhortations of rhetoric.

I doubt there is a single Senator who has not said in stump speeches back home: We have to get Noriega out of there. The distinguished President of the United States, who is my friend, whom I supported as vigorously as I guess anybody, has said it over and over again about Mr. Noriega.

But the time for talk is over, and the time for action is now. Or the next chance we get, if we get a chance. My word to the people of Panama is: Do not give up. Maybe the next scenario will be done right. That is the way I feel about it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina presents an occasion to discuss generally the use of extraterritorial jurisdiction to bring people into custody in the United States when they are under indictment. That is a policy which this Senator favors and has advocated for the past 6 years.

The specific issue which is framed by the amendment by the Senator from North Carolina is, really, how much force should be used and under what circumstances should the execution of a warrant of arrest take place. There is no question that General Noriega is under indictment and that the law of the United States of America calls for the execution of a warrant of arrest.

Just a comment by my distinguished colleague, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

There is no question, Mr. President, about the authority to execute a warrant of arrest. And that is a responsibility which is vested with the executive branch of the Government. Characteristically, it is lodged with a U.S. marshal as opposed to the President of the United States as Commander in Chief. But I believe it to be true that the executive branch has that authority.

The circumstances in Panama in the last 2 days, remain somewhat unclear, although there have been briefings on the subject. It was essentially a Presidential call as to whether it was appropriate to use the requisite force to take General Noriega into custody. But I believe it to be plain, under U.S. law, that the authority does reside in the President of the United States.

We have pursued the path of extraterritorial jurisdiction since 1984, when we enacted the Omnibus Crime Control Act and for the first time made it a violation of U.S. law to hijack or kidnap U.S. citizens abroad. We expanded that extraterritorial jurisdiction with 1986 legislation which this Senator offered which makes it a violation of U.S. law to assault, maim, or murder a U.S. citizen anywhere in the world. I believe it is very important that there be a very vigorous pursuit of this kind of extraterritorial jurisdiction.

(Mr. SIMON assumed the chair.)

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, this kind of extraterritorial jurisdiction, Mr. President, has been adopted by the Congress with respect to terrorism. Extraterritorial jurisdiction applies generally if someone somewhere else sets into action a chain of events and by his or her conduct a crime is committed in the United States as, for example, the drug violations for which General Noriega was indicted. The issue of when you take people into custody is one that has to be very carefully calculated.

We have made efforts in the United States to organize a surgical strike force to be able to take terrorists into custody, to be able to take into custody anyone who has violated United States laws who may be outside the territorial limits of the United States. But that power of arrest has to be executed with care, and it is important to use reasonable force. It is a Presidential decision, in terms of whether United States citizens in Panama dependent on our military there would be in danger, and that is a Presidential call.

There is an event which has just occurred, Mr. President, that I think is worthy of comment directly related to the subject, and that is the sentence which was imposed yesterday in the U.S. district court here in Washington, DC, on a terrorist by the name of Fawaz Yunis. This defendant was the first person apprehended under the 1984 U.S. law extending extraterritorial jurisdiction. I suggest, Mr. President, that the sentence was lenient. Fawaz Yunis could have been sentenced to life imprisonment under the statute. Instead, he received a sentence of 30 years, according to press reports, which make him eligible to be released in 8 years. Yunis was a very major terrorist, a very major highjacker who, along with other people, seized a Jordanian airliner in 1985; took control of the Jordanian airliner; made a 30-hour voyage over several days in order to deliver a demand on behalf of their Shiite compatriots in Lebanon.

It is true there were certain extenuating circumstances that were present. Two passengers were allowed to leave because they required medical treatment, and it is true that no one was murdered in the course of that hijacking, but there were 70 people, including two U.S. citizens, held captive for some 30 hours, terrorized, subjected to that kind of an excruciating experience.

Under the laws of the United States, kidnaping has been punished by the death penalty. It is the view of this Senator—and I have offered legislation to this effect—that the death penalty ought to be a sentencing option for the offenses of terrorism, kidnaping, and hijacking. Certainly, where death results, the death penalty might be appropriate.

The arrest of Fawaz Yunis was a very calculated approach by U.S. authorities, principally the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Fawaz Yunis was lured onto a boat in the Mediterranean, taken into custody under very difficult circumstances, brought back to the United States, charged with the offense of hijacking and could have been subjected to a life sentence. This is the first time that these laws have been used, and they are very, very difficult to apply.

Most people do not know that at the present time there are more than a dozen terrorists under U.S. indictment. Efforts are being made to try to locate those terrorists to bring them into custody, and that is a very difficult matter because we do not wish to use the kind of force which would endanger other people who may be near those terrorists. We can locate these terrorists and bring them into our custody only with the most carefully conceived plans. That is why it is frustrating to have a man like Fawaz Yunis brought back to the United States and tried, but not punished to the fullest extent of the law.

Yunis was given all of the rights of any person who is in our courts, whether they are a citizen or not; and I think anybody brought into the U.S. courts for trial ought to have those rights. There were elaborate pretrial pleadings and efforts made to suppress his confession. Some of these efforts were successful. But you have a terrorist like Fawaz Yunis who shows no sympathy, compassion, no regard for anyone, taking 70 people into custody and subjecting them to a terrifying hijacking experience.

Of course, we are going to give him the benefits of our laws as we should. But consider this Yunis case in which U.S. officials first had to identify this man, which was hard to do, to locate him, which was very hard to do, to take him into custody, which was even harder to do, to bring him back to this country, to give him all the due process rights of the most civilized, sophisticated jurisprudence system devised by man and then have him convicted—after all of that, the sentence is not nearly what it ought to have been.

The Fawaz Yunis case has recently been cited in Colombia to let the drug lords know extraterritorial jurisdiction is possible; we can take people into this country and bring them to trial.

We recently had the celebrated case of Sheik Obeid who was taken into custody by the Israelis because he violated Israeli law and an arrest was made in Lebanon under existing principles of international law. One of the items reputedly that Sheik Obeid was most worried about was the possibility that he could be extradited to the United States for trial. You cannot buy your way out of a U.S. prosecution. You cannot buy your way out of custody and jail. You cannot buy your way out of the courtroom. Sentencing is a matter of discretion for the trial judge. I suggest, Mr. President, that 30 years was an inappropriate sentence for Fawaz Yunis under the facts of this case.

Mr. President, when we first talked about the extraterritorial jurisdiction concept, many people were surprised to find out that the law of the United States authorized taking into custody someone wherever he or she might be found without regard to the factual circumstances as to how they were taken into custody.

My own son, Shanin Specter, was studying international law in Cambridge in 1983 and called my attention to a case called Ker versus Illinois, a decision by the Supreme Court in 1886. While we lawyers frequently read some of the old case books, I have never gone back to 1886 for casual reading and had never known about this case. Frankly, I was very surprised, even shocked to find on the facts of that case that the kidnaping of this fellow, Ker, the defendant, was upheld by the Supreme Court. The facts of that case are worth a moment's recitation.

Ker was under a charge of fraud from Illinois, a civilized State, as the presiding official here, Senator SIMON of Illinois, will attest to, and there was a fraud indictment out of Illinois. This fellow Ker fled to Peru, and extradition papers were obtained. But then the arresting personnel, not even law enforcement officers, although it is not plain in the decision, went to Peru and they kidnaped Ker. That is the way the Supreme Court of the United States describes it. They kidnaped Ker and brought him back to Illinois. He was tried there and was convicted. He took the case to the Supreme Court of the United States.

In 1886, the Supreme Court of the United States said that when a person is brought back into the jurisdiction of a court, it does not matter how he was brought back, even if he was kidnaped. That principle has been upheld repeatedly, Mr. President.

In the 1952 Frisbie case, in an opinion written by Justice Hugo Black, a noted civil libertarian, the Supreme Court upheld jurisdiction over a defendant resulting from what Justice Black called forcible abduction. That is a more polite way of describing a kidnaping. When Fawaz Yunis was taken into custody, he was similarly forcibly abducted. But, under international principles of law, it is appropriate to take a person into custody in that manner, as the Israelis took Sheik Obeid into custody, as we could take General Noriega into custody, forcibly, if we are able to do so in a context where it constitutes the reasonable use of force.

Mr. President, I believe it is important to exercise extraterritorial jurisdiction to vindicate the laws of the United States against a man like Noriega who is under indictment for violation of serious drug laws. He has been indicted by a U.S. district court and he ought to be tried in the United States, but it has to be carefully and meticulously done so as to be a reasonable use of force, not to be excessive and not to endanger American citizens, or others, in the execution of that kind of a warrant of arrest. But there is no question on international law that the President has the authority to execute that warrant of arrest.

But it is hardly worthwhile to undertake these kinds of high-risk ventures as illustrated in Fawaz Yunis if at the end of the trail somebody is going to be eligible for release after only 8 years in jail.

We are working, Mr. President, on a variety of remedies to try to locate the more than one dozen terrorists now under indictment. This body agreed to an amendment calling on the CIA and Department of Defense to tell us what resources are necessary for human intelligence to locate our hostages, to see if it is possible to rescue them with reasonable safety, and to identify terrorists to bring them into custody. This is an important part of U.S. law enforcement which ought to be done, Mr. President. So that I think the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina is worthy of our attention, and the pursuit of Noriega ought to be undertaken but it has to be the President's call as to what is an appropriate use of force under very complex circumstances.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I will only take a moment.

Let me compliment my friend from Pennsylvania. The notion that some of the most objectionable persons on the face of this Earth are going to find themselves or have found themselves in the position in the case that has been cited that they will be eligible for parole in less than a 10-year period is I think outrageous. I want to compliment him for coming to the floor and making the case.

I concur in the second point—and I will at a later time speak at greater length—that the intent of the Senator from North Carolina is well-founded, but the method by which he is proposing to deal with a real and serious, genuine problem in the person of Mr. Noriega is one that has implications that go far beyond the arrest and trial and conviction of Mr. Noriega.

But I wanted to rise to compliment my friend from Pennsylvania, who has been as diligent as anyone has and has been as persistent as anyone has in the Senate in the years he has been here trying to call the attention of this body and the Nation to the fact we are not nearly as resolute as we should be.

Mr. SPECTER. If the Senator from Delaware will yield for a comment, I thank my friend for those remarks. I think that the internationalization of law enforcement is very important in many respects. This line of extraterritorial jurisdiction is vital. The trial of drug dealers and terrorists really will need an international court in order to get extradition. We passed legislation on a multinational drug strike force authorizing funds from the Department of Defense for that purpose.

But when the story on Fawaz Yunis appears on page 39 of the Washington Post—it was not in the New York Times or the Philadelphia Inquirer today—that is a matter of utmost concern. We spend our time passing these laws to bring these people to justice and we appropriate money for the FBI. They are able finally to find one man and he must be made an example. I know that the drug dealers in Colombia are aware of the Fawaz Yunis case. I discussed this matter with Ambassador McNamara who said that in Colombia the Yunis case is a big case. I had not heard that the Yunis case was specifically invoked when Sheik Obeid was being taken into custody in Israel, but I have reason to believe on reliable information that Sheik Obeid is worried about being extradited to the United States.

I think we should bring Noriega into court if we find the right circumstances and I hope we do, if we can do so with a reasonable amount of force. But if he comes into this country and he is tried in Federal court, he should receive a significant sentence.

A comment on a sentence by a Federal judge is not something that this Senator takes lightly. I have a very high regard for the judicial system, a reverence for the law, but nobody, including Federal judges, is immune from a comment or a criticism. Maybe the judge is right. I do not think he was. But I think this case ought to be a subject of interest in this body. We have to make our point to influence future handling of such cases.

Mr. BIDEN. I concur with the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I apologize for the Senate not moving a little quicker today on this drug bill.

Just to review the bidding here, I ask the unanimous-consent request, we are on the drug bill, the drug amendments. But the pending business is the Helms second-degree amendment to a Biden amendment that is designed to eliminate crack houses.

We are at the moment attempting to see if we can reach a resolution whereby we can at a minimum agree on an order with a means by which we would deal with disposing of the Helms amendment, and possibly whether or not there could be a compromise reached which we could all support.

As we speak, as they say, various staff persons are holed up in one of the rooms off the floor of the Senate trying to draft such language.

The Senator from North Carolina had to be necessarily absent from the floor for a few moments. So I will indicate now that when he gets back while this effort is underway I may ask him if he would be willing to allow us—I am not asking this now—to temporarily set aside the Helms amendment on Panama to consider some of the dozen or so amendments we still have remaining on the drug bill.

In the interest of time, I will indicate to the Chair, to my colleagues, and to their staffs who may be listening that I will at some point, at the first reasonable opportunity, be proposing a Biden amendment on State and local drug enforcement.

The intent of the amendment, which I will discuss in more detail, will be to provide more help for rural America in their fight against drugs. As the Senator from Illinois, the Presiding Officer, well knows, in the rural parts of the State that he lives in, drugs have not in fact decided that they will only reside in inner-city areas. It is a major problem throughout our country.

It is the view of the Senator from Delaware that we are doing much too little to assist State and local law enforcement, and State and local governments in their efforts to deal with the drug problem in rural America.

In addition to that, the amendment also has a second part which would provide for help through a drug block grant to local communities, and in this part there is much credit which should be given for the amendment that will be sent up to Senator KOHL of Wisconsin, which adds $15 million for citizen action groups to fight drugs in drug-blighted neighborhoods.

Then there is a third part of this amendment which we have passed in other forms in the past in our committee, and that is dealing with the particular focus on antigang efforts. It is not only the so-called Bloods and Crips—and I hate even mentioning their names because it gives them the kind of notoriety that I think they most seek, and they are thugs. But the Bloods and Crips are the most high-profile examples. There are other examples in over 250 cities in this country which are also dealing with a gang problem.

It provides help for juvenile antigang initiatives to the Department of Justice. It also contains provisions for funding of 1,000 new drug prevention projects, including youth programs and projects in public housing, particularly Boys Clubs and Girls Clubs.

One of the reasons we are now having so much difficulty in public housing is the obvious one relating to poverty, but there are also reasons relating to no access or availability of reasonable outlets for young men and women in those communities.

So that will be the first amendment I will be sending to the desk, I say to those who may be listening in their offices.

I just wanted to put them on notice in the hope that Senator HELMS will be willing, as he was so gracious to do yesterday, as we agreed to 31 different amendments of significantly strengthening the antidrug package proposed by the President, to temporarily set aside almost in every instance his Panama amendment while we attempted to work it out.

Mr. President, while we are awaiting the return of the Senator from North Carolina, who is necessarily absent, I would like to take this occasion to discuss a little bit about the drug bill.

Mr. President, as I have said time and again, and apparently as a number of my Republican and Democratic colleagues agree, my debate thus far with the President of the United States and the administration on his drug strategy has been about the very heart of the strategy.

I disagreed with the strategy. The strategy that has been put forward is one that has set within the strategy certain goals that the President says will be measures of our success or failure.

He is required by the law that you and I and others in this body wrote, the so-called drug director law, to set out a strategy once a year which he has done faithfully in the first strategy, and also to set out a series of goals that he hopes to be able to achieve within certain timeframes.

The reason I wrote that into the law when the law was written some years ago was not to put this President or the last President, President Reagan, or the former President, President Carter, or the next President, whomever it may be, in a ticklish position, a particularly difficult position. The reason that I wrote it into the law was that the only way we can measure it, whether or not we are succeeding or failing in our war against drugs, is to have some sense of what progress we are making. And, further, it is necessary to lay out goals so that you can measure the allocation of effort and resources that has been made available against the success or failure of reaching a goal.

It may be, for example, that it is wiser to expand money after a year of attempting to do it in one area and seeing that it does not reap much of a benefit—to reallocate that money—and put it into another area in the drug bill.

So, Mr. President, I will be, at some point, considering proposing this as an amendment as well, although I have not made that decision.

I would like to go down for a moment and discuss some of the goals that have been set forward by the President and illustrate why I have such a fundamental disagreement with the goals and the strategy. For example, the President sets in his strategy a goal regarding current monthly overall use. That is basically the so-called casual drug use. If the President will observe on the chart which has been put up, since 1985, in terms of total number of people who use the drug at least monthly, we have seen that it has dropped from about 25 million people to slightly less than 15 million people, for a 37-percent drop, almost 10 percent per year between 1985 and 1988.

President Bush's plan says that they will have succeeded in their strategy—if you look at the chart in the back of the Chamber—if, by 1991, there has been an additional 10 percent reduction among casual users. Now, as you can see, Mr. President, the line representing the reduction of consumption by casual users was going down at a fairly steep rate, actually a little more than 10 percent per year.

Now, the President's goal and ambition is to—you see the red dot line; it almost levels off. He says we will have succeeded if we reduce it by 10,000 in the next 2 years. Well, that is less than we have been doing every year for the past 3 years, without a drug strategy. The Senator from Delaware suggests that our goal should be an additional reduction of 37 percent in the number of people reporting any illegal use of drugs within the past month. We think that is not particularly ambitious and is a more appropriate goal. That represents the black line, the so-called proposed goal. It is essentially a continuation of the rate of reduction that has taken place over the last 3 years.

In fairness to the administration, Mr. Bennett argues that, well, the reason it dropped so drastically in the last 3 years is that we got all the easy folks off, and the only ones left are harder users. By definition, they are not harder users, because they are people who only use drugs once a month. They are not addicts. I think we should be less timid and more ambitious in our fight in this war on drugs.

A second goal that you will see up here is the weekly cocaine users, which most people refer to as the addicts, people who use it on a weekly basis. Now, we have had a disturbing trend, acknowledged buy the administration and others. That is, in 1985, you can see there were roughly 647,000—to be more precise—cocaine addicts in America. In 1988, at the very time when casual users were dropping in number, the number of cocaine addicts was increasing in number. By 1988, the number of hardcore cocaine users or addicts was 862,000 people, up from 647,000.

Now, the administration came along and said, "Look, by 1991, within the next 2 years, what we the administration would view as winning, as success, is if we reduced the rate of increase by 50 percent." Said another way, success would be success if that red line continues, and it goes from 862,000 hardcore cocaine users to 970,000 hardcore cocaine users, an increase of over 110,000 cocaine users. So, the President says, "My strategy will have succeeded if within the next 2 years, by 1991, we have an additional 110,000"—to be more precise, 112,000, I think it is—"more cocaine addicts."

Now, I understand that the President may think that is all that can be done with the limited resources he is willing to apply to the job, but I think that is the wrong strategy and the wrong goal for the United States to set. I do not think we will have won the war, or been on our way to winning the war, if within 2 years we say, aha, now we have almost 1 million cocaine addicts, and before we only had about 850,000 cocaine addicts. I do not consider that success.

I think we should have as a strategy and as a goal reducing by 10,000—and it is not all that ambitious—but reducing in absolute terms by 10,000 the number of cocaine addicts that are out there within the next 2 years. That is where we see the black line, the Biden-proposed goal, that black dotted line. This is so that we get the trend going down and not continuing up, although admittedly continuing up at a less steep rate, but still at a steep rate.

Mr. President, this debate that we have had with the administration—apparently most of my Republican colleagues agree with me, because they have been voting with me the last 2 days to add resources and effort—is not about money, is not about taxes. It is not proposing any new taxes. It is about what the goals and ambitions of this Nation are relative to drugs. I wonder if the American people would say we have succeeded, if success was defined in terms of adding 110,000 cocaine addicts in 2 years.

Mr. President, there are other goals that we are in disagreement with, that the Senator from Delaware and many of his Democratic, and I suspect Republican colleagues as well, have strong disagreement with. That is the notion set out in the strategy by the President that those monthly users who are adolescents are in a position where, if you look at that chart, we find ourselves talking about a reduction that has taken place over the last 3 years. That reduction that has taken place over the last 3 years has been—let me get my proper chart here—adolescent monthly users. That reduction, you can see, that has taken place has dropped from roughly 3,260,000 adolescents—think of that! That is people between the ages of 12 and 17. It dropped from 3,260,000 adolescents, who have, on a monthly basis, used an illegal drug, down to 1,866,000. This is before the drug war was declared, before the President's strategy. That is a decrease over the past 3 years of almost 42 percent. That is without this new strategy.

Now, Mr. President, the President says that we will have succeeded if within the next 2 years that reduction does not continue at over 10 percent a year, over 13 percent a year. That is not success. He says success will be if in the next 2 years that reduction almost levels off and you only reduce it 5 percent per year or 10 percent in the next 2 years, again a fundamental disagreement. We think that is an inappropriate goal and we think that with the proper strategy we are capable of reducing that number.

For those who are current monthly users, who are adolescent, we believe we can continue that reduction significantly. If you look at the black line, we think we can reduce the number of monthly adolescent users by double what is there, by another 40 percent, or thereabouts.

We see no reason why we cannot do that, given the right education programs, given the right treatment programs and given the right law enforcement effort. That is not an overly ambitious goal.

We also have, if you look at the other chart, Mr. President, the President's goal for treatment on demand. He says that if you look at the percentage of people on the left who require receiving treatment on demand—that is people out there, by the way, who are now addicted and are raising their hands and saying; "Look, I am committing crimes. I am ruining my life, but I am addicted. I cannot get off this drug. I need help. I want to get into a drug treatment program."

Right now, according to State and local agencies around the country, there are over some 50,000 of those people who are literally standing around, some may be in the gallery, literally, literally seeking help, and they go to the agency and say: "I need help. I do not have the money. I do not have the insurance plan. I want help to get off the drugs." And those people cannot be treated now.

There is on average, about an 8-month wait in major cities in America. In small cities, you are down to around 2 months' time. It takes time. The President's plan says they want to help those able to get it on demand now which is less than, looking at the chart, about 12 percent. They say they will have succeeded if by the year 1993, not 1991; in the next 4 years, they have increased that to roughly 25 percent.

So one in four people who need help and are asking for it can get help.

There is a simple reason for wanting to help these people. It is not out of the goodness of my heart. It is not because I am a humanitarian. It is not because I am such a decent fellow and want to help my fellow man. It is real simple. I do not want my wife beat up, bludgeoned in the supermarket parking lot on her way home; I do not want my mother burglarized tonight in her home and have her television taken and her jewelry, by people who are addicted and who have no choice as a practical matter unless they own a bank, but to get money to go out and pay for their cocaine, or their heroin or their crank or their crack or their ice or their parachute, or any of the other names that the various drugs are known by.

We have one of two choices. You arrest them and put them in jail, which we went a long way in doing yesterday when the Biden amendment was agreed to, increasing the number of FBI agents by 1,000, the number of DEA agents by over 300, et cetera, and received unanimous support in the Senate. That is one way of doing it.

There is a second way. You get them into a treatment program even before you can catch them or arrest them and you get them off the drug so they do not have to do that.

Or you continue to try to chase them down and in the meantime those 5,000 people or many more who are seeking help to get off, you only treat one in four of them, meaning that three out of four out there are going to burglarize our homes tonight or use violence to deprive us of our property so they can provide for their drug habit. It is not humanitarian; it is pure naked self-interest on the part of American society.

Even if they are not cured, crime among addicts in treatment regimes at the time drops by 80 percent. And the average cocaine addict, the average heroin addict, as the Senator from New York can tell you, who is on the floor, better than anyone, they commit tens of thousands and thousands and thousands of crimes. Six percent of all the violent criminals in America commit about 80 percent of all the violent crime in America.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, will the distinguished gentleman yield just for an observation?

Mr. BIDEN. I yield.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, as relates to those statistics, the fact is there has been a study, as I know that my colleague is aware of, done in Baltimore some years ago; and I recall the first time it indicated that the study as conducted related to 242, I believe, heroin addicts who were tracked over a period of 11 years. That was both when they were incarcerated and free. A good deal of this time they spent in prison, you have to understand, which will make these statistics even more staggering. It was estimated that the 242 criminals had committed in excess of 500,000 crimes. That might seem staggering, but I think it bears out that which Senator BIDEN, my colleague, is talking about, the need to see to it that the recidivists are taken off the street, kept off the street, because it does not make any sense to make an arrest and put them back out there, which is literally what we are doing in my State and the city of New York.

If you do a little multiplication, that would come out to about 109-plus crimes each year each committed; multiply 242 times 11, and that is what you get. While it might sound absurd, the fact is they are walking crime machines.

I commend the Senator for his observation as it relates to this.

Mr. BIDEN. I thank my colleague, but when you think about it, it is staggering, 192 crimes per year per heroin addict. Think about that. Unless a herion addict is already a wealthy woman or man, owns a bank or has an incredibly wealthy mother or father who is going to support his habit, think about it. What happens it is a little like what happened to the caveman. They did not have refrigeration; they had to go out and club their fowl every single day in order to be able to eat the next day. That is what happens here. One hundred ninety-two times means that 2 out of every 3 days they have to be out there, almost 2 out of the 3 days they have to be out there committing crime to get the money by stealing my television and selling it on the market. A hot television brings enough money just for a day's worth of heroin.

This is not something crazy. This is real, this is real life. Crack addicts are required physically and mentally as a practical matter to hit up 12 to 20 times a day. Just assume they are buying a little $5 piece. Twenty times 5 gets up there. On a weekly basis it is fairly expensive; on a monthly basis it is staggering; on a yearly basis it is incredible. And none of these people have jobs.

I know it sounds almost ludicrous to say it, but unless we get them into treatment and/or prison and treatment while they are in prison so they break the habit, we are the victims. And the President's proposal is that we are going to have to only be able to increase treatment on demand by about 12 or 13 percent. We believe by 1993, in the next 4-year period, we should be able to have total treatment on demand for our own safety's sake.

Again disagreement with the President's strategy as evidenced by his goals.

Education programs in America. Now everybody says, with regard to education, that the public agrees, the experts agree, everyone agrees that in order to keep young people off of drugs the single most significant thing we can do beyond, in addition to and including reinforcing their values in their family life, et cetera, is to educate them as to the dangers of drugs.

Senator KENNEDY has pointed out in a study that came out of his committee that his committee talked about, that there is in fact success in education. They took a control group of students. They said we are going to take one group of students and we are going to expose them on a fairly regular basis to prevention and education programs. They said, OK. What we are going to do is we are going to take those kids between 6th and 10th grades and we are going to measure the group that we have educated against the group we have not educated. We found out that those students who receive no education on the dangers of these drugs, among those who did not between the grades 6 and 10, 7 percent became heavy marijuana users; And those that received education, only 3 percent became heavy marijuana users.

Then, with regard to cocaine, those who received no education on the dangers of cocaine, 3.7 percent of all the students in America between grades 6 and 10 became cocaine users. Of those that received education, only 1.4 percent became heavy cocaine users.

It did not help eliminate all the use of marijuana or cocaine, but it is a decrease by almost a third—almost a third fewer students ended up using cocaine and more than 60 percent fewer students ended up using marijuana heavily. It works.

My argument with the strategy here is that if the strategy of the President is allowed to be put in place and not altered—right now we reach one in four students in America with any drug education program. By 1990, we will have reached about 27 percent of the students. By the year 1992, the President says we will have succeeded—success will be accomplished in the area of education—by enabling us to reach about 28 to 30 percent of those students; 3 in 10. We believe there is no reason on Earth why, within the next 2½ years, we cannot put in place programs that 100 percent of the students in American schools will have been exposed to a drug education program. Fundamental disagreement with the President of the United States.

I do not mean to suggest the President does not want to have everybody educated. I am sure he does. I am sure he does not want anybody to use cocaine or marijuana or PCP or heroin or anything else. But I suggest, Mr. President, this is not merely a battle about funding. This is a battle about what our objective is. We believe—and I know the Presiding Officer who is a leader in the education field in this body and was when he was in the House and is recognized as such nationally—we believe education works. The President acknowledges that it works. If it does, we believe it should be a priority so we do not have another portion of a generation lost because we have waited incrementally to raise the education level on this issue.

Mr. President, the last chart.

I saw my friend from North Carolina was back and my friend from New York is here. He is waiting to speak. I will have plenty of time to speak to this.

Let me just speak to the last question here. The last question relates to the number of crimes that are drug related violent crimes. I emphasize, not property crimes, but violent crimes.

In the year 1986, the number of drug related violent crimes was about 1.3 million. The President, when he set out the drug strategy, set no goal for what we would measure as success. If the trend continues, by 1991, the number of violent crimes, drug related violent crimes, will have increased to about 1.8 million in America.

We believe we should set a goal of a net reduction by the year 1991 of moving back to the 1986 level so that it could continue to go down, a net reduction of about 250,000 violent crimes in America.

Now these are not just numbers the Senator from Delaware has pulled out of his hat. These are numbers and goals that we believe, after speaking to the experts around the country, that we can accomplish by wisely allocating resources and wisely increasing efforts in particular areas.

There are specific plans associated with how we get to those goals. The Senator from Delaware has already on the floor and will again propose teacher training programs and the placement of drug experts in school districts for training that will allow us to reach 100 percent of the students by the year 1992. The same can and will be said for all the rest of these areas.

Mr. President, there are others on the floor who wish to speak. My friend from New York has been waiting to be recognized. I know he has been here a long time.

Let me say two things in conclusion: One, we can have the capability, we know how to reduce in real terms the danger that the drug epidemic is posing to America. We know how to do it. But first we must do one important thing. We must mean what we say. Our goals and our actions must match our rhetoric. If, in fact, drugs are the single most important problem facing America and threatening our youth and elderly alike, then there is a no reason we cannot find the $57 million out of our $1.3 billion this year to hire a thousand FBI agents.

We adopted that yesterday. Now we have to appropriate the money.

There is no reason why we cannot do that if it is that much of a priority. We came out here last week on the floor of the U.S. Senate and, without any debate to speak of, we passed—bang—almost $1.2 billion in disaster relief to help our friends and fellow citizens in Puerto Rico and South Carolina, the victims of Hurricane Hugo.

We should do that. We had no problem. We moved—bang—$1.2 billion.

Yet the Senator from Tennessee, the Senator from Delaware, and the Senator from New York sat up night after night after night after night for 3 weeks in a room one floor down in a wrenching debate with the administration about providing another $900 million to fight the war on drugs.

What is the story here, Mr. President? Do we mean it or do we not mean it?

I respectfully suggest to the Presiding Officer that unless someone can tell me that I am wrong about our capability of educating children, wrong about our capability of targeting and destroying drug organization networks, wrong about our capability of reducing the consumption of drugs among casual users, wrong about our capability of reducing the number of hard-core drug addicts in America—unless they can tell me that, then they must do one of two things: They must say drugs are not our most important priority and that is why we are unwilling to make the resources available; or they must say they are and here are the resources, even at the expense of other worthwhile things.

That is what this debate is about, Mr. President. The press on occasion—and the administration—keeps saying well, the debate with Senator BIDEN and others is really not about strategy, it is really not about goals, it is only about money.

With all due respect, Mr. President, that is hokum. The debate is about strategy, it is about goals, it is about priorities.

I am now prepared to yield to a man with whom I have worked very closely on this drug issue since he has been in the U.S. Senate. I know several who have worked as hard but I do not know anybody who has worked any harder. And I do not know anybody who represents a constituency for whom this problem is more urgent than my friend from New York.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIXON). The Senator from New York.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I thank my colleague, the distinguished Senator from Delaware, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and say I look forward to working with him to attain the goals he has set forth, particularly in the area of education and the reduction of drug use. I think we should set a lofty target and fight to attain that target. In order to begin to win this war, we must put the resources behind it and the commitment behind it and undertake the kinds of programs that are going to make a difference.

Making a difference is not just simply saying yes, we are going to help the Government of Colombia. Because if we help them and they are victorious, what about Peru and Bolivia and Brazil where the cartel will move to and seek sanctuary? Are we going to just talk about it or tackle the tough ones?

What about drug testing? Oh, do not mention it. But I will tell my colleagues, if we want to get youngsters to stop taking drugs, let them know there are privileges they may lose if they use drugs.

Drivers' licenses; why should there not be drug testing for first time applicants for a driver's license?

We say, yes, there should be drug testing for people who are in positions of responsibility where the safety of the general public is at stake. In fact, there is a big furor right now. How is it that two airline pilots who piloted USAir flight 5050 2 weeks ago, that had an aborted takeoff and landed in the East River, with two people dead—we could not find the crew for 2 days?

I do not know whether they were or were not under the influence of anything, and I do not make that accusation. But we better have a law that requires that people who are the engineers or crew of common carriers to be available for testing, instead of taking off someplace.

We will hear the civil libertarians on the other side saying, oh, no, you are violating their constitutional rights. What about the constitutional rights of the millions of people who travel on common carriers, who are being victimized by crime as a result of the drug situation, or the tens of millions who are afraid to leave their homes to go to the parks or to use our mass transit systems? What about the tens of millions in the future? Are we going to continue to have fancy rhetoric and yet not back it up?

I believe the Senator from Delaware is correct when he says we need to set high goals and we should shoot for them and work for them. We know we do not always hit the mark the first time in our efforts to galvanize this country to win this war.

Mr. President, talking about words, I believe the pending business before us is the Helms amendment. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I do not think the Helms amendment goes far enough. I have heard people saying this would be a declaration of war. Well, maybe it is about time we said, we are going to have a war against an international drug cartel. Here we have a thief, a murderer. Here we have somebody who rules by way of the gun. Here we have someone whose people have total disdain for him, the Panamanian people. Here we have an avowed enemy of the United States, a drug trafficker and a dictator.

We have spoken out about him. We violated every cardinal rule of diplomatic language. We induced the President of Panama to leave office under absolutely implied promises and specific promises of United States aid. That is right. We forget that President Duvalier risked everything—family, fortune, life—because the United States said to him, if you call for the removal of Noriega, we will support you.

Well, we imposed economic sanctions. They are certainly crushing the people of Panama. Oh, yes, some countries closed their embassies. Noriega is held in great disdain and we say repeatedly that we want him out. But the PDF, the Panama Defense Forces, have to lead the action aganist him.

So this past Tuesday, that is exactly what happened. A group of PDF officers took us at our word, Mr. President. They took the United States at its word. They led a insurrection against him. They actually had Noriega.

There was no question as to our policy about Noriega. We wanted him out. The President says we want him out. The Congress says we want him out. As a matter of fact he is a wanted man here in the United States.

Now we are told, well, we had no reason to believe that these people were reliable, that we could trust them. The leader of this crew, Major Giraldi's character is in question. I said before and I say again: Do we expect choirboys to lead a revolution? Lead an insurrection?

What nonsense. Do we run a background check on people who are fighting for freedom and asking for help?

They say we may have made a mistake to trust him. It could have been a trap. How could it have been a trap if we were watching it happen? And I am told that U.S. installations there could see clearly into PDF headquarters where the battle was taking place.

Did they think the gunfire was a lark? Did they think the shooting and explosions they observed, that they were not concrete, they could not put belief in them? Did they think people came to seek sanctuary with us because they were not afraid for their lives?

Oh, they say the rebels did not want to give us Noriega. That is what I hear.

Well, my friends in Panama tell me the fact of the matter is the rebels could not transport Manuel Noriega through the streets with gunfire raging and a battle going on. So when they say, well, they were not willing to deliver him, that is true; that is true.

But it is not the whole truth. Because the full truth is that they could not. The rebels reportedly said send a helicopter in to take him out. I am told that they finally gave Noriega up. Why did they give him up? I am told because the families of those officers who were leading this coup, this insurrection, were captured, held hostage, and the rebels were told that their wives and daughters and children would be slaughtered unless Noriega was released.

So, an effort to get rid of a dictator, to create an opportunity for freedom and for democracy for the people of Panama has been lost. It has been in vain.

Mr. President, let me say this. There is a saying: No pain, no gain. We talk about it in athletic competitions. This is not an athletic competition but I, for one, am tired of seeing the United States get the blame, get the pain, and make no gain. I think it is about time that we had a policy that said that we are dedicated to the cause of freedom and democracy in Panama and will assist in a meaningful way those who put their lives at risk for this cause. There are some risks attendant to democracy—in obtaining it and preserving it.

Our forefathers took those risks. Those people that came to the aid of America when we needed it, they took that risk. And I cannot believe we flinched from the risk because—oh, my gosh, this may be a trap.

What about the nine officers whom we have reason to believe have been executed by Manuel Noriega? What do you say to them, and what do you say to their families? And what do you say to Mrs. Giraldi whose husband has been executed?

This is a sorry time for the United States of America.

Maybe it is about time we said, yes, very clearly we will use whatever force is necessary to bring about the removal of this killer, this tyrant, this minion of the drug cartel. Action, not just words gives true meaning to what America should be about. As Franklin Delano Roosevelt said, America is the arsenal of democracy. I do not think that arsenal is depleted.

I hope that some in the military and some who are concerned only about politics will begin to examine what has given strength, liberty, and greatness to this country. It is not weak-kneed explanations for a failure of coordination, of planning, and of the ability to move decisively when the opportunity provided itself.

Who now will step forward in the PDF after this botched opportunity this incredible stain on us, on the United States, because of our failure to act? Mr. President, if we are going to be blamed, I hope that we would respond in our own interest and for the interest of democracy. We do not need a resolution that says that the President has that authority. He does. What we need is some resolve. What we need is some leadership as it relates to the military and the intelligence community that begins to do what is best for world peace, for our security and for freedom in Panama.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. SASSER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECONCILIATION

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I wish to call to the attention of my colleagues an article that appeared in today's Wall Street Journal authored by two of the most credible journalists on Capitol Hill, Mr. Alan Murray and Mr. John Yank, an article that, in my judgment, lays to rest any doubts about where the administration's true priorities are with regard to deficit reduction.

Just let me quote from the story written by these distinguished journalists for the Wall Street Journal: "The administration couldn't have made it clearer: Cutting the capital gains tax was a higher priority than cutting the budget deficit."

Mr. President, that is a conclusion drawn by the Wall Street Journal. And what is the basis for that judgment? The fact is that the administration killed a proposal offered by the bipartisan leadership of the House of Representatives to move to a stripped-down reconciliation bill. The facts are, as I understand them, that the minority leader, Mr. MICHEL, communicated with the Speaker of the House of Representatives and indicated to him that the extraneous matters should be stripped off the reconciliation bill. The distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives agreed with the minority leader and said they should be, but also said that capital gains was an extraneous matter which also should be stripped off. As I understand it, there was agreement between the two leaders that all of these matters would be stripped and, in return, the Speaker of the House of Representatives would give the minority leader and the administration an up-or-down vote on the capital gains issue.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives knew that capital gains was, indeed, an extraneous issue to the budget resolution. He knew it was extraneous to the budget summit negotiations that took place during the spring of this year because the then majority leader, now Speaker, Mr. FOLEY, was an active participant in almost every moment of those negotiations. Those negotiations indicated that $5.3 billion in revenues would be raised. These were the revenues that had been allocated in the Reagan budget. These revenues would be agreed upon between the administration and the Congress, and they would be so-called nonduck revenues. There would be no finger pointing. We would act responsibly and together to deal with the problem of the deficit and the fiscal danger that this country faces.

But when Mr. MICHEL was given the opportunity to move forward with a stripped-down reconciliation bill with the caveat that he could have an up-or-down vote on capital gains, he seized the opportunity, and rightfully he did because the distinguished minority leader in the House of Representatives saw immediately that the only real opportunity we have to abide by the terms of the budget agreement that we negotiated last spring was to move as we had agreed to last spring. That was the only real opportunity to avoid sequester.

Mr. President, that clear and simple and sensible proposal was torpedoed by none other than the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Mr. Darman, and the Chief of Staff, Mr. Sununu, at the White House. Frankly, I was stunned and, I might say, saddened that the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Mr. Darman, who has made so many public displays of his deep concern for the long-term economic needs of this Nation, opted so instinctively for short-term political gain. And that about sums it up, Mr. President. That is why we are looking right down the gun barrel of a sequester today.

I indicated to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget today in the Governmental Affairs Committee that part of his responsibility and my responsibility and the responsibility of every Member of this body is to have an orderly management of our Government, and if there is a sequester, it signals a failure of leadership; a failure of leadership from the White House all the way down. It will mean that chaos will ensue and with this chaos will come a lack of confidence in this Government and in those who seek to lead it.

I say that this failure of leadership can be traced directly to the motives that led to the rejection of a proposal that was agreed upon by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the distinguished minority leader there.

The efforts that we have seen over the past few days by the minority in this body to slow down the U.S. Senate, to stall it, even as we move toward sequester, I think, are part of the same cynical logic.

I say to my friends in the administration and my friends on the other side of the aisle that the administration may get its Maypo and it may get its Maypo now, but the cost is likely to be more than just a sequester. The cost is likely to be a shattered hope for any kind of long-term resolution of our deficit problem, a resolution that the American people, I think, are entitled to.

Let me restate a point, Mr. President, that it seems to me self-evident but it is one that nonetheless needs to be restated, given the prospects we face in this body over the next few days, and I might add the next few nights.

We are approaching a protracted debate on a time-sensitive reconciliation bill, a debate created by the administration's obsession with a capital gains tax cut. The simple irreducible fact is this: A reduction in the capital gains tax rate is not deficit reduction. It has no business on a reconciliation bill.

I submit, Mr. President, that the administration understands that. The administration does have a right to present their capital gains proposals. It is a legitimate issue in the country. There are Members on both sides of the aisle who favor capital gains.

I say to you, quite frankly, that, properly structured, this is one Senator who could support the concept of capital gains that does, indeed, encourage people to hold their property for long-term capital gains.

But this proposal before us is not a deficit reduction matter. The debate about the benefits and cost of the capital gains reduction ought not, I say ought not, to be swallowing up the larger debate about this Nation's fiscal condition. And I do believe that our friends in the administration understand that as well. If they do not, they ought to.

We are allowing a collateral matter, a digression, to displace the main topic of discussion. We are, once again, allowing the luster of easy money to obscure the task ahead. We have allowed ourselves to get into a bidding war as to what should be the final resolution of this matter.

I well remember the last bidding war between a former administration and this Congress. It resulted in the 1981 tax bill which, by the Reagan administration's own OMB figures, has cost the U.S. Government $1.8 trillion in forgone revenues since 1981.

I say to my colleagues there is your budget deficit; that is why you have seen a doubling and tripling of the national debt over the short space of just 8 years.

We opted in 1981 for the perverse logic that tax cuts would stimulate investment, promote economic activity, and swell the Treasury, and now we are being offered to swallow the same rope-a-dope once again.

Once before we bought that piece of swampland that is about 10 feet underwater, and we know what happened then. We are still up to our necks in the water as a result of it.

For that reason, there is certainly a measure of irony, I say, in the fact that the reconciliation bill which is meant to correct the deficit crisis created by the 1981 supply-side tax cut is becoming the vehicle for supply-side No. 2. Here we are arguing about a tax cut, no deficit reduction, while at the same time we face a sequester on October 16, and we are probably going to repeal the catastrophic health bill that puts another $5-billion-hole in the budget.

I submit to my colleagues that those who willfully ignore the past are condemned to repeat it, and I suspect that is where we are now headed.

That, I fear, is the road we are about to embark upon. The truth is we simply cannot afford the capital gains tax cut. It will, like the 1981 tax cut, be a drain on the Treasury. The Joint Economic Committee and the Congressional Budget Office tell us it will lose $21 billion in the next few years. It will be a drain that adds to the steady flow of red ink that we have not, even with the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings or any other such artificial device, really found a way to slow.

The Joint Tax Committee, as I said earlier, estimates that the Jenkins capital gains proposal will begin losing large sums of money in fiscal year 1993. The losses it creates will nearly double the gains that it achieves by fiscal 1994. By the end of the 1990's the net revenue loss will be $21.5 billion.

Over the long run, the capital gains tax cut will negate every single penny we have saved this year from the deficit reduction measures included in the reconciliation bill. Let me restate that. If capital gains prevails, we will not have made a penny's worth of progress on the deficit. What we will have done instead is to cut Medicare benefits, cut payments to farmers, reduced spending on numerous discretionary programs, and for what? Not to reduce the deficit but, rather, to pay for a tax cut for the wealthiest segment of our society.

Mr. President, I do not think it is populist demagoguery to oppose that kind of tradeoff. It is not soak-the-rich rhetoric to say that this particular zero sum game is simply inequitable. It is bad fiscal policy. It is bad tax policy. It is bad policy for the American people, in my judgment. But be that as it may, this capital gains controversy has no business on this budget reconciliation bill.

Once again, I say to my colleagues that we need to separate the whole capital gains-IRA debate from budget reconciliation. We should move quickly to pass a clean reconciliation bill which succeeds in meeting the terms of the bipartisan budget agreement that was solemnly reached early this year.

We are going to have plenty of opportunity to debate the relative merits of capital gains. We are going to have plenty of opportunity to debate the relative merits of the individual retirement accounts. But we only have until October 16, I remind my colleagues, before we trigger the automatic, across-the-board cuts that in my view are absolutely unnecessary.

How are we going to look to the American people? How are we going to look to the elderly Medicare recipient who gets a Medicare check that has a 2-percent cut in it? Why? Because the administration, the Congress, cannot agree over this divisive issue of capital gains. Why? Because the administration and the Congress cannot even agree to carry out their agreement made in this spring's budget negotiations, an agreement that was solemnly written, and announced by the President of the United States at the White House in an elaborate and impressive Rose Garden ceremony. That is all out the window, all out the window because some say we want our Maypo now, and we want it today.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PRESIDENT'S 1989 NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I am recognized; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I am a little bit confused about the delay. I have been ready to vote for 1½ or 2 hours on the amendment. I made a proposition to the managers of the bill to allow them to modify it to meet the concerns of some Senators. I do not share those concerns, but I am willing to cooperate with the Senate.

I fail to see why we cannot move along and have a vote. In the meantime, Mr. President, let me ask unanimous consent that a summary of the charges against General Noriega be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. HELMS. Let me quote from two press releases, of February 5, 1988, from the Middle District and the Southern District of Florida, outlining General Noriega's complicity in drug operations. First of all, Noriega and one other man identified as a prominent Panamanian businessman and close associate of Noriega, were indicted on charges of conspiracy to import and distribute marijuana and the attempted importation of in excess of 1 million pounds of marijuana. The press release goes on in the next paragraph:

> The grand jury alleges that millions of dollars in U.S. currency representing the proceeds from the successful importation, in June of 1983, of 280,000 pounds of marijuana into the United States * * * the money was transported to Panama and laundered through Panamanian banks and businesses.

The indictment further alleges that Noriega and this man Pretelt, a prominent businessman and a close associate of Noriega, and a man named Ceasar Rodriguez-Contreras approved the operations. Reading further from the press release from the U.S. Department of Justice, Middle District of Florida, U.S. attorney's office there:

> The indictment further alleges that Noriega, Pretelt and Rodriguez agreed to facilitate the importation of 400,000 pounds of marijuana and the laundering of more than $100 million dollars in proceeds.* * *

It further alleges that during the course of the conspiracy these men authorized and approved marijuana smuggling and money laundering activities within Panama, and had agreed to future payments and so forth.

But the entire summary of the statement from the U.S. attorney of the Middle District of Florida, of February 5, will be very informative to Senators, I hope, as to the kind of man we are dealing with, the kind of man who escaped Tuesday after being taken into custody. He could have been transported to Florida where he would have been tried on the charges on which he is indicted.

So I ask unanimous consent that this entire information be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, U.S. ATTORNEY, MIDDLE DISTRICT OF FLORIDA,

Tampa, FL, February 5, 1988.

PRESS RELEASE

Robert W. Merkle, United States Attorney for the Middle District of Florida, announced today that a federal grand jury in Tampa returned a three count indictment against General Manuel Antonio Noriega and Enrique Pretelt, citizens of the Republic of Panama. Noriega and Pretelt are charged with conspiracy to import and distribute marijuana and the attempted importation of in excess of 1,000,000 pounds of marijuana. General Noriega, 49, is the Commander-In-Chief of the Panamanian Forces of Defense. Enrique Pretelt, 45, is a prominent Panamanian businessman and close associate of Noriega.

The charges relate to the importation and planned importation of enormous quantities of marijuana during the years 1983 and 1984. The grand jury alleges that millions of dollars in U.S. currency representing the proceeds from the successful importation, in June of 1983, of 280,000 pounds of marijuana into the United States by Steven Michael Kalish, Leigh Bruce Ritch and others, were transported to Panama and laundered through Panamanian banks and businesses. This illegal activity is alleged to have been conducted with the approval and assistance of Noriega, Pretelt and their since deceased co-conspirator Ceasar Rodriguez-Contreras ("Rodriguez") also a prominent Panamanian businessman and a close associate of Noriega. The indictment further alleges that Noriega, Pretelt and Rodriguez agreed to facilitate the importation of 400,000 pounds of marijuana and the laundering of more than $100 million dollars in proceeds that Kalish and Ritch expected to realize from the importation of in excess of 1,000,000 pounds of marijuana during 1984. It also alleges that during the course of the conspiracy, Kalish made payments to Noriega, Pretelt and Rodriguez of approximately 1 million dollars for Noriega's authorization and approval of marijuana smuggling and money laundering activities within Panama, and had agreed to future payments.

The indictment alleges that it was part of the conspiracy that Noriega, Pretelt, Rodriguez, Kalish and others deposited drug proceeds in various financial institutions within the Republic of Panama. It alleges that the group also planned more aggressive laundering efforts through such institutions in the future. The indictment alleges that it was part of the conspiracy that Noriega, Pretelt, Kalish, Rodriguez and others would, among other things, invest the deposited drug proceeds in various businesses owned by Servicios Turisticos, S.A., a Panamanian corporation in which Noriega, Pretelt, Kalish and Rodriguez had an interest. The indictment further alleges that it was also a part of the conspiracy to launder proceeds from the distribution of marijuana and cocaine by drug organizations other than the Kalish and Ritch organization. Toward this end, the indictment alleges that, among other things, Kalish purchased and caused to be purchased a Boeing 727 aircraft for the Panamanian Forces of Defense to be used for, among other things, the transportation of U.S. Currency derived from illegal drug trafficking activities from the United States to Panama.

The indictment also alleges that Noriega authorized the transshipment through Panama from Colombia of 400,000 pounds of marijuana destined for importation into the United States, disguised as a containerized cargo of plantains, a banana like fruit. Pretelt assisted in arranging for the transshipment through Panama. It is alleged that as part of this conspiracy: Kalish paid $50,000 to Panamanian shipping agent for the facilitation of the transportation of the containerized shipment of marijuana; that Noriega approved the issuance of a Panamanian diplomatic passport to Kalish and authorized the payment of $185,000 to an official of Panamanian customs to obtain official Panamanian Customs seals indicating the contents originated in Panama and not Colombia.

It is further alleged that as part of this conspiracy, Kalish and Ritch purchased the Cari Cargo I, a Panamanian vessel. They sent the Cari Cargo I from the Cayman Islands to Port Everglades, Florida, where it was outfitted for transport of the containerized shipment of marijuana. Kalish and Ritch then sent the Cari Cargo I from Port Everglades to Colon, Panama. It is also alleged that during the Spring of 1984, 400,000 pounds of marijuana was collected and packaged in Colombia for shipment to the United States aboard the Cari Cargo I. It is further alleged that $800,000 was paid to Eugene Davis, a teamster official, for assistance in the use of a New York City, New York, pier to off-load the Cari Cargo I of its 400,000 pounds of marijuana. Mr. Davis is currently under indictment in the Eastern District of Michigan on related charges.

These efforts came to a halt with the July 26, 1984 arrest of Kalish in Tampa, Florida.

Counts One and Two of the Indictment each carry maximum sentences of 15 years imprisonment and $125,000 fines. The maximum sentence that can be imposed on Count Three is 5 years imprisonment and a $15,000 fine. * * *

EXHIBIT 2

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, U.S. ATTORNEY, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA,

Miami, FL, February 5, 1988.

NEWS RELEASE

Leon B. Kellner, United States Attorney for the Southern District of Florida, announced today the unsealing of a 12 count indictment returned yesterday by a Federal Grand Jury in Miami, Florida. The indictment charges General Manuel Antonio Noriega, the Commander-in-Chief of the Defense Forces of the Republic of Panama and fifteen other defendants with federal narcotics violations including the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), manufacture, importation, and distribution of cocaine, interstate and foreign travel in aid of racketeering activities, and conspiracy to commit racketeering offenses and violate United States narcotics laws.

The indictment charges the defendant, Manuel Antonio Noriega, with exploiting his official position as head of the intelligence section of the Panamanian National Guard and then as Commander-in-Chief of the Defense Forces of the Republic of Panama to receive payoffs in return for assisting and protecting international drug traffickers including Pablo Escobar-Gaviria, Gustavo Dejesus Gaviria-Rivero, Jorge Ochoa-Vasquez, and Fabio Ochoa-Vasquez, members of the Medellin Cartel in conducting narcotics and money laundering operations in Panama.

According to the indictment, Manuel Antonio Noriega protected cocaine shipments flown from Medellin, Colombia through Panama to the United States; arranged for the transshipment and sale of ether and acetone, including such chemicals previously seized by the Panamanian Defense Forces, to the Medellin Cartel; provided refuge and a base for continued operations to the members of the Medellin Cartel after the murder of the Colombian Minister of Justice, Rodrigo Lara-Bonilla; agreed to protect a cocaine laboratory being constructed in Darien Province, Panama; and assured the safe passage of millions of dollars of narcotics proceeds into Panamanian banks. In return for these services, according to the indictment, Noriega received in excess of $4.6 million.

Among the specific acts of racketeering charged in the indictment are the movement through Panama of in excess of 2000 kilograms of cocaine destined for the United States, and the transshipment of ether and acetone to a laboratory at a location as "Tranquilandia" in Colombia. Also detailed is the June 15, 1984 flight of Inair Airlines into Miami, Florida with over a ton of cocaine.

If convicted of all counts, Manuel Antonio Noriega faces 145 years imprisonment and $1,145,000 in fines.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

I thought I saw the distinguished—I did see the distinguished majority leader. He is now conferring with the minority leader. I want to inquire about the prospects of a vote. There can be a motion to table, or whatever.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator is interested in a vote, it is surely in my interest. We have devoted what I believe is more than adequate time to this subject. If the Senator is interested, I think the best thing would be for me to simply make a motion to table, or some other interested Senator might. Then we will have a vote on it.

Mr. HELMS. That is all right as far as I am concerned. I thank the majority leader. I thank him very much. I am, like he, waiting for something to happen.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is this all right with the majority leader?

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I want to reiterate what I said earlier that some Senators, even some who favor strongly the original version of the amendment, have said they would feel a little more comfortable if we made the amendment read in modified form as follows:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President's authority is hereby reaffirmed to use the armed forces of the United States to (a) secure the removal of General Manuel Antonio Noriega from his illegal control of the Republic of Panama in order to bring General Noriega to trial in the United States under the terms of his February 1988 indictments on drug trafficking charges, and (b) protect the Panama Canal pursuant to the Panama Canal Treaty of 1978.

Now, I am comfortable with the amendment either way. I hope it will not be a motion to table the original amendment.

I want to make one more effort, if I may, to ask unanimous consent that the yeas and nays on the original amendment be vitiated and that I be permitted to offer a modified version of the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I want to respond to my good friend from North Carolina.

We had a brief discussion, he and I, earlier this morning on his amendment. I indicated to him at the time that we were seeing whether or not there was any possibility that we could work out a compromise, so that we would either move with an amendment allowing him to amend his original proposal, or see if he, along with the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Georgia and several others, would be able to come up with a single proposal. And we have not been able to do that.

There is a proposal that many of us believe is appropriate and would meet the desired ends of the Senator from North Carolina. Obviously, the Senator from North Carolina speaks for himself, so I guess I should amend that to it would achieve the stated purposes of the Senator from North Carolina, without in any way doing violence to what the Senator from Delaware and others believe to be the relative or relevant provisions of the War Powers Act.

One of the problems that the Senator from Delaware and others have with the proposal, even as it would be amended, as proposed by the Senator from North Carolina, is that it assumes the President has authority, which we believe under the Constitution he does not have. So we have prepared a resolution, under the leadership of the Senator from Georgia, that would in fact allow, in a differently stated form, the ability of this administration to accomplish all that the Senator says he would like to accomplish, and we know he would like to accomplish, without getting us into the business of having inadvertently passed a 1989 version of the Tonkin Gulf Resolution, or without us inadvertently having amended the War Powers Act, without a debate on the War Powers Act, or having given congressional authority, which resides under the Constitution within the Congress, to the President, setting a precedent for future administrations to claim that they have the authority to do things, which the Senator from Delaware and others believe he does not now have under the Constitution and the authority to do without the consent of the Congress.

So I will not do it. But at the appropriate time, the Senator from Georgia will be here to explain the approach that we wish to take. It has been the sense of those on this side, and I believe a couple on the Senator's side of the aisle—although I cannot say that with certainty—that we should not allow the Senator to amend his amendment, and that we should go straight to a vote on the Senator's amendment, and after the vote on the Senator's amendment, go to a vote on the amendment that is going to be, at some point, proposed by the Senator from Georgia, that has been worked out in conjunction with the Senator from Delaware and a number of others, even including the leader.

Hopefully, we will be able to agree to that and, hopefully, that will meet the ends, although in a way different than the Senator from North Carolina would like.

That is a very fancy way of saying to the Senator from North Carolina, no.

Mr. HELMS. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Delaware objecting?

Mr. BIDEN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware objects. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. HELMS. I believe I got the message. I do not think anything involved in the War Powers Act is involved. I have not seen or been consulted about any negotiations on any other amendment. The Senator has folks on his side and perhaps some on our side. All I am saying is that we ought to send a message to Panama that we are not going to have any more of this foolishness, and from now on, the "Keystone Cops" will not be bumping into each other and saying we are not sure whether we are authorized to do this or not, which is what happened. I understand where the Senator is coming from, and I have no objection to it.

I do hope that the Senators will come in so we can get a vote on this thing. I have been sitting around for an hour and a half or 2 hours. I know the majority leader wants to move this along.

Mr. MITCHELL. I sure do. So Senators can be aware of it, we still have to complete action on the drug bill today and then take up catastrophic, and we hope to complete action on that today. One of the reasons that the Senate spends so much time considering matters at night is that we get so little done during the day. It seems to be a problem here.

I share the Senator's view, and I hope that momentarily the Senator from Georgia will be here and we will be able to proceed.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, while we are waiting for the Senator from Georgia, I would like to speak for a moment to the merits of the Senator's position and his proposed amendment, why the Senator from Delaware is not inclined to support giving unanimous consent for amending the amendment.

In the provision that is before us, and the proposed amendment to it, the Senator from North Carolina has proposed a change, which we have not given unanimous consent to allow to happen, and I will explain why.

It says, "Notwithstanding any other provision of law"—I will cease by the way, immediately upon the arrival of the Senator from Georgia, if that is what we are waiting for. I do not wish to hold this up.

This is how the Senator from North Carolina's proposed change reads as given to me by the Senator.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President's authority is hereby reaffirmed to use the Armed Forces of the United States to secure the removal of Manuel Antonio Noriega from his illegal control of the Republic of Panama.

Mr. President, that is reaffirming an authority that the President does not now have. The President has the authority under the proper circumstances, under existing treaties or under the Panama Canal Treaties, to take actions that are allowed by the treaties to engage in multilateral actions with the Organization of American States, but he does not have the authority now to go in, for whatever reason, and start a war, or to use force to go in and remove a particular person.

For example, the administration, the Attorney General, and Dr. Bennett point out to us that they do not even want the power to be able to shoot down drug-loaded planes flown by drug lords coming to the United States. They say that authority is not an authority they have now, and they do not want it.

They point out that they are against the proposal of the Senator from Delaware to have an international strike force which would be able to go into various countries. They point out that they do not want—and rightfully so—and do not think they have the authority to use American military forces in Colombia right now.

We have indicted drug narcoterrorists in Colombia and Bolivia, and in other countries, and the President says, when asked why we do not go in and get them, that we have no constitutional authority to do that, and he is right.

He has no constitutional authority to do that. But here in the proposal by the Senator from North Carolina, and I think it is probably unintentional, he is reaffirming an authority that the President acknowledges he does not have, it is a very bad precedent. For if the President has the existing authority to go in and get Manuel Noriega because he is under indictment, he obviously has the authority to go get the Ochoa brothers, he obviously has the authority to go in and get Pablo Escobar, and obviously has the authority to go in any country if it is to get any of these indicted drug kingpins if he knows where they are.

So to reaffirm an authority is a fundamentally unsound constitutional notion because there is no such authority under the Constitution.

The administration might come up and they might like the change for all I know. I do not know that. But to suggest that they have the authority under the Constitution now to send in military forces to get Noriega when American citizens are not in danger, if they were not, when it is not in conjunction with an existing treaty, when it is not because of the violations of the Panama Canal Treaty, to suggest that there is just a blanket authority to go in implies that you could go into any country as long as you indict the leader. You indict the leader of the country, and you have under the Constitution unlimited authority as President of the United States to use military force to go in and get him.

Let us assume we decide Mikhail Gorbachev turns out to be a bad guy. We do not like him so much. Let us indict him. I am sure we can get a Federal grand jury somewhere in this country to indict him. We would then be able to declare war on the Soviet Union without any congressional authority, without the Congress doing anything at all.

Under this amendment, the President would have the authority—it has just been pointed out to me that the administration opposes the Helms amendment and the modification, so I now know they do not want this authority—but if this amendment becomes law, we would be setting the precedent that says "all you have to do is indict the leader of a country for whatever reasons and then the President has a total free hand. He need not even discuss with the Congress the use of military force in the name of going into that country.

I do not believe anybody really wants to set that precedent here. I do not even think the Senator from North Carolina intends that. I do not think he has any desire to do that.

But it is clear that that would be the effect of the proposed perfecting amendment were it approved. Let me read it again. The amended proposal says, "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President's authority is hereby reaffirmed."

Quite frankly I do not like either, but if I had to vote for one of the two I would vote for the way it is rather than the way it was. At least the way it is we are saying, "Mr. President, we in the Congress think you should declare war on Panama." At least we are in the game. At least the Constitution is involved.

But the other way it says, "Mr. President, you have the authority," which he does not have I respectfully suggest, "to use the Armed Forces, to remove Noriega, to bring him to trial in the United States and to protect the Panama Canal." He has the authority to protect the Panama Canal. There is no question about that in my view consistent with the treaties, but he does not have the authority to go in and bring him to justice by using the Armed Forces. And again I say that it is for a sound reason.

I am sure the Senator from North Carolina does not intend it. But under this proposed change we would have set a precedent that all we have to do is indict someone and from that moment on the President of the United States has authority, without ever checking with the Congress, to go get him.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. HELMS. Senator SPECTER discussed that at some length very persuasively this morning. He disagrees with the Senator.

Could I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BIDEN. Yes.

Mr. HELMS. Does the Senator think President Reagan had the authority to send military forces into Grenada?

Mr. BIDEN. I do, because he was excercising the authority he has inherent under his power as the Commander in Chief to protect American citizens who were demonstrably in danger, or that was the claim.

The President said,

> I am not sending these troops in to rescue that country from communism. I am not sending these troops in to rescue the country from danger. I am sending these troops in specifically to protect the American medical students who I say are in danger.

Mr. HELMS. I will say to the Senator we read the Constitution differently as to the President's authority. The Senator is certainly entitled to his view of it. I believe it is much broader than the Senator from Delaware does.

Mr. BIDEN. I acknowledge that.

Mr. HELMS. Yes.

Mr. BIDEN. I acknowledge one thing further. If the view of the Senator from North Carolina is correct, then this administration did a horrible thing. This administration had the full authority, if the Senator's view is correct, to go in and do anything they wanted to do in order to get Noriega.

I understand why the Senator from North Carolina is so aggrieved by the failure of this administration to act because of the position from which he starts. If you acknowledge that the position of the Senator from North Carolina is correct—that the President has that authority now—then I must acknowledge that I fully understand and fully would concur with his sense of outrage and anger about what did not happen in Panama in the last 2 days. But in fairness to the administration—far be it for me to be their defender—I believe they do not have that inherent authority under the Constitution.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Senator. I think we split enough hairs.

Mr. BIDEN. The only reason I am talking is I want to speak to the merits of this on the record while waiting for the other interested Members to arrive on the floor.

I yield the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the Senator from Georgia will be here momentarily, at which time I expect he will make just a brief statement describing the alternative which he intends to propose. Then we will have a motion to table and proceed as earlier suggested.

So Senators should be aware that a rollcall vote is expected in the next few minutes. And it is my hope that we could then get a time agreement on the alternative so that we can dispose of this matter and proceed to the remainder of the pending bill.

Mr. HELMS. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. HELMS. I am certainly amenable to that. I will be off the floor. The majority leader may assume I am agreeable to any time he may work out.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the distinguished Senator. Boy, do I wish I had that authority generally.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HELMS. Before he does that, we will talk about that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORE). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WHOM SHOULD WE SNATCH AND WHERE SHOULD WE PUT HIM?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], has put a tempting proposal before the Senate. One could call it the officially sanctioned snatching provision. The dictator of Panama, Manuel Noriega, is abhorrent to all of us, to all Americans who cherish freedom, who oppose drug peddling, who care about the people of Panama, who respect the rule of law.

The international community, rudimentary as the standards that govern that community may be, does have certain time-honored practices in order to regulate the trial in one country of personages in other countries who violate the laws of the first country. Extradition treaties exist for the purpose, as we all know, of extraditing people like Noriega for trial in a proper forum in the United States. Noriega has been indicted in the southern district of Florida for drug-related crimes, and we do have a treaty with Panama, under which he could be extradited—except of course, as dictator he is not going to turn himself in to the authorities in the southern Florida district. We have bilateral extradition treaties with most other countries in the world, including most of the countries of Latin America. In addition we are a signatory, with most of the countries of this hemisphere, of the Inter-American Convention on Extradition, originally ratified in 1933, which provides that each state assumes the obligation of surrendering to any of the other signatory states any person who has violated the law of the demanding state, provided that the act would also violate the law of the state which would do the extraditing. Under this convention, as well as the many bilateral extradition treaties we have with the other states of the hemisphere, grounds do exist to deliver Noriega to the United States for trial. Knowing this, of course, we would be surprised if Noriega were to put himself in a position for that to occur, but that is the rule of law that pertains to this situation.

Mr. President, there is a sense of great frustration, which I am sure has galvanized my friend, the Senator from North Carolina in his effort in this amendment, to get the Noriega problem behind us. Surely we are all disappointed that the attempt to remove him from power did not succeed. But in our frustration, shall we succumb to the frustration of the moment and authorize the Army to take military action to snatch him, to remove him and bring him to trial in the United States? What kind of precedent would that be for us? What would be the repercussions for us in our relations with the other states of the hemisphere in the long run? What standard would it set for us in the future in similar cases?

Mr. President, I do not like the Libyan leader, Mr. Qadhafi. I do not know many Senators, if any, who do like him. The Senator from North Carolina, if his activism on the matter of the recent brutality by the Chinese leadership is any guide, is far from enamored with the Chinese leadership. There is probably no continent in the world without its share of unsavory leaders whose removal, in our hearts, we would applaud. The question is this. Who is to decide on who gets snatched? Where does the snatching end? Lots of Senators here would like to snatch Ortega. There are some retrograde Eastern European leaders who could do with a good snatching. The snatchees could be readily deposited in Alcatraz, which is now open for tourism, but could just as easily be a great detention spot for snatchees.

Mr. President, sending the U.S. Army into Central America or anywhere else to snatch leaders we believe are brutalizing their people, who jeopardize and work against our long-term interests, is an easy and tempting solution to a frustrating problem. But I think it creates far more mischief than it corrects, and it leads us into an unlawful quagmire where snatching standards are impossible to set. The point is that we must not enact a provision which establishes a policy allowing the U.S. military to run all over the globe snatching foreign leaders whom we don't like. I share the frustration of the Senator from North Carolina as to Panama, but, I still must oppose his solution.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, in a few moments I will move to table the Helms amendment. I want to be sure the Senator from North Carolina understands that. I understand before I came on the floor that had already been discussed but it is not my intent in any way to preempt him or move to table prematurely. But it is my understanding from others who have been on the floor, the debate has been pretty much completed on that amendment.

If the Helms amendment is tabled, then I will have an amendment along the same line; but, hopefully, more precisely drawn. That will be cosponsored by Senator LUGAR, Senator BIDEN, Senator COHEN, Senator KASSEBAUM, Senator JOHN KERRY, Senator BOREN, Senator MITCHELL.

Without getting into a long detailing of this amendment, because I know the time is ticking away and we have many other important matters, let me just say I think it is extremely important what this body asserts in the way of our authority to use military forces in the world. It is important from the point of view of the U.S. Constitution. It is important from the point of view of the declaration of war powers that, as is clearly set forth in the Constitution, belongs to this body. It is important from the point of view of treaty commitments in this hemisphere and, indeed, treaty commitments thoughout the world. It is important in terms of our base rights.

I do not know how many people have followed the Vice President's trip to the Philippines. I have not had a chance to talk to him, but I followed the news reports. It is obvious we will have some crucial negotiations going on in the Philippines in the near future about two of the most important military bases in the world for us and indeed for the Pacific allies, that is Subic Bay and Clark Air Force Base.

I think we would find almost unanimous opinion in the military that, particularly Subic Bay, is almost irreplaceable.

The question of what countries in the world allow U.S. military forces to be stationed there is crucial for our security.

Also, I think all of us sometimes get swept away for the moment and forget what the original purpose of all this was.

We are concerned about the continued rule of Noriega. I certainly share the sentiments of the Senator from North Carolina on that subject, I would say completely. We are so concerned about that, not because of his appearance or personality, although neither are entirely pleasing to many observers, but because our system of justice has, under our procedures, accused him with indictment of engaging in drug trafficking.

We all know the drug problem in this country is the most serious domestic problem we have now and, in many people's minds, including my own, has indeed become a national security problem.

What is the role of Panama in the drug situation? Certainly any time we have any leader in a foreign country involved in any way in drug trafficking, it is of great concern to us. But primarily, Panama is a place that drugs are being shipped through and also a place where cash is being washed.

The places where we really have to crack down on the drug growing are Peru and Bolivia and Colombia. We had a whole set of hearings last week in the permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. In that testimony it was, without rebuttal, testified to by a number of people that almost 100 percent of the cocaine coming into this country comes from those three countries.

We are in the process right now of trying to encourage those countries to do more in terms of eradication, in terms of substituting crops, in terms of coordination with U.S. military and police functions including our Drug Enforcement Administration.

We have military special forces that are engaged, either in this country or in some cases in the host country, in helping train their people. But we have been very, very careful because it is so sensitive in those areas where drugs are grown, about U.S. military involvement.

They are sensitive. They do not want us to come in. All three Ambassadors told us this clearly last week. Their Ambassadors testified. They said: "The last thing we need is U.S. military forces coming in here to enforce our laws. We do not want them. If you do that, it is going to undermine the government. If you undermine the government, we are likely to end up with a Communist kind of insurgency."

So, there is a lot at stake here: The U.S. Constitution, the declaration of war powers of the Congress, the authority of the Commander in Chief, treaty commitments in this hemisphere and around the world, base rights in the Philippines and Greece and other places in the world, and also the fundamentals of what we are trying to do in the drug traffic.

I would like to see Noriega not only indicted, he has been indicted, but also brought to justice. I certainly would like to see him out of Panama.

I will have some more statements to be made this afternoon. I have been spending an enormous amount of time in the last 2 days looking at what has happened in Panama in the last 48 to 72 hours, trying to figure out, first what the United States policy is; second, whether it has been carried out properly; and, third, whether we had the type of response by our intelligence and military people in that area that was required by the circumstances. And, finally, what authority they had from the President of the United States.

I have not resolved those questions in my own mind. I will have some more to say about that later.

But the point I want to make before I move to table the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina is the substitute amendment, we have had a number of cosponsors on both sides of the aisle; it is totally bipartisan; it has been worked out carefully.

The substitute amendment will set forth the sense of the Congress that the President in his capacity as chief executive and Commander in Chief has authority—has authority, not that we are conveying it by this amendment—the authority as Commander in Chief under the Constitution of the United States, and consistent with the relevant laws of the United States and treaty commitments of the United States, to protect United States citizens and property throughout the world, to protect and defend the Panama Canal, and to enforce the laws of the United States.

We cannot pass a statute taking away the President's constitutional authority. It is my view that we should not try to supplement that authority when the President has not requested it and when the authority is already ample under the U.S. Constitution for him to take actions he needs.

We have had a lot of debates on the War Powers Act. The War Powers Act does not prohibit the President from taking action that he has under the authority as Commander in Chief. It puts a time limit on certain reports. It also gets into consultation with the Congress. But he is not inhibited from taking military action anywhere where he believes it consistent with his constitutional authority by the War Powers Act.

I want everyone to know before I move to table the Helms amendment that there will be another amendment that will be offered. It has broad sponsorship. I happen to believe that it sets forth fully and clearly what we believe the authority of the President of the United States is in his role as leader of this country and as Commander in Chief.

When the leadership indicates it is the appropriate time, and I certainly do not want in any way to preempt the Senator from North Carolina, I will at the appropriate time move to table. I would like to reserve my rights to the floor to see if there are any other observations from the leadership before I make that move.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the majority leader is recognized on the time of the Senator from Georgia.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that upon the disposition of the Helms amendment, the Senator from Georgia be recognized to offer his amendment; that there be 40 minutes of debate on his amendment equally divided and in the usual form; and that upon the completion of that debate or the yielding back of time, the Senate proceed without any intervening debate or action to a vote on or in relation to the Nunn amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is their objection?

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I certainly do not intend to object, but would that preclude any other amendments to my amendment? It is a second-degree amendment to the Biden amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will advise, the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, as the Chair understands it, would be a second-degree amendment and, as a result, would not be amendable.

Mr. NUNN. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pending is a unanimous-consent request by the majority leader. Is there objection?

Mr. HELMS. I have no objection to that whatsoever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Hearing none, the request is agreed to.

According to the unanimous-consent agreement, the time reverts to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HELMS. No, no.

Mr. NUNN. I believe the tabling motion would have to be made before we get to that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia asked to retain his right to the floor on the conclusion of the comments of the majority leader.

Mr. NUNN. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina for a question.

Mr. HELMS. No, no. Are we in a situation where no Senator can get the floor in his own right? I do not understand that procedure. I do not want to delay the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia asked unanimous consent to yield to the majority leader for the purpose of making the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. NUNN. I do not in any way want to cut off the Senator from North Carolina; I said that when I first came on the floor. So I will just yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the Helms amendment, which apparently will be tabled, is pretty much in a fix that a rustler would get into if he was hung and thereafter given a fair trial.

I have not seen the amendment. I asked for it now and Senator BIDEN says he does not have a copy of it. But there has been no conference with me. I do not guess that is necessary around this place. I do not object to it, as it has been described to me.

Let me say a few words most respectfully, not in response to, but in connection with, comments by my dear friend from West Virginia, the President pro tempore of the Senate.

In essence, Mr. President, the Helms amendment, which will shortly be tabled, provides authority to deputize the Armed Forces of the United States to bring Mr. Noriega to justice in the United States.

29-059 O-90-5 (Pt. 17)

I say to my distinguished colleague that neither Qadhafi, whom he mentioned, nor the Chinese, are under indictment, insofar as I know, in the United States, and thus those examples are not analogous to the situation in Panama and have really no relevance to the pending amendment one way or another.

I have already inserted maybe 2 hours ago into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a description of the charges, very serious charges of drug trafficking and money laundering, on which Mr. Noriega and a couple other thugs have been indicted in this country.

I am not going to repeat them, but I wish to have them understood. I am ready to go to a vote. If the majority wants to move to table, that is fine.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I cannot let the events in Panama go by without expressing my outrage at our complete lack of action to help the people of Panama achieve the freedom they so justly deserve, and have risked their lives to obtain. I find such inaction particularly ironic in light of our policies elsewhere in the Western Hemisphere.

In Nicaragua, we created, armed, and financed the Contras for the express purpose of overthrowing that government. We mined their harbors. We have placed United States troops in neighboring Honduras and conducted extensive training exercises to intimidate them. Most recently, I personally have participated in several meetings over the past few weeks with the administration to work out a package to aid the political opposition in Nicaragua. It is only because of the strong negative reaction by Congress that the option of covert operations to influence the elections were abandoned.

Do not get me wrong—I do not support the Sandinista government, and would very much like to see democracy restored in Nicaragua. We all would. All I am saying is, in that instance, this administration and its predecessor showed no reluctance whatsoever to use every weapon at their disposal to influence the internal affairs of that country.

Yet in Panama, a few hundred miles away, a vicious drug-dealing dictator rules with an iron fist. He has deprived the Panamanian people of the democratic government they freely chose by stealing the elections. He has violated U.S. law, then thumbed his nose and laughed when we indicted him. He is a cold-blooded murderer.

Furthermore, the United States has vital interests in that country—the Panama Canal and the headquarters of our Southern Command are located there.

For months the President has been urging the Panamanian Defense Forces to overthrow Noriega. Just yesterday he said:

I would repeat in hopes that it be conveyed instantly to Panama: we have no argument with the Panamanian Defense Forces. Our argument has been, as has many other countries, with Mr. Noriega, who aborted the democratic will of the people of Panama.

And what did we do to help when courageous elements of the PDF took him at this word and tried to topple the dictator? Nothing, that's what. Absolutely nothing.

And why is that? Because, the White House tell us, we do not interfere with the internal affairs of other countries. Since when?

The OAS tried to handle the situation diplomatically, and failed. Only the United States has the strength to protect the people of Panama.

When Noriega stole the elections, I and most Members of this body supported the President when he committed and sent additional troops to Panama. But now we have to ask, why are they there?

I am further outraged because what we had to do was so little—block one road, just one road. About 12,000 troops in Panama and we cannot block one road.

To its credit, this administration has expressed and displayed a desire to work with Congress to forge a bipartisan foreign policy. For this I commend them, and in that spirit offer this advice:

Read our lips: help the Panamanian people. Preserve our interests. Get rid of Noriega.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I move to table the Helms amendment. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 74, nays 25, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Simpson

So the motion to lay on the table amendment no. 935 was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion to table was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, it is my understanding that under the previous order the Senator from Georgia is now to be recognized to offer his amendment and there will be 40 minutes of debate on that with a vote following that. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is correct.

Mr. MITCHELL. Therefore, Senators should be aware that a vote will occur on or in relation to the Nunn amendment not later than 40 minutes from now and, if all time is not used then, perhaps somewhat prior to 4:40.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. President, that is my understanding and I will not delay the time of the Senate except to say the Senator from North Carolina was badly treated. He was made to wait all afternoon, to come trumbling down here with a new thing and not allowed to modify his own amendment to say essentially what this pending amendment is going to do. It was a waste of the time of the Senate for an extra 40 minutes, and is basically unfair.

I just want to observe that I think comity in the Senate does not deserve that kind of behavior if we are going to achieve it over the course of the next few days.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the majority leader is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I would like to say to the Senator from Wyoming that since I have been majority leader, I have made every effort to be fair to all concerned.

Mr. WALLOP. I agree with the Senator. I was not accusing him of being unfair, but the process by which the Senator from North Carolina was denied the ability to change his own amendment was not becoming to the Senate. It was not the majority leader's fault.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator. We best let it pass, and maybe we can proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Georgia is recognized for the purpose of offering an amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 954 TO AMENDMENT NO. 924

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Congress regarding efforts to restore constitutional government to Panama)

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senators LUGAR, COHEN, WARNER, BIDEN, DODD, BYRD, KASSEBAUM, JOHN KERRY,, BOREN, MITCHELL, and LEVIN, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN], for himself, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. COHEN, Mr. WARNER, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. DODD, Mr. BYRD, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. KERRY, Mr. BOREN, Mr. MITCHELL, and Mr. LEVIN, proposes an amendment numbered 954.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, further reading of the amendment is dispensed with.

The amendment reads as follows:

In the amendment on page 3, line 4, strike out "(2) submit a report to Congress" and all that follows through the end of the amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(2) submit a report to Congress annually on the manner and extent to which such remedies are being used and the effect of such use in curtailing drug trafficking. The amendments made by this section shall take effect one day after enactment.

SEC. 43. POLICY TOWARD EFFORT TO RESTORE CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT IN PANAMA.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that General Manuel Noriega—

(1) runs one of the most pervasive police states in the Western Hemisphere;

(2) has usurped the power of the legitimate government of Panama;

(3) has undermined the economy of Panama;

(4) has been indicted in the United States for international drug trafficking and money laundering;

(5) is opposed by the overwhelming majority of the Panamanian people;

(6) has lost support of all democratic governments in the Western Hemisphere; and

(7) has, as evidenced by the attempted coup of October 3, 1989, lost significant support within the Panama Defense Forces.

(b) POLICY.—It is the sense of the Congress that the President in his capacity as Chief Executive and Commander-in-Chief has authority under the Constitution and consistent with relevant laws of the United States and treaty commitments of the United States, including the Treaty Concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal and the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (also known as the "Rio Treaty"), to protect United States citizens and property, to protect and defend the Panama Canal, and to enforce the laws of the United States.

(2) The Congress hereby supports—

(A) the efforts of the President of the United States to restore constitutional government to Panama and to remove General Manuel Noriega from his illegal control of the Republic of Panama;

(B) The President's utilization of the full range of appropriate diplomatic, economic, and the military options in the Republic of Panama; and

(C) The President's authority to exercise, to the fullest extent, the rights and obligations of the United States to protect the Panama Canal and American citizens in Panama pursuant to the Panama Canal treaties which entered into force in 1978.

(3) It is further the sense of the Congress that the President should inform the Congress of the step he has taken to provide timely assistance for the establishment of a coordinating office for the Panamanian democratic opposition.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I believe that the remarks I made a few minutes ago indicate generally what this amendment is all about. I think it is enormously important, when this body goes on record as to the use of military forces, that we do it carefully, precisely, and that we understand the effect of what we do, both in this country and abroad. I think all of us agree with the situation in Panama, and all of us in this body, I think, wish we had a legitimate government there and wish that the coup had succeeded.

I have a lot of questions that I will be posing later this afternoon relating to what happened in Panama. I have made no public statement on the subject. Every time I believe I have gotten all the facts, I hear something else and start checking, and I find perhaps I did not have all the facts. Until I get all the facts, I am going to withhold my conclusions about whether we took the appropriate action and whether we took advantage of the opportunity that had been presented.

Mr. President, what this amendment does—and I am not sure 40 minutes will be necessary, although I want to give everyone a chance to speak—is it has Congress going on record as to certain findings about General Manuel Noriega. First, that he runs one of the most pervasive police states in the Western Hemisphere; second, that he—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will suspend. The Senate is not in order. Those Senators and members of the staff conducting conversations will please cease conversations.

The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. NUNN. First, that he runs one of the most pervasive police states in the Western Hemisphere; second, he has usurped the power of the legitimate Government of Panama; third, that he has undermined the economy of Panama; fourth, that he has been indicted in the United States for international drug trafficking and money laundering; fifth, that he is opposed by the overwhelming majority of the Panamanian people; sixth, that he has lost support of all democratic governments in the Western Hemisphere; and seventh, that he has, as evidenced by the coup of October 3, 1989, lost a significant amount of support within the Panamanian Defense Forces.

This amendment goes on to state that—and this is the heart of the amendment—it is the sense of the Congress that the President, in his capacity as Chief Executive and Commander in Chief, has the authority under the Constitution and consistent with the relevant laws of the United States and treaty commitments, including the treaty concerning the permanent neutrality and operation of the Panama Canal and the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance, known as the "Rio Treaty," to protect U.S. citizens and property, to protect and defend the Panama Canal, and to enforce the laws of the United States.

It goes forward to say the Congress hereby supports the efforts of the President of the United States to restore constitutional government to Panama and to remove General Manuel Noriega from his illegal control of the Republic of Panama. It also goes forward to say the President's utilization of the full range of appropriate diplomatic, economic, and the military options in the Republic of Panama and, the President's authority to exercise, to the fullest extent, the rights and obligations of the United States to protect the Panama Canal and American citizens in Panama pursuant to the Panama Canal Treaties which entered into force in 1978.

Mr. President, the point of this amendment is to basically say what we all know, and that is, the President of the United States has enormous powers, as Commander in Chief and as the leader of our Government, to commit U.S. military forces where he believes it is necessary for the defense of this country or for the protection of our citizens or for the enforcement of our laws.

I have not heard a single person in the administration, not one, since the coup failed in Panama, saying that the President did not have enough authority under the law, or saying that he was impeded from taking action because of any kind of legal requirement under the War Powers Act or any other act of the Congress. They have not said that.

There are a lot of debates about what went on down there. I have serious questions about what went on. I have serious questions about whether we have received all the facts. I have not reached conclusions, and I do not intend to until I get the answers to these questions. But we should not believe that by passing a statute here, we are going to change the authority of the President's inherent rights under the Constitution. This amendment sets forth the clear and, I believe, very much historically accepted, constitutional authority of the President of the United States.

We also have constitutional responsibilities in this body, and I think it is important for us, even in the heat of the moment, to sort those out and make sure that we have precise language. So I hope that this amendment will be accepted. I do not believe anybody who voted to table the Helms amendment was against the sentiments expressed by the Senator from North Carolina as to the outcome in Panama, but I do think a number of us had some very serious concerns, not about how this amendment be read in critical countries that we are trying to work with now, like Peru and Bolivia and Colombia, on the drug problem.

That is where 100 percent of the cocaine comes from, those three countries. We have very good relations with those countries at this time. Those countries, although, have very severe economic problems, very severe political problems, and also in the case of Peru, very active Communist insurgency.

The last thing we want to do in this body is, in an effort to show how strong we are here in our support for removing Noriega, to take an action that would be counterproductive to our overall drug efforts in those areas where 100 percent of the cocaine comes from.

I also think it is very important for us, as the Vice President just noted, to understand the sensitivity of what is happening in the Philippines, the base rights there. We are going to have a very substantial number of people in the Philippines who oppose the renewal of United States military bases there. The last thing I will negotiate is the need for this body to go on record about the use of military force in a way that offends the sensitivities of those people in the Philippines who support United States military bases. That same thing can be said in other countries in the world. So things that might play well at home, we have to put in a broader perspective.

In terms of the Senate of the United States, our responsibility is to have a broad periscope and to look beyond simply the moment and look to the overall question of what we are doing and the effect on our national security all over the world, as well as the effect on our military forces all over the world. We do not want every country in the world that hosts American military to believe that we are asserting the right of those people to be policemen in other countries of the world. We cannot afford that to happen, unless we want to come home and basically forget about the commitments we have abroad, because that is the quickest way I know for the American military to become the "ugly American" instead of being received, and received well, in those places in the world.

So I think the President has plenty of authority. I do not think anything that happened in Panama, whatever the circumstances and facts prove to be, happened because of a lack of authority of the President of the United States. He clearly had the authority to take action if that action was consistent with his overall responsibilities to this country and consistent with his constitutional duties.

Mr. President, I do not have any further remarks. I think the amendment is clear. I would hope the Senate will support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time in opposition to the amendment will be controlled by the Republican leader's designee, if the chairman of the committee is in favor of the amendment.

The Chair is advised that Senator HELMS will be designated for the Republican leader for those 20 minutes.

The Senator from Georgia has 11 minutes and 39 seconds remaining. The Senator from North Carolina has 20 minutes remaining.

Who yields time?

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. NUNN. I am glad to yield. How much time does the Senator need? I will be glad to yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Georgia for proposing his amendment and commend him for the statement he has just made.

One of the points that he made was that as a practical matter, this particular amendment is unnecessary. It is designed to reaffirm something the President already has, and that is power. He has the power to take action to protect our interests, including the lives of U.S. citizens, their property, and the interests of our allies under existing treaties. He can do that now, so this amendment would not add anything to his powers. So the problem is not an absence of power.

The real question is whether there has been an absence of policy. Was a policy established for Panama: if a policy was established, did we take appropriate action pursuant to that policy?

There is also the issue of whether or not we have accurate information. The Senator from North Carolina has raised questions and they are legitimate questions. There is information that continues to percolate up through the system.

I would say on behalf of my colleague, the chairman of the Intelligence Committee, and myself, that we are going to continue to inquire into the facts surrounding the attempted coup in Panama. We are not at this point satisfied we have received all the facts, and this afternoon, this evening, and tomorrow, we will continue to try to make an assessment as to whether or not we have accurate information. We will continue to pursue the issue of whether or not we had contingency plans to deal with such circumstances, and whether those plans were consistent with the announced policy.

As I understand it, our announced policy is that we will not use force to remove Mr. Noriega from power. If that is the case, then perhaps we need a change of policy. But according to the facts that I have at this time, the administration acted with prudence, caution, and appropriately under the circumstances. That may change as new facts continue to surface. But we will assure the Senator from North Carolina that we are going to make a very good faith effort to get to the bottom of all these circumstances and report back to the Senator and to the full Senate as soon as we can. But, in the meantime, I think that the Senator from Georgia has offered an important amendment that puts the Senate on record reaffirming the Presidential power to take action in Panama as provided for by the Constitution.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina be kind enough to yield to the Senator from Idaho 4 minutes?

Mr. HELMS. Yes, and then following the Senator from Idaho, I will yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, the Senate never ceases to amaze the Senator from Idaho. When George Orwell wrote 1984, I think he would have classified the activity here today as a clear case of doublespeak.

Senator HELMS has an amendment here. The language is very clear:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President's authority is hereby reaffirmed to use the Armed Forces.

Is that the language the Senator had? Was it reaffirmed or was it affirmed?

Mr. HELMS. Reaffirmed, that was the modified amendment that was never permitted to be.

Mr. SYMMS. This is what the Senator wanted to offer.

Mr. HELMS. Exactly.

Mr. SYMMS. He wanted to offer language to hereby use the Armed Forces of the United States and so forth, to protect the Panama Canal pursuant to the Panama Canal treaties of 1978. Now we have this other language. This is what I find real doublespeak. On page 3, the Senate is commending the efforts of the United States to restore a constitutional government to Panama and to remove General Manuel Noriega from illegal control of the Republic of Panama.

I think the Senator from Maine just made a very good statement. I happen to agree with what the Senator from Maine said. If there ever has been a case where we have a very blurred policy, it seems to be in Panama.

It is very clear to the world with regard to the election in Panama, the people with all the guns thwarted the democratic efforts for freedom and fair election. Two out of three people in Panama voted to throw Manuel Noriega out of office. Yet the United States of America, the bastion of liberty and freedom, the strongest, most powerful Nation on Earth stands by wringing its hands as if there is nothing we can do about it.

Then we have to go out and explain to our constituents why it is they pay for the finest military in the world. I think the Senator from North Carolina made a very good point on the floor when he said he asked one of our outstanding American military officers what is our military for if we are going to publicly say we will never use it under any circumstances to defend freedom and justice.

I think this amendment—I am not going to vote against this amendment because, in general, I favor having some kind of a statement here from the Senate to encourage the administration that, for heaven's sakes, stand up for what is right in this world. We need to send a statement that says we will support our friends and oppose our enemies.

I have listened to the statements of other Senators, and if we cannot come up with some kind of a plan for Panama that is more efficient than the ones we have been coming up with, God help this country.

I find it somewhat amazing that my colleagues would vote against the Helms amendment. All it says is we reaffirm what the President's authority already is; we will try to have a show of support.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The 4 minutes yielded to the Senator from Idaho have expired.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I have 2 minutes, I believe. I would like to ask the distinguished sponsor of the bill a couple questions. The first question is, Why are we doing this? As I understood the Senator from Maine, he indicated this was not necessary.

Mr. NUNN. I believe that the Senate of the United States is going on record stating what authority we perceive the President to have, and that authority is clearly set out in the Constitution of the United States.

I also believe we will be going on record saying that the President shall take all appropriate steps, including political, economic, and military options to carry out the goal of all of us which is to bring Manuel Noriega to justice and to restore true democracy to that country and to recognize the legitimate Government of Panama.

As a matter of fact, I think one of the things that is so lagging in our policy now is recognizing the government that was elected. The Endara government has not officially been recognized, I understand, which is very complicating and perplexing from a legal point of view and from the point of view of basically trying to ascertain not only what our policy is but what our people on the ground should do.

For instance, I will not go further on that answer, but I believe the Senate of the United States does not need to confirm additional authority on the President. But I do believe from time to time when we get in a heated debate like this, it is informative to the people and instructive to all of us to set forth what we think the constitutional authority is.

Mr. CHAFEE. I agree with the Senator from Idaho it is hard to vote against this. I am not sure why we are doing it. I guess we could follow on with a resolution dealing with that too and open our position in the Far East and spend a lot of time on these matters.

I did not quite understand what the Senator from Georgia was saying. Is it that we have to indicate further we are not going to go barging into Bolivia, Ecuador, and Colombia, and other nations with Armed Forces. That is what has been suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The 2 minutes yielded to the Senator has expired.

Mr. CHAFEE. Maybe I could get an answer on his time.

Mr. NUNN. Could I give an answer on the time of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HELMS. How long?

I will give the Senator 1 minute.

Mr. NUNN. I will be very brief.

The answer is, yes, a number of people have suggested that we deploy military forces in those countries. A number of people have talked about an international force, including the United States. The Ambassadors from those countries testified last week clearly that they did not want U.S. military intervention and, indeed, that it could very well lead, like in Peru, to worse problems for the government with the guerrillas. So it has been suggested.

Mr. CHAFEE. I think we all accept that.

Mr. SYMMS. Will the Senator yield so I could ask another question of the distinguished Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. SYMMS. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield me 30 more seconds?

Mr. HELMS. Yes.

Mr. SYMMS. I would like to ask my good friend and distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee, what kind of message does he think it sends both to the administration and to the rest of the world to have the Senate just vote down the Helms amendment. It is very clear in what it says. It says it reaffirms what authority the President already has. And we voted that down. What kind of message does that send?

Mr. NUNN. Well, it must be the message the administration wanted, because I understand they opposed the Helms amendment and support this amendment. So I think they clearly understand.

I think we have to be sensitive, as I said a few minutes ago, to what other nations think from time to time. I believe that this is one of those times that we have to be sensitive.

Mr. SYMMS. I thank my good friend. I just say that in my opinion what it says is, "Don't stand up for freedom because the United States will not be there."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. NUNN. If the Senator is implying that those who voted against the Helms amendment were not in favor of Noriega being kicked out of power, I would say he is absolutely wrong. That did not have that implication.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. BOREN. I thank my distinguished colleague from Georgia.

A number of points have been made here. I first, at the outset, want to state that the Intelligence Committee is looking into this matter right now to determine the facts. We are working with the Armed Services Committee. We are not going to stop our work. We are demanding an explanation of all the facts and a chronology of what actually occurred. We are going to get that information and we are going to get to the bottom of it because I am convinced the full facts have not been laid out to us or to the American people. We intend to get to the bottom of it.

Second, let me say that I think that the Nunn amendment is very carefully drawn to allow the President to act in appropriate situations to use a military power, if necessary. That is the reason I support this amendment.

I would not say that in any possible circumstance, it would be appropriate to use military force even in the situation in Panama. But yesterday or the day before, when the coup attempt was made, I do think that was an appropriate circumstance for us to use such force to come to the aid of those people who were acting bravely, who had General Noriega in custody for a period of 2 hours, Mr. President. For 2 hours, while they had him in custody where obviously other military leaders, Panamanian units as close as 600 yards, the additional crack military unit, the top military unit of Panama in Panama City, they sat there watching. They did not move. They did not come to the rescue of General Noriega.

Why? They were waiting to see if the United States might act to protect those people who had taken control of that headquarters and to somehow take General Noriega under control. They were on the fence waiting. And they got their answer, Mr. President. They got their answer. The United States would not act. And when they saw that the United States was not going to act, it was then—I ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield me some additional time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized for 1 additonal minute.

Mr. BOREN. It was then, Mr. President, that 500 members of a motley crew came in and took control of that situation.

Now, if the United States had shown any sign that it was willing to enter into that situation and protect those people, do you think 500 people could have broken in there when we had 12,000 troops in Panama? Do you think they could have? Absolutely not.

But I would add, Mr. President, that I think the real failure here is why has there not been an American policy? Why has there not been a contingency plan? For 2 years now this administration and the President has been saying we hope the PDF will move to throw out Noriega; we hope they will take the situation in hand themselves. And yet we did not have a contingency plan.

Why not? If we were encouraging people to act, why did we not have a plan to say what they would do when they did act? Why had we not, as Senator NUNN said, already cleared up the legal situation? Why had we not recognized the legal Government of Panama? When President Delvalle's rightful term ended, why did we not act to recognize the Endara government that the whole world said had won the election? Then we would have in place a legal entity to request help from the United States when a situation occurred like occurred this week.

We had no policy, Mr. President, in spite of the fact that time and time again many of us have said, "What is our policy? What government do we recognize? What legal authority could we turn to if we had this kind of a situation? What will we do if the PDF and the Panamanian people do what we have been asking them to do, rise up against Noriega?"

For 2 years we asked them to act. They did and we did nothing. Because for 2 years we had not put a policy in place. That is inexcusable, Mr. President, inexcusable.

Mr. NUNN. Will the Senator yield for a brief question?

Mr. BOREN. Yes.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I commend the Senator for his, I believe, very pertinent point here about not having a government recognized. Would the Senator agree with me that if we had a recognized government there in Panama, that we recognized a legally elected government by the Panamanian people, and we told our people down there on the ground, "Look, anyone that takes control down there needs to recognize that government, first of all," then if that government says to us, "We want you to help us," it would put us in a totally different legal situation and totally different political situation; would the Senator agree with me?

Mr. BOREN. I would agree.

I might ask if I might be granted an additional minute to answer fully Senator NUNN's question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. BOREN. Senator NUNN has asked a very, very important question. We know that we were informed of this coup before it happened. The White House has said so. They said we learned about rumors from three parties. We learned it on very good authority that it was going to happen.

What I wonder is, What did we say to the people that were going to be involved when we learned this coup attempt was going to take place? Did we say to them, as Senator NUNN said, you have to recognize the Endara government, make it clear you are recognizing them so there is a proper legal authority? Or did we say to them we will not help you? Did we say to them that clearly it is our policy not to move any military force on the Panamanian soil?

Did we let them know or did we simply listen and nod gravely as we heard this information?

I would ask, Mr. President, after our Government had said time and time again that we would help you rise up and throw out General Noriega, if someone had come to tell us that information and we sat and nodded gravely, do you think they would feel we were going to help them, since we urged them to act, or do you think they would think we would not help them in their time of need?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

I wonder if any Senator can identify the man who won the election in May of this year in Panama. I am sure Senator KERRY can. What is his name?

Mr. KERRY. President Endara.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator must stand if he is to engage in a colloquy.

Mr. HELMS. He said, Mr. Endara, and he is correct.

Do you know where Mr. Endara is? He was just arrested by General Noriega. He is the man who won the election by 2 to 1 in May.

Now, then, about the pending amendment. Several Senators have asked me how I am going to vote. Of course, I am going to vote for it. You know, any time I can get to case a vote that is equivalent to a passionate kiss of my sister, I am going to vote for it. And that is what this is. If ever a mountain labored and brought forth a mouse, this is it. Who can take exception to what is in it? But when you get down to the nitty-gritty, it is the sense of the Congress.

Now, we just defeated the Helms amendment. That is fine. I am used to that.

But, if we want to do something about it, if Congress wants to speak, they had a chance a while ago and they marched up like little tin soldiers and said "aye" on tabling it. Aye, aye—I sat back there in the cloakroom, and I could anticipate the vote of everybody who voted. No, there was one who fooled me a little bit.

Mr. President, I think I am one of three Senators now a Member of this body who voted against the War Powers Act. I think it is an intrusion upon the constitutional power of the President of the United States. I thought so then. So did Sam Ervin. So did Howard Baker. Bartlett, Bellmon, Bennett, Curtis, Eastland—I mentioned Ervin—Fannin.

I ask unanimous consent that the rollcall vote on that be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I do not have anything more to say. Of course we are going to pass this, and probably unanimously. Maybe Senator CHAFEE will not vote for it. Let us go ahead and vote, and kiss our sister and kiss the mouse that was just brought forth into this world by the mountain.

I yield the remainder of my time.

Mr. SYMMS. Will the Senator yield me 1 minute?

Mr. HELMS. Certainly; I yield the Senator 2 minutes if he needs it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. SYMMS. In the rush of debate, I wanted to be sure my good friend from Georgia understood I am not impugning the motives of the Senator.

What bothers me—and I agree much with the discussion that has gone on here by the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Oklahoma in appealing for a policy—we would like to know what it is we are doing to successfully win this. I asked the rhetorical question, What kind of a message does this send? In my view, the action of the United States and the entire Panama question and the entire Central America question, the Contras, Panama, other people who have clung to freedom, when we do things like this we send a message: Do not stand up and be counted for freedom because Uncle Sam may not be there.

Yet we have been doing it since 1945, through Hungary, Czechoslovakia, and Cuba. It is a history we should turn around.

I think the Helms amendment is something we can understand. I am going to vote for this amendment—I am sorry it is not stronger—to send a message not only to the world, but to Pennsylvania Avenue, that maybe, just maybe the great United States should start taking the responsibility that it has as the leader of the free world; to demonstrate that we are strong economically, militarily, and we have a political will that will stand up for peace and freedom for both our own citizens and our friends.

That is what we are not doing. It is a tragedy that we have been so inept; that we have not seen a legitimate government of Panama rise to be able to give those people the legitimate leadership that they deserve, that they voted for, that was taken away from them because they did not have any guns and Noriega had all the guns. That is the point I am making.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask Senator NUNN yield me 2 minutes.

Mr. NUNN. I am committed to the Senator from Virginia first, the Senator from Massachusetts second, the Senator from Rhode Island third, the Senator from California fourth, and I have 6 minutes.

I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WARNER. Does the President wish to recognize another Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator wish to yield on a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WARNER. I will yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. WARNER. May I now proceed for some 2 minutes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Please.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I think the one thing we know for certain is the uncertainty of the facts in the situation.

Members of the Intelligence Committee have been briefed. Members of the Senate as a whole have been offered a briefing. There are additional facts being brought to the attention of the Senate from various sources even now. So I think at this point in time, we should give our President every benefit of the doubt that he acted prudently, based upon the facts that he possessed at the time; he had to make a decision.

Often, it is harder for a Chief Executive to restrain the use of force than it is to use force. This is one of those situations.

Mr. President, all of us are familiar with the constitutional provisions. Article II of the Constitution makes the President both the Commander in Chief of our Armed Forces and the Chief Executive of our Nation. We have been on this floor many times debating these provisions, usually as part of a debate about the War Powers Act. Now fresh in my mind are the debates on the Persian Gulf, where our President did use, very prudently, limited force, and many on this floor sought to prevent that limited force.

The Constitution, in the judgment of this Senator, provides that only the Commander in Chief can make the decision to use force. We as a body cannot compel him to use force, even if the Congress were to declare war, only the President can actually employ the Armed Forces.

There are legitimate constitutional questions, once force is commenced, as to the role of Congress. We have debated those questions many times in the context of the War Powers Act. But the President is best able to determine whether to initially use our Armed Forces.

So my recommendation to the Senate is that we give our President the benefit of the doubt, until such time as the factual situation is clarified.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts, but before I do that, I ask unanimous consent there be an additional 10 minutes to be equally divided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—I shall not—I wonder if the managers will make the request on behalf of all Senators that, given the limited time, we might have printed in the RECORD additional remarks.

Mr. NUNN. I certainly have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Without objection, there is 10 minutes equally divided.

Mr. NUNN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts 3 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY], is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, it occurs to me there are not any words and probably no resolution that we can pass or we can utter that is really going to make up for what has brought us to this point with respect to the lack of policy in Panama.

I suggest that that is really the real meaning of this particular resolution. It is not, clearly, giving the President additional power.

Therefore, the question is: Why pass it? I think what the Senate is really trying to say to the President, as well as to the Panamanian people, if they will even listen to us now, is that it is, as the Senator from Oklahoma said, far past the time that this country, given the indictment against General Noriega, given the criminal enterprise he is engaged in against this country, given the theft of a democracy he is engaged in, it is long since time that we had a policy.

There is a failure, and even without the facts all in—and they are not all in—there is clearly a lost opportunity because there is no strategy, Mr. President. I have been working on this issue for 2½ years now or more. I met with the Vice President at his request at his office here with Senator DURENBERGER, with Senator KENNEDY, with Senator MACK, Senator D'AMATO, and others, to talk Panamanian policy.

At that time we said you do not have an end game. You have to have strategy in place. As long as you exhort the Panamanians to some kind of action and as long as you tell the opposition to do something, but do not know what you will do when they do it, you will never remove General Noriega.

We know at this point that we were notified of what happened. We do know that. We do not know the entire chronology, and it is important to have it.

But, Mr. President, it is clear that the United States raised expectations, the United States put sanctions in place, the United States sent additional combat troops to the region, the United States made clear its determination to get rid of Noriega, and people acted on our actions and on our beliefs.

This Senator believes that, under the Canal Treaty, under the Rio Treaty, under the Organization of American States Charter, and under the international law of self defense and rights that we have to defend the interests of these people, the President already had adequate power to deal with this issue.

The problem is the intelligence has not been adequate, the strategy has not been adequate, the contingency plans have not been in place. We are suffering, today, the Senate's frustration with a need to try to say to the President: It is time to end the timidity. It is time, finally, to put in place a real strategy that will not desert the people of Panama.

I received news today. I met with the Panamanian ex-Ambassador this morning. It was his news, directly from Panama and from the people there, that Major Giroldi and Major Sandoval were personally shot by General Noriega. That is the news he related, and that at least seven or eight of the other participants, the lieutenants, sergeants—and I have their names here—are now dead and the others are in jail.

Mr. President, I think we need to take more seriously our responsibility with respect to the lives of these people and to their expectations of our activities. To not have had an adequate strategy to do so I think is a black mark on our diplomacy, as well as on our goals and values.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time? The Senator from Georgia controls the time.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I committed to the Senator from Rhode Island 2 minutes, and then to the Senator from California 2 minutes. And then I will be glad to yield to the Senator—I committed to the Senator from Maine 1 minute, and the Senator from Nebraska I will be glad to yield to, if I have any time left.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, my understanding of the phrase "appropriate diplomatic, economic, and the military options in the Republic of Panama" as stated in the amendment would mean the United States would only use American troops either to protect the canal in accordance with the Panama Canal Treaties, or to defend American lives in self-defense, or to be part of the multilateral forces that might be created by the OAS or the United Nations to restore democracy to Panama.

And in this regard, I would also like today to congratulate President Bush on the way this problem has been handled; congratulate him on his restraint, and hope that restraint will be visible in the future, also.

Mr. President, I well understand the sense of frustration in this body and in the Nation as a result of Tuesday's failed coup attempt against General Noriega. The frustration level even before Tuesday was high because of the prolonged inability to deal effectively with the problems posed by Noriega. To use the phrase originated by the Senator from New York a little "benign neglect" might be in order here, in this case. I caution my colleagues to think very carefully about the grave implications of the unilateral use of United States troops to oust Noriega.

The situation should be resolved by the people of Panama themselves. This was underlined yesterday morning by the democratic opposition's Vice Presidential candidate Billy Ford who spoke against the use of U.S. troops. It would have been easy for President Bush to have respond to the calls for the participation of U.S. troops in actions to throw out Noriega. But if he had done that we would have reaped the bitter frustration of that exercise for many years to come. The nations of the hemisphere would see it as one more example of belligerence on the part of the United States in the region. Unilateral U.S. action would be in violation of international law and would violate the principle of nonintervention which is a precept that the Latin American nations hold sacred. We would most certainly alienate the nations of the region whose support we absolutely need if the policy to force Noriega out is to succeed.

Intervention by United States troops also would be in violation of the Panama Canal Treaties. It would place into question the commitments that the United States has made in hundreds of treaties and base rights agreements with foreign nations. To my mind, as I said before, the only time that United States troops should be used in Panama is either to protect the canal in accord with the Panama Canal Treaties, or to defend American lives, or to be part of multilateral forces that might be created by the OAS or the United Nations to restore democracy to Panama.

Any foreign action must be conducted within the bonds of international law through the use of instruments available such as collective action through the Organization of American States. I will agree that thus far, the OAS effort has been disappointing but I believe that with an even stronger effort by the United States, measures can be taken to isolate the Noriega regime.

I urge my colleagues to move back a few steps and take a reasoned look at the situation in Panama. We should increase our efforts on the international level and we should step up our efforts to support the democratic opposition in Panama. Even the threat of unilateral U.S. military intervention as was embodied in the Helms amendment could serve to give more credence to Noriega's branding the opposition as lackies and puppets of the United States. It could hurt rather than help the opposition today.

Finally, think about the real significance of what happened on Tuesday, even in the failure coup attempt. General Noriega's hold on the armed forces is much weaker today than it was Tuesday morning. He has received a strong signal that there are important elements within the Panama Defense Forces that have had enough of his arbitrary and illegal power. There are important elements in the military who believe that Noriega must go. According to reports, among those arrested by Noriega were three members of the Military High Command. It is especially significant that the officer who is credited with leading Tuesday's coup attempt, is the very same officer who had supported Noriega in a coup attempt that took place a year and a half ago.

I believe that the fissure that finally has appeared in the PDF will enlarge to become a huge crack that Noriega will not be able to repair. More and more members of the PDF will come to realize that it is in their institutional interests as well as in the interest of the Nation of Panama that Noriega relinquish power. The mid-level and junior-level officers of the PDF will realize that after Noriega the credibility of the Panama Defense Forces will be restored and that the United States will support efforts to reform and professionalize the military.

I hope my colleagues will support this more rational approach to the situation in Panama.

Mr. NUNN. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from California.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON], is recognized.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, we share views on the desirability of getting rid of Mr. Noriega, obviously, and we must do everything we can within reason to accomplish that. I read this as carefully as possible just to make sure there is no Gulf of Tonkin resolution here, and I do not think there is. I would like to ask a few questions.

One, the question that states the President's utilization of the full range of appropriate diplomatic, economic, and military operations in the Republic of Panama, supporting that does not suggest anything other than what is presently required in consultation with Congress; is that correct?

Mr. NUNN. It is not the intent of the author of this amendment to change the existing law. We cannot change the existing Constitution. The President has certain options, as I mentioned in the dialog with Senator BOREN. If we had recognized that government, which we had not, and that is one of the problems of our policy, if they ask our help in defending that legitimate government there, in that case, that is to me an appropriate military option in protecting our people down there and protecting the canal. If our people are in danger, I think we have the right to take appropriate military steps.

Mr. CRANSTON. Protecting American lives is the principal purpose that is implied and covered by this provision.

Mr. NUNN. And the canal. I think in international law and in our Constitution, the President has a right to help another government in terms of self-defense. The key here, though, is recognizing. If we want a policy to work, we have to recognize the government. The Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Oklahoma and I agree on that. If we recognize the government down there and somebody takes over and recognizes that government, then that puts us in a totally different legal position. But the problem is we do not have a policy of recognition. That makes everything we do down there much more difficult, and it makes the problem of our military people down there much more difficult. So I would agree with those who are saying we do not have an adequate policy.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NUNN. It is not the intent of the authors of this amendment to change the War Powers Act or the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. CRANSTON. I ask unanimous consent for one more minute to address a question to Senator BIDEN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection.

The Chair hears none. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRANSTON. Does the President have constitutional authority to take military action to enforce the Panama Canal Treaty if there is any violation, no matter how minor, or is this a judgment——

Mr. BIDEN. The answer is, no, he does not. He has the power to come to the Congress. Our international treaties are not self-enforcing, and in almost every case we write into a treaty that the President has to conform with the constitutional limitations and requirements that exist on the President. For example, he could not automatically commit troops, with a single exception: When the supreme national interest of the United States is at stake.

I disagree with my friend and the cosponsor of this amendment when he says if we recognized the government, the President could automatically move in. It is clear in this Senator's view he could not do that unless it was concluded by the President that the supreme national interest of the United States was at stake, unless that case could be made.

For example, we have treaties with Japan. Japan as a recognized government could say, come join us and invade China. We could not merely because a recognized government and ally of ours asked us to do that, could we? The President does not have the constitutional authority to do that unless the supreme national interest of the United States is at stake, in which case it is possible under the scenario outlined by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator. That is very helpful.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. I yield to the distinguished Republican leader such time as he requires. How much time remains?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Nine minutes, twenty-one seconds. The Republican leader is recognized for such time as he may require.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me say first that I agree with the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, who spoke earlier, that it is unfortunate the Senator from North Carolina was not given consent to modify the amendment that has just been tabled. I had some reservations about that amendment and, in my view, at least, the President does not need the authorization of Congress to use our Armed Forces to defend the vital interest of the United States or the lives of U.S. citizens. He already has that authority under the Constitution. My guess is that the Senator from North Carolina agrees with me on that interpretation.

I was concerned that the very fact of offering this amendment inadvertently reinforces an already unfortunate tendency here in Congress that we retain to ourselves a right of the President. The Senator certainly had the right aims. He deserved to have a chance to have his amendment voted up or down. So I was pleased to join him in voting against the tabling motion.

Despite the fact the Helms amendment has been tabled, I think it is worthwhile to send a strong signal to Panama and to the world that we are prepared to back the President. All this talk about we do not have any policy is all politics. The same people were up here beating their chests when Ronald Reagan saved Grenada saying it was the wrong policy. Now it is no policy. Next time it will be something else. We understand the politics of it.

I think the President acted properly. He does not need to come to Congress to get our consent to do what he does or does not do. He is in charge of foreign policy, and we can fault him if we wish, but one can think of all kinds of scenarios that might have happened had he taken action. We would have been up here on the floor pounding him daily for doing too much or doing it the wrong way. So I say any President has a difficult job, Republican or Democrat.

As I understand the resolution before us, we are supporting the President, and I support the effort by Senator NUNN and others because it does send a strong message. I also believe it is neutral on some of the contentious questions of Presidential powers. At least that is my interpretation of the Senator's language. I think it is the same interpretation just given by the Senator from California, and I support the amendment. But I do hope we are not using this—at least I know the principal author is not—to beat the President over the head. But others have been up here giving me a little dose here and there. Maybe that is a fair game and maybe it is not. Maybe we do not have all the facts. Maybe additional facts will indicate otherwise.

But in any event, I am prepared to support what the President did. I think he acted based on the facts he had. And from what I read on the last page of this resolution, it seems to me that we are sending a message that we do support the President of the United States. In this case, the President happens to be Republican. Next time, it might be a Democrat, hopefully not too soon, but it may be some day.

It seems to me we are doing the right thing in supporting the President.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. I want to say I am sorry this has turned into a political attack on the President. We heard all kinds of terms tossed around here today about timidity on the part of the administration. I must say, things have changed around here. Suddenly this place is filled with hawks. All I can remember is the Persian Gulf, every time the President wanted to move and do anything in the Persian Gulf, all we heard about was the War Powers Act and Grenada and Angola. I think we better be careful about the terms we use. The President moved with great discretion. He did not throw his power around, and he did the right thing in Panama. I think we ought to acknowledge it. I think it is a little odd where the objections are now coming from that they did not take all the actions that armchair generals can now direct him to do with that marvelous incisiveness that comes with 20-20 hindsight. I want to thank the distinguished Chair.

Mr. MURKOWSKI addressed the Chair.

Mr. HELMS. How much time does the Senator need?

Mr. MURKOWSKI. A minute or two.

Mr. HELMS. I yield 2 minutes.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I thank the Senator from North Carolina. Mr. President, I think on balance, as we reflect on the debate that has occurred here today, we owe a debt of gratitude to the Senator from North Carolina. The merits of the amendment pending and the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina have their own individual interpretation from each Member.

I think we, as a majority, support the President and certainly support the responsibility associated with the action. Nevertheless, there is a democratic process going on here where we are questioning, based on the knowledge available to us, which we all have in different degrees, over the action because we all abhor the situation in Panama as it is relevant to Noriega.

We are aware of numerous contingency plans. We had hoped somehow through economic sanctions and various other means to have a situation where Noriega would no longer be head of the Panamanian Government. We have seen an opportunity fail. Time will tell whether we should have taken action. I think it is quite appropriate to not address the significance of the political motivations or opportunities associated with being critical, but nevertheless send a message that when we look at alternative plans one has to question why the opportunity was not taken, perhaps why it was not successful, and as we reflect in retrospect the reality that there will probably be few opportunities again, particularly with the disposition and the shooting by Noriega, as alleged, of the principals.

So obviously we are going to have to pursue perhaps other alternatives in Panama, and the alternatives are not too numerous. I thank the Chair. I appreciate the yielding of time by the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. WARNER addressed the Chair.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I shall briefly engage in a colloquy with my distinguished chairman and the principal sponsor of this amendment. I listened very carefully to Senator NUNN's opening comments about how Presidents, both this one and his predecessors, here exercised a certain amount of restraint in this hemisphere because we cannot simply focus on one country; our focus must be interlocking throughout the hemisphere.

But when we say we have no policy and no contingency plans, I must reply that we do not publish our contingency plans, the military contingency plans, in the Federal Register. I am certain that Members of this body repose a confidence in this President, as other Presidents, to have contingency plans for this part of the world as other parts of the world. I ask my dear friend if he wishes to reply.

Mr. NUNN. I do not recall having said there was no policy. I do believe that perhaps the Senator from Oklahoma made the statement along that line.

I believe what I said was, and what I intended to say, I think we have to decide clearly what our policy is. One way to decide that—and I think the essential first step—is who do we recognize as the legal government in Panama. That is very important from the point of view of legality; it is important from the point of view of our people on the ground and what they basically communicate to anyone who may wish Noriega to leave the country or to be brought to justice.

So I think part of our policy needs to be clarified. And I also believe that we have to make it clear to our people on the ground what their ground rules are in advance for assisting people who may want to remove Noriega from power, whether that assistance is diplomatic or whether it is economic, and under what conditions it could be military. Those conditions have to be carefully set forth.

I say to my friend from Virginia, if we have such clarity, I have not been able to discern it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia has 10 seconds remaining. The Senator from North Carolina has 2 minutes 51 seconds remaining.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I am almost ready to yield back what little time I have remaining, but let me restate the proposition once more.

This entire debate occurred because the administration was just not prepared on Tuesday to deal with it. As I said in my remarks earlier today, there was nobody available to commend or respond to questions except a Deputy Assistant Secretary of State. I do not want to do the young man an injustice, but I never heard of him. Everybody was down at the White House or somewhere wining and dining the President of Mexico. What I heard all day long was, "We don't know whether the President has the authority" to do this or that. And there was confusion.

I do not know of anybody—certainly have not—who has criticized the President of the United States. What I am doing is raising a question about being ready next time, I say to my friend from Virginia. Nobody has criticized George Bush. He is our President. We do not have but one President at a time. But he needs better advice, I think, based on the reinformation I have assembled, than he got on Tuesday, because it is very clear in my mind that had he had full information that even a lowly Senator like me was able to assemble, then I believe he might have thought twice about saying we are not going to get involved. That is the only point I am making.

Now, several Senators, as I said earlier, have asked, "How are you going to vote on this?" I am going to vote for it, and I urge all Senators to vote for it, if there is a rollcall vote. I am not even going to ask for a rollcall vote on it because this is a fait accompli. But I am saying that this is a sense-of-Congress resolution, and I will close as I began. It is a passionate kiss of one's sister to vote on this one way or another. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 2 additional minutes, 4 additional minutes if the Senator from North Carolina wants 2.

Mr. HELMS. No.

Mr. NUNN. Two additional minutes, one to be yielded to the Senator from Maine and one to the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I indicated earlier that the amendment does not deal with the issue of the absence of Presidential power, but the absence of a policy that would have permitted the use of force to remove Noriega. That really is the heart of the issue.

Our policy is not to use force to remove Noriega. I happen to agree with that policy. We can take out Noriega tomorrow if we have to or we want to.

The real question is, Does the Senate want to go on record to send forces into Panama to remove Noriega and, if so, under what circumstances? After a popular vote, was that the time to send them in? After a coup is underway, do we send them in then?

What I object to is encouraging people to either revolt or vote and take to the streets—with the implied but ambiguous promise that we are going to come to their aid with physical assistance. If that is the case, I think we have an obligation to help them. In sum, I think the President acted appropriately under the circumstances as we know them today. But I also think we need to review and clarify our policy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair. I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by Senator NUNN. I think it is precisely on point. It does what I think most of us want to do, which is to dismiss Noriega at the earliest possible moment.

The grumblings I have heard about the President's lack of action remind me some, Mr. President, of walking out from a football game on one or two occasions when Oklahoma defeated Nebraska and people have said, "Well, if the coach had done this or the coach had done that." But I know the coach in this case, the Commander in Chief, did absolutely the right thing. I think the President would not be hesitant in the proper use of our forces if there was a chance of real success, which I may be proven wrong from later developments, but from what I know now—and I think I know what most of the other Members of the Senate know—he did the right thing given the circumstances that confronted him. There is no need for Presidential bashing at this time at least.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I commend Senator NUNN on this resolution. I am a cosponsor, because I share the conviction that Noriega should be removed from his illegal control of Panama as quickly as possible. The United States should utilize the full range of appropriate diplomatic, economic, and military options available to resolve the crisis in Panama and the hemisphere, and help restore democratic and constitutional government in Panama.

Mr. President, I am a cosponsor of this resolution because it is well crafted, and expresses the outrage of the American people that this thug has illegal control of Panama. Just last week the Senate approved an amendment I authored which expressed the Senate's conviction that the President should intensify unilateral, bilateral, and international efforts directed at removing Noriega from any position of power in Panama. As I stated last week, this expresses administration policy, the intent of Congress, the fervent desire of the American people, and the hope of civilized people everywhere.

Mr. President, I voted to table the earlier resolution by the Senator from North Carolina because it was poorly crafted. Noriega must go, but that resolution was not the best way to achieve that goal. The administration opposed that resolution, as did the overwhelming majority of the Senate.

I am deeply disappointed that Noriega is still in power. It is in the national security interests of the United States that this dictator be removed, as well as in the interests of people in Panama and throughout the hemisphere.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time has expired. The question is——

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a request for the yeas and nays. Is the demand sustained? Obviously there is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment No. 954. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LAUTENBERG). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 99, nays 1, as follows:

NAYS—1

Hatfield

So the amendment (No. 954) was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAMM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We will have order in the Senate, please. All conversations on the floor will cease.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. What is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is on amendment 924 of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN].

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, that amendment is the amendment relating to crack houses, giving civil authority to local officials to be able to close these crack houses down. Believe it or not, we debated it in another life, some time ago, prior to us getting off on the drug-related amendment to Panama, and I would, if there is no opposition to the amendment on the part of my Republican friends or anyone on the floor, I suggest we move to that amendment. I urge its passage.

Mr. HATCH. I have been informed there may be some opposition. Maybe we can work that out.

Mr. BIDEN. Apparently, Mr. President, there is some possible concern. I will not bother the Senate again with further debate on the issue.

May I make another parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state inquiry.

Mr. BIDEN. Once the Biden crack house amendment is disposed of, what will be the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At that time, the pending business will be amendment No. 934 proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Utah with regard to the crack house amendment.

Mr. HATCH. We are ready to proceed with the crack house amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. BIDEN. I urge the adoption of the amendment and suggest that we all vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment (No. 924) was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

AMENDMENT NO. 955

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Texas yield to me for a unanimous consent? I want to read a short statement and get it into the RECORD?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the information of the Senator there is a pending amendment.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be temporarily set aside.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object and I do not believe I will object, I indicated to the Senator from Massachusetts that his amendment is the pending business and I was under the impression he was prepared to move immediately.

So I would like to make the following suggestion: Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask unanimous consent in the meantime while we are trying to work this out to allow the Senator from Kentucky who wishes to make a statement on an unrelated matter to proceed if that is all right with the Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. If I might ask, Mr. President, where will that leave us when the Senator from Kentucky is finished?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the amendment would be pending at that point.

Mr. GRAMM. And I would have the floor, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the unanimous-consent request is agreed to.

Mr. GRAMM. I have no objection, Mr. President.

Mr. McCONNELL. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Who has the floor?

Mr. FORD. I have the floor. I am delighted to yield to my colleague for a question.

Mr. McCONNELL. I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

I say to the Senator from Delaware, if I could have the attention of the Senator from Delaware, a question for the Senator from Delaware: Is it the plan of the managers to establish some rotation here? If so, I would like to get aboard.

Mr. BIDEN. It is the plan of the managers to give everyone an opportunity to propose their amendments. What I would suggest is that each of the Senators wishing to propose amendments, not that it is required, but it may be a help to let each of us know, each of the managers know, and then we will try to work out an order in which we could do that.

Mr. McCONNELL. Since the Senator from Kentucky has been here, would the Senator from Delaware have objection to agree that I follow the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BIDEN. I would, because I have an amendment I wish to send to the desk. I have no objection to us alternating back and forth, Republican, Democrat; Republican, Democrat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. FORD. I am glad to get out of this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Kentucky has the floor. Does he yield the floor?

Mr. FORD. For what purpose? Do you want me to yield it completely?

Mr. HATCH. It is up to the Senator. I want to make sure we get this sequence.

Mr. FORD. Why do the managers not work this out while I make a statement about a great Kentucky product?

Mr. HATCH. Can I make a comment before the Senator does?

Mr. FORD. I yield for that purpose only.

Mr. HATCH. If I could have the attention of the Senator from Delaware, since we are moving fast, why do not we do this to expedite matters: Let the distinguished Senator from Texas set aside the pending amendment and then go to the distinguished Senator from Delaware and then go to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky on our side of the floor, Senator McCONNELL, and then go from there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. I am prepared to do that only on the condition that we have a time agreement on the amendment of the Senator from Texas because the Senator from Massachusetts has been waiting for 2 days to move on his amendment, and he has had it before the body. It is the pending business. In his absence I am reluctant to set it aside for an indefinite period of time.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield, 10 minutes divided equally, if the Senator will agree?

Mr. BIDEN. I agree.

Mr. HATCH. I propose a unanimous-consent agreement for recognition of the distinguished Senators from Texas, Delaware, and Kentucky, in that order.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will suspend just so we can keep abreast of the sequence of things here, does the senior Senator from Kentucky continue to yield the floor? He has the floor.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I certainly do and hope that they can work out an agreement so I can have my 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I propose a unanimous-consent request that we permit the distinguished Senator from Texas to have 10 minutes divided equally between his side and the other side to present his amendment and then move to the distinguished Senator from Delaware for his amendment and then the distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I suggest we go with the first unanimous-consent request and let the Senator from Texas go on the amendment for 10 minutes and see if we can work out an order.

Mr. HATCH. That will be fine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. BIDEN. We are just getting started, I say to the Senator.

Mr. FORD. I thought I might do this and give them the opportunity to work things out without disturbing the Chair.

SECRETARIAT

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, Kentucky lost a living legend yesterday. Secretariat, arguably the greatest racehorse of all time, was humanely put down late Tuesday morning. This most difficult decision was made by Seth Hancock, president of Claiborne Farm where Secretariat stood at stud for 16 years.

Secretariat was diagnosed on September 4 as having laminitis, an inflammation of the sensitive tissues inside the hoof wall. Although he received the best medical care available and was thought to be on the road to recovery, his condition suddenly deteriorated, putting him in extreme pain. He was buried by sundown near his father, Bold Ruler, in a 6-by-6-foot coffin lined with orange fabric, the color of Claiborne's racing silks.

Secretariat won the Kentucky Derby in 1973 when I was Governor of the Commonwealth. I will never forget how he ran like the wind, his gleaming coat the color of a new penny. He finished in 1 minute and 59 and two-fifths seconds. Secretariat went on to become a Triple Crown winner, winning the Belmont Stakes by an astonishing 31 lengths. His records remain unbroken today.

Mr. President, even people who were uninterested in racing knew and loved Secretariat. "Big Red" was a phenomenal athlete—the perfect running machine who captured the hearts of the American people. Every year over 10,000 people came to see the great stallion who always hammed it up when cameras appeared. He truly was America's horse and we mourn our loss.

I ask unaminous consent that two articles about Secretariat from this morning's Washington Post be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECRETARIAT: A TRUE HERO PASSES ON

(By Andrew Beyer)

The film of the 1973 Belmont Stakes is grainy and faded now, but even if you have seen it a hundred times before you can't help feeling a chill when the big red horse pulls away to a lead of 10 lengths, then 15 lengths, then 20 lengths. Announcer Chick Anderson's voice captures the emotion of the moment, the sense that history was being made before your eyes: "Secretariat is blazing along! Secretariat is widening now! He is moving like a tremendous machine!"

When Secretariat crossed the wire 31 lengths ahead of his closest pursuer, shattering the track record and completing his sweep of the Triple Crown, his performance was hailed as the greatest in the history of the sport. And when he died yesterday, the victim of an incurable inflammation in his foot, that opinion still prevailed. No thoroughbred has ever run more brilliantly.

Nor has any racehorse of modern times captured the public's imagination as Secretariat did.

In the era of Watergate and Vietnam, a time of cynicism and disillusionment, he was a genuine hero. People wanted to believe in him so much that his failures—his inexcusable defeats, his disappointing performance at stud—never blemished his image.

His name remains synonymous with excellence, and his death brought sorrow to people who might not have imagined that they could grieve over a 19-year-old horse.

Secretariat's biographer, Bill Nack, was visiting Claiborne Farm yesterday, and he said: "People were crying; they were inconsolable. Even people who weren't big racing fans were touched by his death. The emotions this horse stirred!"

A horse who shows extraordinary talent will commonly be labeled a "freak," but Secretariat was no freak of nature.

He was the end product of the best American breeding—a son of the dominant stallion Bold Ruler, who was a son of the great and influential Nasrullah. And he packed these genes into a body that was the perfect running machine.

Charles Hatton, the late columnist for the Daily Racing Form, described to Nack his feelings when he walked into the Saratoga paddock in the summer of 1972 and saw this chestnut 2-year-old:

"You carry an ideal around in your head and boy, I thought, 'This is it.' I never saw perfection before. . . . The body and the head and the general attitude. I couldn't believe my eyes, frankly, I've made a thing of looking at horses since before the First World War, but I never saw a horse like that."

And Secretariat was dazzling on the track too.

I have never seen a 2-year-old do so many exciting things, show so many dimensions to his talent. In his first stakes race, the Sanford at Saratoga, he was facing the protem leader of his generation, Linda's Chief, and was trapped behind a wall of horses while the favorite surged to a seemingly commanding lead. Secretariat lowered his head and bulled his way through—Hatton wrote that it was like "a fox scattering a barnyard of chickens"—and then accelerated explosively to catch Linda's Chief.

At the end of the season he was voted horse of the year; he was syndicated for future stud duty for the astonishing sum of $6.08 million; he stirred hopes that maybe, just maybe, he had a chance to capture the Triple Crown.

No horse had accomplished the feat since Citation in 1948; many racing experts were beginning to doubt that any horse would ever do it again. The 1973 Triple Crown series generated widespread national attention, and Secretariat responded with performances that even the most casual fan could appreciate.

He set a track record in the Kentucky Derby that still stands.

He set a track record in the Preakness but was deprived of it by a malfunctioning electric timer.

He set a track record in the Belmont Stakes that may never be broken.

Before Secretariat came along, Gallant Man's world record of 2:26⅘ for 1½ miles was considered the most formidable mark in the sport; it had stood for 17 years. Secretariat demolished it.

He raced head and head with his archrival Sham at a sprinter's pace—six furlongs in 1:09⅘—and kept running strongly all the way to the wire, covering the distance in a stunning 2:24 flat. In my system of speed figures, Secretariat earned a rating for the Belmont that no thoroughbred has ever approached. As Hatton wrote, "His only point of reference is himself."

After that performance, anything Secretariat did was going to be an anticlimax. Although he did deliver other sensational performances, his record was marred by losses to Onion in the Whitney Stakes and to Prove Out in the Woodward Stakes, and those losses undermine his claim to being the best horse of all times. The great ones aren't supposed to have so many blots on their records.

SECRETARIAT'S EARNINGS

Year	Sts	1st	2d	3d	Purses
1972	9	7	1	0	$456,404
1973	12	9	2	1	860,404
Total	21	16	3	1	1,316,808

And his stud career was a disappointment. When Secretariat went to Claiborne Farm, there were hopes that he was going to transform his species. While he did sire many outstanding horses, including Risen Star and Lady's Secret, he never lived up to the unrealistically high expectations of him.

His failures, however, will fade from memory. But his triumphs—and his Belmont triumph in particular—will be remembered as long as the sport exists.

SECRETARIAT LAID TO REST NEAR SIRE, BOLD RULER

(By Vinnie Perrone)

Secretariat, whose 31-length victory in the 1973 Belmont Stakes earned him throughbred racing's Triple Crown and affirmed his greatness, was humanely destroyed yesterday following complications from an incurable hoof disorder. He was 19.

The legendary chestnut horse was put down at Claiborne Farm in Paris, Ky., where he had been a stallion since 1974. He was buried at the farm late yesterday afternoon near his father, 1957 horse of the year Bold Ruler.

Secretariat's physical problems came to light after he foundered early last month. He was diagnosed as having laminitis, an inflammation of the inner hoof.

Claiborne assistant manager Gus Koch told the Associated Press that the horse's condition "rapidly worsened" on Tuesday and that he was in "extreme pain for the first time."

"When the inflammation occurs, swelling results," Koch said. "And since there is little room for swelling, this is a very painful condition."

Walter Kaufman, Claiborne's resident veterinarian, administered the lethal injection at 11:45 a.m., putting to rest one of America's fastest and most popular thoroughbreds of all time.

Secretariat was foaled by the Princequillo mare Somethingroyal on March 30, 1970, at Helen Chenery's Meadow Stable in Doswell, Va. The burnished colt, with a white star on his forehead and three white feet, became known as "Big Red" for his accomplishments as much as his size.

He made his racing debut at Aqueduct on July 4, 1972, and placed fourth, his worst finish ever. When he was retired to stud after his 3-year-old season, Secretariat had become the first Triple Crown champion in 25 years, winning 16 of 21 races, earning $1.3 million and establishing two world records and a host of track records.

He was voted horse of the year in 1972—the first 2-year-old thoroughbred ever to receive the honor—and again in 1973 after becoming the ninth 3-year-old to win the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and Belmont Stakes, and the first since Citation in 1948. There have been two Triple Crown winners since, Seattle Slew in 1977 and Affirmed in 1978.

Of those who mastered the Triple Crown, American racing's most demanding and elusive of challenges, none did it quite like Secretariat. After a third-place finish in the 1973 Wood Memorial Stakes, the Lucien Laurin-trained colt won the Kentucky Derby by setting a Churchill Downs track record that still stands: 1 minute 59⅖ seconds for 1¼ miles.

He made an explosive move through the first turn at Pimlico and went on to win the Preakness Stakes by the same margin he won the Derby—2½ lengths—and would have had another track mark had the teletimer not malfunctioned. Secretariat was clocked in 1:54⅘ for 1⅜₁₆ miles, but the record was not recognized because it was hand-timed.

Then came the June 9 Belmont Stakes, in which Secretariat secured a place in racing lore. His 31-length victory at odds of 1 to 10 seemed nearly mythical, the 1½-mile time of 2:24 crushing the world record even though jockey Ron Turcott never even cocked his whip.

Three months later, Secretariat set another world mark at Belmont Park when he won the 1⅛-mile Marlboro Cup Handicap in 1:45⅕.

The last two races of his career were his only ones on turf. He won them by five and six lengths, respectively.

Secretariat's true likeness never emerged in his progeny; his most talented offspring probably was Risen Star, who could have won the 1988 Triple Crown had he been subject to a less circuitous trip in the Derby. He won the Preakness and Belmont.

Secretariat also sired Lady's Secret, 1986 horse of the year, and more than 40 other stakes winners.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PRESIDENT'S 1989 NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 955

(Purpose: To increase the mandatory minimum sentences for adults who involve juveniles in drug offenses)

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside, and I have sent an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] proposes an amendment numbered 955.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . MANDATORY MINIMUM SENTENCES FOR ADULTS WHO INVOLVE JUVENILES IN DRUG OFFENSES.

(a) DISTRIBUTION TO PERSONS UNDER AGE TWENTY-ONE.—Section 405 of the Controlled Substances Act is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by striking "Except to the extent a greater minimum sentence is otherwise provided by section 401(b) of this title, a term of imprisonment under this subsection shall be not less than one year." and inserting "Except to the extent a greater minimum sentence is otherwise provided by section 401(b) of this title, a term of imprisonment under this subsection shall be not less than 10 years. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the court shall not place on probation or suspend the sentence of any person sentenced under the preceding sentence and such person shall not be released during the term of such sentence."; and

(2) in subsection (b) by striking "Except to the extent a greater minimum sentence is otherwise provided by section 401(b) of this title, a term of imprisonment under this subsection shall be not less than one year." and inserting "Except to the extent a greater minimum sentence is otherwise provided by section 401(b) of this title, a term of imprisonment under this subsection shall be not less than 20 years. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the court shall not place on probation or suspend the sentence of any person sentenced under the preceding sentence and such person shall not be released during the term of such sentence.".

(b) EMPLOYMENT OF PERSONS UNDER 18 YEARS OF AGE.—Section 405B of the Controlled Substances Act is amended—

(1) in subsection (b) by striking "Except to the extent a greater minimum sentence is otherwise provided, a term of imprisonment under this subsection shall be not less than one year." and inserting "Except to the extent a greater minimum sentence is otherwise provided by section 401(b) of this title, a term of imprisonment under this subsection shall be not less than 10 years. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the court shall not place on probation or suspend the sentence of any person sentenced under the preceding sentence and such person shall not be released during the term of such sentence"; and

(2) in subsection (c) by striking "Except to the extent a greater minimum sentence is otherwise provided, a term of imprisonment under this subsection shall be not less than one year." and inserting "Except to the extent a greater minimum sentence is otherwise provided by section 401(b) of this title, a term of imprisonment under this subsection shall be not less than 20 years. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the court shall not place on probation or suspend the sentence of any person sentenced under the preceding sentence and such person shall not be released during the term of such sentence.".

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, this is a very simple amendment. It is an amendment that we adopted in the Omnibus Drug Act of 1988. We went to conference with the House and in the waning hours of the session the amendment was deleted. It is an amendment that I feel very strongly about. It is an amendment that imposes a mandatory prison sentence without parole for people who sell drugs to minors or who use minors in drug trafficking.

As we look at our problem with drugs and as we ponder its impact on our society and on us as a people, I think more than anything else the part of it that most enrages us, the part of it that most frightens us, is the selling of drugs to children.

Mr. President, this amendment simply requires 10 years in prison without parole for those who sell drugs to a minor. It does not matter who their daddy is or how society has done them wrong; if they sell drugs to a child and they are apprehended and convicted in the Federal system under this amendment they will go to prison for 10 years and they will serve every single day of that 10 years in prison. The second part of the amendment says that on the second offense they will serve 20 years in prison without parole.

Mr. President, if there is one thing that I have heard over and over again in more than 90 counties where I have met with the local sheriff, local police officers, the department of public safety, the drug task force, it is that we are losing the credibility of the criminal justice system because people know that they are not going to spend time in jail.

In my State, which has been famous in the past for tough justice, if someone is convicted of selling drugs to a child in the State system and they are sentenced to 10 years in jail, they are probably going to do about 11 months in prison and in all probability they are going to be right back out on the street selling drugs to a minor.

What we do here is establish a Federal standard to assure that that will not happen in the Federal system. And in doing so, we set a standard that the 50 States and the District of Columbia can then replicate.

I believe that this is an important amendment. I think under ordinary circumstances that allowing the judge to have some discretion might be good policy. But I do not believe, Mr. President, that these are ordinary circumstances. I think, given the problem that we face, that we have to have an effective deterrent, and I believe that this gives us an effective deterrent.

I urge my colleagues to adopt the amendment.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I do not intend to oppose the amendment. I would just like to lay out a few points very briefly.

We have in the last 3 years increased this offense for selling to minors, I believe, on three different occasions. Most recently in the drug bill, we went up to 5 years. And by the sentencing guidelines, there is a 5-year minimum mandatory now. That is just going into effect now.

I have no argument with the Senator from Texas in wanting to get tough with those who sell to minors. But statistically, we are building into the criminal justice system a very, very difficult dilemma.

We have thousands of minimum mandatory sentences out there now, and we are talking about taking literally years and years and years to clear the dockets and provide prison space for these folks.

But I am not going to object to it. I think it is wiser to let the sentencing guidelines, which will just go into effect beginning November 1 of this year, to work. We just bumped it up to 5 years, and now we are going to do it to 10 without even having moved on the 5 years.

Again, I would rather not have the amendment, but I understand the intention of the Senator. It is not something I have any philosophic disagreement with. I have a practical concern about the ability of the system to tolerate all these minimum mandatory sentences.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I compliment the distinguished Senator from Texas. He knows that the only way we are going to ever resolve these problems is to get tough on them.

So by asking for the mandatory sentence to go to 10 years, as I understand it, he is going to get tough about it. Agreed, I am concerned, as the distinguished Senator from Delaware is, that we might not have the jail space for some of these people. But I would rather work on that problem in a separate way, and I agree with the distinguished Senator from Texas.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as I understand it, we are on a time limitation. Will the Senator from Delaware yield me 2 minutes?

Mr. BIDEN. I do not control the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the information of the Senator from Massachusetts, we are not under any time agreement. That unanimous-consent request was not offered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I certainly welcome both the interest and involvement of my friend, the Senator from Texas, in incorporating certainty and predictability in sentencing. As he is probably familiar, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, myself, and others worked hard to ensure that we were going to have certainty and predictability with the establishment of the U.S. Sentencing Commission.

During the long range of hearings that we had setting that Commission up, we were cautioned by those involved in law enforcement and the criminal justice system about instituting mandatory minimum sentences. We have seen some retreat from that position over recent years.

In a 1989 study entitled "Drugs and Justice, A System Abandoned" by the Boston Bar Association Task Force and Drugs and the Courts—I will include the study itself in the RECORD—concluded on the issue of mandatory minimums:

> Even if a dealer is not immediately released, mandatory sentences have created an intolerable trial backlog in Suffolk County, making speedy justice all but impossible. It can take up to two years to try a drug trafficking case in Suffolk Superior Court. This is exactly the wrong message to send as a deterrence to illegal drug dealers.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Boston Bar Association]

DRUGS AND JUSTICE: A SYSTEM ABANDONED

(Report and Recommendations of the Boston Bar Association Task Force on Drugs and the Courts)

PREFACE

With a current membership of about 7,000, the Boston Bar Association is one of the oldest and most prestigious bar associations in the United States. Historically the Association's activities were concentrated in two areas—its section and committee work dealing with substantive law matters and its pro bono efforts dealing with the delivery of legal services to the poor. At its October, 1988 Retreat, after a long and vigorous debate, the Council (governing body) of the Association decided to add a third focus—active involvement in civil and community affairs. At a Boston City Hall press conference later that month, the Association announced the first specific project undertaken in furtherance of this new goal—the formation of a special Task Force to examine how the criminal justice system is coping with the virtual flood of drug cases entering the system. This report contains the preliminary findings and recommendations of that Task Force.

The observations and findings of the Task Force are disturbing. Essentially the Task Force concludes that we are currently losing the War on Drugs. This is a message many will not want to hear. I would suggest, however, that we ignore it at our peril. The group conveying the message has collectively well over a hundred years of experience in dealing with our criminal justice system and no vested interest to protect or further their own ends. Their concern is only the well being of our metropolitan community. Hopefully those who share this concern will heed their warning and give prompt and careful consideration to their recommendations.

All of us who are concerned with the health of our community owe a deep debt of gratitude to the Task Force members who have contributed so much of their time to this important effort. This is particularly true with respect to the chair of the Task Force—Allan van Gestel, one of the most able and respected litigators in the city. Our thanks must also go to Allan's firm, Goodwin, Procter & Hoar, and its Chairman Bob Fraser for their unstinting support of the project, both moral and logistical, and to Pandick Press which has printed the report without charge as a public service to the bar and to the community.

EDWARD F. HINES, Jr.,
President.

INTRODUCTION

Over the past six months, the Boston Bar Association Task Force on Drugs and the Courts has conducted a study of the effect of the efforts of public safety forces to enforce the narcotics laws through the criminal justice system in the Boston metropolitan area. Some initial observations and recommendations are reflected in this interim report. We intend to file several detailed "action plans" by September 30, 1989. The focus of those plans will be discussed below.

The members of this Task Force unanimously agree that we are losing the War Against Drugs. On every battlefront the forces of law and order, whether police prosecutors, judges, probation officers, sheriffs or correction officials, are being overrun. In many cases, major elements of our criminal justice systems are in total retreat and chaos.

Of far greater concern to this Task Force is the overwhelming evidence that there is no real strategy to win any major battles, let alone the War itself. We seem determined to arrest more drug offenders without any consideration for the fact that they will not receive punishment for one to two years. We seem determined to increase mandatory sentencing provisions of our drug laws with no consideration of the substantial evidence that those laws, however well intentioned, have greatly contributed to the collapse of the criminal justice system. The infrastructure itself is literally falling apart. There are too few judges, in too few courtrooms, to send too many inmates to too few jail cells.

In all our work we have discovered one point of consensus. It is the simple truth that "justice delayed is justice denied." We speak not only of the justice for the criminal offender but also for the victims of this drug plague. We have substantial evidence that entire sections of our cities are under the increasing control of drug-based gangs. If we cannot develop a winning strategy in the very near future, then we are destined for total defeat.

The members of this Task Force can assure the Bench, the Bar and the public that recourse to traditional solutions will not have any significant impact in the years ahead. What this crisis demands is a new and invigorated will to set aside agency rivalries, turf battles and personality conflicts. The public wants this problem solved. It is up to our elected and appointed leaders, as well as all members of the legal profession, to demand a strategy based on reason, not emotion of political advantage.

This interim report will focus on much of the evidence we have received describing the magnitude of the problem. It does not, in most instances, offer any detailed program to solve these problems. That is not our purpose here. We seek merely to alert the reader that this problem requires a reaffirmation of our public will to survive as a civilized society as well as our public commitment to share in the solution.

A. OUR LOCAL CRIMINAL JUSTICE SYSTEM

The picture does not improve when we focus on our local criminal justice system.

Here there really is no system at all. Our criminal justice program aptly can be seen as the orphan of government, the wastebasket of society, for what it receives and the manner in which it is treated by almost everyone who comes in contact with it. At every level, and in all departments, we find too few people, with too little financial support, grossly inadequate facilities, shackled by inconsistent and wholly uncoordinated rulings and legislation, for the most part neglected by the executive and legislative branches of government, and ignored by a society which, through its own actions, has revealed a stunning ambivalence to the drug problem. To suggest any modification of the legislated penalties against narcotic use or sale or to suggest decriminalization in any form evokes instant reactions of extreme rejection. These reactions, however, come from the same people who won't hire, train, supervise or pay more police, won't site or build more penal or treatment facilities, won't appropriate more funding for more judges, won't fund more court and probation department support personnel, in short, won't pay for or permit in their neighborhood, any of the several extensive and expensive tools that are needed to enable our criminal justice system to effectively attack the drug problem.

Justice Holmes taught us that the law is not what judges or others say it is, but what actually happens to people who transgress the apparent behavioral code. Thus, the first and largest question to be asked is whether we really are involved in a War Against Drugs, whether society really wants or expects its criminal justice system to solve the narcotics problem. The response to date, at almost all levels, does little to suggest that it does.

The failure to address the problem of drugs in a coordinated and effective way, has overwhelmed the local criminal justice at all levels. Followers, as well as leaders, have let the system down. There is a crisis of will. Until adequate funding for each of the inter-connected parts of the criminal justice system is provided, and until major changes are introduced, the war will continue as a lost cause.

Drug arrests have increased dramatically in recent years. There are, however, few additional judges, and no additional courtrooms, to try existing or new cases, and grossly inadequate jail space to hold those awaiting trial and after sentence. Because there is no space in the jails, many drug dealers who are awaiting trial are released back into the neighborhoods legitimizing the charge of "revolving door justice". Even if a dealer is not immediately released, mandatory sentences have created an intolerable trial backlog in Suffolk County, making speedy justice all but impossible. It can take up to two years to try a drug trafficking case in Suffolk Superior Court. This is exactly the wrong message to send as a deterrence to illegal drug dealers.

Speedy dispositions of drug cases are not possible under existing circumstances. This leads the residents of communities most impacted to identify the criminal justice system with the problem rather than the solution. Until swift and certain justice is possible, public confidence in the courts will continue to erode.

Today's drug problem is not only different in degree, it is different in kind. Crack, a relatively new drug, can easily be manufactured in the home, creating a growing cottage industry. Barriers to entry into the crack business are virtually nonexistent. Violence on our streets has escalated to an unprecedented level. Sophisticated weaponry, particularly automatic weapons, have proliferated to protect and expand drug networks. Innocent victims have been caught in the deadly crossfire of a private war between competing drug gangs. Drug dealers will become more bold as the perception grows that society is impotent to stop them.

Tragically, drug traffickers have become role models emulated by the young. It is difficult to say "no" to drugs when profits are so large and meaningful punishment only an abstraction.

The criminal justice system can be saved, but only if public indifference to the problem can be moved out of the way.

B. TASK FORCE RESOURCES

Our study included conversations with a wide and diverse number of individuals experienced, involved and interested in all facets of the problem. In each instance, everyone we spoke with was extremely cooperative and supportive of the effort. Included were representatives of Boston Mayor Raymond Flynn; representatives of the Boston Police Department; judges at all levels of the court system, including the Supreme Judicial Court, the Chief Administrative Justice, and the Superior and District Court Departments of the Trial Court; key personnel in the Suffolk County District Attorney's Office; the Sheriff of Suffolk County; the Attorney General and members of his staff; the Governor's Legal Counsel; representatives of the Corrections Department; public and private defense counsel; and private citizen representatives from affected neighborhoods. Visits were made to District Courts in the metropolitan area, the Boston Municipal Court, the Suffolk Superior Court and the Special N Part Narcotics Prosecution Court Project in New York City. Numerous publications from federal and state legislative groups, criminal justice agencies, academics, editorial writers, the local and national press, and others have been gathered and studied. Statutes, court decisions and rules of practice have been reviewed.

C. SIGNIFICANT OBSERVATIONS

In the process, we observed the following:

1. The illegal narcotics problem itself is overwhelming. There are too many narcotics users, too many narcotics dealers, too many narcotics traffickers and too many offshoot narcotics related crimes. The inability to keep illegal narcotics out of our maximum security prisons demonstrates the utter futility of attempting to seal off the borders of Massachusetts or the United States. There are simply too many ways and too many willing participants to ever hope to mount a successful interdiction program which will eliminate the supply of narcotics. In fact, the evidence suggests that as we have stepped up interdiction, the supply of drugs have grown steadily more plentiful, of better quality and of lower prices.

There are misunderstandings at all levels about drugs and the problem they cause. Simplistic solutions overlook the fact that different responses are required to different drugs, different uses of the same drug, and different users. Heroin, for example, with its reliance on needles and tie-in with AIDS, is quite different from cocaine. Snorting cocaine is quite different than smoking crack.

2. Law enforcement agencies appear to be losing an uphill battle and are themselves becoming buried and battered in the process. The largest police department in the metropolitan area, the Boston Police Department, reports making arrests on narcotics charges at a current rate in excess of 7,000 per year. There is no way that 7,000 people can be tried each year in the courts of Suffolk county, or jailed or treated, should it turn out that they warrant or need one of the other.

The Boston Police Department is incapacitated by a Drug Control Unit that is too small, having only approximately 60 officers assigned to it. The DCU is overburdened by court appearances, its officers often being called to testify in multiple courts at the same time on the same day.

Language problems, Hispanic, Oriental, and others, and complications presented by justifiable constitutional limitations, make it nearly impossible for the Boston Police Department to conduct an effective wiretap investigation of a narcotics ring. Seemingly simple things like the safe storage of drugs, money, equipment, and even automobiles, seized by the Boston Police Department present immense problems. The officers assigned to the Drug Control Unit are subjected, on a daily basis, to ever-increasing and deadly personal risks as the greater use of weapons and violence pervades and infects the illegal drug trade. Temptations abound and the potential for corruption within police departments is frightening.

And, as the Boston Police Department gets more sophisticated and more effective, the Balkanized local governmental structure in the greater Boston metropolitan area invites those conducting illegal drug activities to avoid that sophistication by moving their operations a few miles or a few subway stops over the city line to Quincy, or Cambridge, or Chelsea, or Revere, or any of the other nearby, but wholly-separate governmental entities in the metropolitan community.

Perhaps most significant of our observations about the law enforcement side was the near total lack of trust, cooperation and coordination among and between the agencies involved. In Boston for example, drug arrests are made by the Boston Police, the Metropolitan District Commission Police, the State Police, the MBTA Police, Housing Authority Police and Federal Drug Enforcement Agency officers, to name only the most active of the group. Those various police agencies seem in constant turf wars and appear wholly distrustful of each other. Certainly they do little to work in any coordinated manner. Not only is this wasteful and duplicative of resources, it is also extremely dangerous for those who are performing undercover operations. On more than one occasion, officers from one force have come close to arresting or shooting at officers from another force that they did not realize were involved in undercover activities. We observe the anomalous situation where the head of the Federal Drug Enforcement Agency in Boston and the newly designated United States Attorney want to join in combat with the Boston Police and the request is rejected.

3. The situation with regard to jails, houses of correction and prison facilities is complicated, expensive and wholly inadequate for the task. The jail problem is probably the biggest current impediment to an effective drug program. Setting aside for the moment the serious societal question of who should be imprisoned, for what, and whether we imprison too many people, it is absolutely clear that police departments, district attorneys' offices and courts are being asked to arrest, prosecute and incarcerate vastly more people than the existing jail facilities can ever hope to accommodate.

The situation is as bad for post-trial incarceration as it is for pre-trial detainees. Almost every local jail has, or is about to have, imposed upon it, by some federal or state court order, a cap or limitation on the number of people it can accept and house. These orders, valid in every instance, come from a variety of different courts and different judges, are not coordinated in any way, and seem oblivious to the realities and burdens placed on the sheriffs and courts which have to deal with the situation.

The example at the Charles Street Jail in Boston is revealing. There a Federal judge has furthered an earlier order of that court regulating conditions at the jail which has resulted in an effective upper limit of 342 inmates. A justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, has issued orders with regard to the steps which can or must be taken by the Suffolk County Sheriff and the Superior Court in attempting to deal with problems when the cap is reached. Those orders require that certain kinds of pre-trial detainees must remain in jail, while others can be considered for release to halfway facilities, or even the street, at the times when the cap is to be exceeded. Until recently, those included among the group who could not be released were people awaiting trial on charges of operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol, a legalized drug. The result was bizarre. People charged with trafficking in cocaine, an illegal drug, were eligible for release to halfway houses, and in some instances to the street, because there wasn't enough room at the Charles Street Jail, while people charged with operating under the influence of a legal drug were kept locked up.

Even more peculiar is the result that, in order to protect the constitutional rights of prisoners to a single cell at the Charles Street Jail, the Sheriff has had to move prisoners, at enormous expense and personnel dislocation, to other jails throughout the Commonwealth. When moved, however, the detainees often end up in facilities in other counties not subjected to the Federal court order and, therefore, in cell situations with multiple prisoners, under conditions far worse than if they were simply double-bunked at the Charles Street Jail.

The ability of the state and local governments to construct prisons is immensely hampered by the rigid laws which were enacted during the tenure of the Ward Commission, particularly Chapter 579 of the Acts of 1980. Worse is the reluctance of the General Court to fund the construction, and the unwillingness of the people themselves, often acting with the assistance of their local state legislators, to allow the facilities to be built in their communities. The construction of jails is a very expensive, time-consuming operation and, it seems, as soon as a new jail is built, it is immediately filled. The numbers being arrested will probably increase rather than decrease, thus still further exaggerating and aggravating the jail problems. No one, however, seems to be considering alternative sentencing for drug offenders.

As bad as the situation may be with the siting, funding and construction of prisons, the problem of treatment facilities is much worse. There is almost no attention or funds, being made available for treatment.

4. The District Courts are the courts closest to the people in our system. The inner-city District Courts, particularly those in Dorchester, Roxbury, West Roxbury and Chelsea, are being swamped with proceedings related to narcotics arrests. Similar problems exist in other urban District Courts, particularly in Springfield, New Bedford, Lawrence, Worcester and Lowell. Of the 69 District Courts in the system, the nine listed here account for nearly 50% of all drug cases.

The Court buildings are, for the most part, in deplorable physical condition, understaffed by judges and greatly lacking in sufficient support personnel. The allocation of judicial resources is complicated by the fact that judicial vacancies remain too long unfilled. New judges under last year's Judicial Needs Bill, Chapter 206 of the Acts of 1988, are only now starting to be appointed by the Governor. Their compensation, however, has not been fully funded yet. Additional court support personnel are also in great need. Under an economy measure in the FY '89 budget, vacancies in court support personnel that occur by attrition may not be filled. This has caused a 10% diminution in the number of court employees in a system which needs more, not fewer, people in support positions. An equally serious complication is that although judges can be moved around from court to court under certain circumstances, the same movement of clerk personnel cannot be accomplished under present laws.

It is the belief of some in the District Court Department that a different approach is taken to the inner-city courts from those in the more affluent suburban cities and towns. Conditions that would not be tolerated in the less urban community courts are the routine in places like Dorchester, Roxbury, West Roxbury and Chelsea. These courts have no particular supportive constituency and the neighborhoods themselves seem unable to generate concern on the part of those controlling the situation.

5. The Superior Court in Suffolk County suffers from similar limitations in resources, facilities and support personnel to those which plague the District Courts. There are not enough Superior Court judges, nor are there enough clerks, stenographers and support personnel to assist them. Like the District Court system, the provisions for the Superior Court in the Judicial Needs Bill have been abandoned in the current fiscal crisis. Judicial positions created almost a year ago are just now being filled, and those judicial offices remain significantly unfunded in the proposed budget.

Demands for creating specialized narcotics courts or night courts can hardly be taken seriously when present vacancies and deficiencies in the courts remain unattended to.

Another complicating factor in the Superior Court is the implementation of the Supreme Judicial Court's Time Standards Order. This plan, designed to reduce the huge backlog in civil cases, is already straining the system to the core. Any shift of resources to the criminal side will surely cause that laudable and necessary program to fail.

6. There is concern that the criminal defense bar, both public and private, is, for the most part, too small, too inexperienced and too underfunded to be able to effectively handle the crush of business which could come about if corrections were made in the other parts of the system. Compensation for private counsel, engaged in cases through the auspices of the Committee for Public Counsel Services, remains at $25.00 per hour for out-of-court time and $35.00 per hour for in-court time. These amounts have not been adjusted since 1981. Compensation for entry level prosecutors is equally poor. The Suffolk County District attorney's office starts its lawyers at as low as $21,780 per year.

There is very little to attract lawyers to criminal defense or prosecution work of the nature needed in the District Courts, and even the Superior Court. Compensation is low, the conditions are as poor as most clients, and, for the defense bar at least, community opprobrium is all too frequent. There is even less to hold them in those kinds of positions when their colleagues can practice civil trial work, or non-trial law, in elegant downtown office buildings and command 2, 3 and 4 times as much in compensation for such "clean" legal work.

7. The laws, decisions and court rules that deal with narcotics cases are a hodgepodge of inconsistency, adopted with the best intentions, but resulting in as much aggravation to the problem as the unwillingness of the other two branches of government to provide the necessary funding and support for the courts. Mandatory sentencing is perhaps the most pernicious of the problems. Intended to show a toughness and intolerance for the evils of narcotic violations, the effect is to clog the courts and make them even less able to handle the crush of business because the opportunity to resolve cases by plea bargaining is all but eliminated. Criminal defense lawyers are forced to "play for the fumble" by raising every conceivable defense and insisting on a full and complete trial in the hopes that the government somewhere along the line will stumble in a way that will provide relief for the accused.

Laws relating to the allocation of jurisdiction, even despite the recent Cedeno decision by the supreme Judicial Court, remain uncertain. Bail presents similar problems. If it is set too high, it can't be met and the people involved must be held in jail awaiting trial. The jails, however, are subject to caps and are already crowded beyond the overflowing stage and, therefore, there is no real room. Thus, courts must consciously keep bail at a lower level so that people can post it and return to the street while awaiting trial. As noted earlier, this creates the "revolving door justice" phenomenon, a legitimate concern in the neighborhoods where drug trafficking is rampant, and a source of demoralization and anger for police and other public officials.

8. Given the problems in arresting, prosecuting, trying and punishing those involved with illegal drugs, thoughts turn to the other side, which involves treatment. Here, like everything else, there is far too little available. There is almost no treatment that is realistically up to the task of attempting to cure those who have become seriously addicted. Certainly, there is essentially no treatment in our prisons. Treatment facilities, however, like everything else are expensive and their siting, because people don't like those people who go there for treatment, is as difficult as siting a prison.

9. Even in relatively small and technical areas, problems abound. The Public Health Drug Analysis Laboratory at Jamaica Plain analyzes most of the materials seized in Boston from drug dealers. The laboratory is too slow. The average response time as of this writing is about six weeks. Judges' suggest even longer delays, predicated upon statements by prosecutors that seek trial continuances because the lab reports are not back. It is unclear, however, whether the problem isn't perhaps a bit more complicated. There certainly seems to be room for improvement at the laboratory, a situation that should not be terribly expensive. Simply adjusting the lines of communication between the laboratory, the police and the District Attorney's office would be an easy start.

At the same time, it appears that on some occasions, those responsible for picking up and delivering the drug results, the police department generally, may have been using the laboratory as an excuse for their own purposes. Similarly, there may be occasions in which a prosecutor who is not really ready for trial for another reason uses the laboratory as a convenient scapegoat. Improvements at the laboratory and tightening up on supervision at both the police departments and in the District Attorney's office would seem a simple cure.

10. There is a significant lack of coordination between and among federal, state and local agencies; federal legislative and state legislative bodies; the federal executive branch and the state executive branch; and federal courts and state courts, in their dealings with drug issues. Given the magnitude of the problem and the immense amounts of money that is being spent in connection with it, it is unfortunate that a vastly greater degree of inter-agency, interdepartment and inter-government cooperation cannot be fostered. Many metropolitan areas run coordinated drug task forces where resources of people, information and statutory power are pooled. This not only prevents confusion and waste, but makes available to local authorities the federal resources and forfeiture laws that work.

11. Interdiction, the prevention of the importation of drugs into this country, is a failed effort. The United States' borders are far too large and far too vulnerable to be able to be policed effectively. The American public is far too willing to pay for drugs that are brought in. The business community cites drug use by employees as one of its greatest problems. Foreign countries where drugs are produced are too small, too weak, too corrupt, or too antagonistic towards the United states to mount any effect programs within their own boundaries to control the drug lords who start the entire chain. And even if any of that were effective, it seems certain that the ingenuity of the criminal mind, given the immense temptation of the huge amounts of money involved, would enable those criminals to produce the product within the boundaries of the United States if the borders ever could be sealed.

12. The present approach, criminalizing everything, has not succeeded. It has made many criminals extremely rich, has increased the number of offshoot crimes and violence, and has placed many of the most needy neighborhoods in total jeopardy, held hostage to drug trafficking and the misery that follows in its wake. This Committee concludes that locally, at least, the problem cannot be solved. Like the medical profession's battle with cancer, the most that can happen is that it can be better controlled and managed. Even the latter, however, will only be a realistic possibility if society demonstrates that it really cares enough to support the effort and demands action from its leaders. We have serious doubts that the Massachusetts Legislature or the Executive, in the absence of strong public demand, will appropriate the funds and revise the legislation necessary to attempt to effectively control the problem. Nevertheless, we reach the following conclusions and make the following recommendations. With regard to each major recommendation, we intend to prepare or commission, and publish, a detailed plan for its implementation. We submit our recommendations now because we believe them important and believe that they will help to provide public understanding and a basis for free and open discussion.

D. CONCLUSIONS

It is clear from what we have observed, that the present strategy is not succeeding; that we need a new set of tools and approaches. To develop those tools, to select policies which have a chance of success, we need to know much more than we do today. The Committee, therefore, publicizes the findings of Mark A.R. Kleiman and Kerry D. Smith of the Program in Criminal Justice Policy and Management at the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University. In a January 31, 1989, paper in progress, entitled "State and Local Drug Enforcement: In Search of a Strategy" Messrs. Kleiman and Smith said:

"In principle, the right way to choose a drug policy for a city would be to describe the problem, invent some alternative approaches to addressing that problem, predict the costs and the likely result of each approach, and choose the least painful. Then, after a while, one could measure the results and compare them with the predictions. Unexpected results or new situations would call for changes in policy.

"In practice, no city has anything resembling a quantitatively accurate description of its own drug problem. Nor is there a well-worked-out body of theory or experience to allow predictions of the likely results of alternative approaches.

"Theory and experience agree that neither high-level enforcement nor unfocused retail-level enforcement is likely to contribute much to solving the problem under current big-city conditions. Yet local drug enforcement consists primarily of a mix of those two strategies. A growing share of local law enforcement budgets is thus being committed to programs that are both unproven and implausible.

"Law enforcement agencies, like boxers, need to learn to fight their weight. In a city that has a small crack market, for instance, investing early and heavily may succeed in keeping the market small or driving it out. Where a large crack market already exists, consideration should be given to whether even maximal efforts are likely to have much effect. There will come a point of diminishing returns, when throwing more police resources into the pot will no longer produce significant social benefits. Refining the techniques for making those calculations poses a substantial intellectual and practical challenge.

"Crackdowns focused on particular neighborhoods have some theoretical advantages, and a little experience to suggest they can work. But the extent to which they simply push the problem around is undetermined. For neighborhood crackdowns to be a viable citywide strategy, it must be possible after a time to move enforcement resources to a new area and repeat the process. That, in turn, requires both the development in the crackdown area of indigenous capacity to resist the return of drug dealing and a willingness on the part of residents to see the focus of police attention shift once the problem has subsided. How local governments can create that capacity and that willingness remains an open problem.

"Drug markets dominated by warring youth gangs will leave more corpses behind them than drug markets not so dominated. Routine drug enforcement may have little to contribute to gang control; police need to learn how to make life particularly miserable for gang-related drug dealers (and gang members committing other crimes).

"There is some evidence—not yet much—that putting police in the classroom as "drug education" teachers can reduce the rate at which adolescents are initiated into illicit drug use. Whether such programs are an efficient use of police work-years depends in part on the value of alternative uses of the same work-years. If current drug activities are already overloading the capacity of prosecutors, courts, and jails, the arrests sacrificed by putting some police in classrooms may not matter much.

"Considering how much of the public concern about drugs centers on the link between drugs and crime, it is surprising how ill-designed current policies are to discourage the long drug/crime careers characteristic of heroin users (and almost certainly of some crack users). Mandatory drug abstinence for drug-involved offenders, verified by testing and backed with the threat of reincarceration, ought to be a centerpiece of any serious 'career criminal' or 'dangerous offender' program.

"Research, which has contributed relatively little to the current decisionmaking process, seems ill-positioned to contribute much more. The most obvious need is for a set of plausible, computable models of local drug sales activity as a function of local enforcement activity. This would likely involve some combination of microeconomics and operations research.

"But better models will be of limited practical use unless someone collects the data to feed them with. Numbers of users, numbers of sellers, numbers of transactions, total revenue; all of these data are needed, and needed down to the neighborhood level. This requires some very expensive data collection: surveys, street ethnography, and the development of user, ex-user, and potential-user panels. No police chief will ever know as much about the cocaine market in his or her city as the local manager for R.J. Reynolds knows about the cigarette market, but we can be, and need to be, much closer to that position that we now are.

"One way to start would be to collect more information about drug enforcement. Local, state and national data collection systems often fail to make essential distinctions or to be kept in comparable categories; the Uniform Crime Reports, for example, lump heroin and cocaine together. Questions of the form, "How many crack sellers were arrested in Chicago last year, and how many aggregate years of confinement were they sentenced to?" need to be routinely answerable before any serious study can be made of the results of alternative strategies.

"Beginning to collect at least the minimal level of information would suggest a new level of seriousness about developing responses to the drug problem that produce publicly valuable results. Until then, state and local drug enforcement will remain a collection of activities in search of a strategy."

E. SHORT-TERM RECOMMENDATIONS

1. We conclude that it is far more important that justice be swift, than that sentences be long. Adjustments must be made and programs instituted in the District and Suffolk Superior Court Departments of the Trial Court to provide swift, efficient and certain justice. This should include consideration of a fast-track drug offender's program in the Superior Court and a modification of the New York N Part approach for the District Courts. This system is based on a speedy initial hearing program. In New York, laboratory results are produced within 6 days of arrest. At that time a defendant is given an opportunity to plead to an offense for which he will face a less severe penalty or be directly indicted on the most serious charge. District Courts should adopt a similar system supported by speedy test results, swift indictments and the opportunity to plead to a less serious offense in the District Court prior to an indictment.

Early intervention and more careful screening of cases should be instituted in the District Courts by experienced Superior Court Assistant District Attorneys in an effort to dispose of more cases at that level and to determine if the more serious trafficking cases can, or should, be the subject of direct indictments in the Superior Court. The continued use of probable cause hearings in the District Courts is recommended, but they must be tied to better case screening and a better allocation of judicial resources to conduct those hearings, particularly in Roxbury, Dorchester and Chelsea. At the same time, particularly if there is to be a fast-track drug offenders program and more direct indictments, there ought to be assigned 3-4 judge teams to Suffolk Superior Court, each team to sit for 3-6 months, with one judge hearing pleas, deciding motions and assigning trial dates, and the others presiding on trials. Both the District Court N Part type program and the Superior Court Drug offenders plan will also require the infusion of money and resources at the laboratory, in order to produce fast and accurate test results.

Attention must be given by the Governor and the Legislature to the implementation of last year's Judicial Needs Bill, such that it gets fully funded and the judges authorized thereunder are promptly appointed. There will be a need for an immediate addition of new court clerk and probation office personnel in those courts most seriously affected (Roxbury, Dorchester, West Roxbury, Chelsea, Suffolk Superior, etc.).

2. Means should be devised for coordination among the critical federal, state and city agencies and among all affected parties. In particular, there should be a major coordination among police departments in the Metropolitan Boston area somewhat like the Allied governments got together and cooperated against a common enemy in World War II. Every opportunity to develop a joint task force should be considered, even if it means hiring more Boston patrolmen or promoting them to detective rank. There also should be coordination among the judges in the various courts including the Supreme Judicial Court, the Appeals Court, the Superior Court, the District Court, the Boston Municipal Court, the Housing Court and the Federal Court. Similar kinds of cooperation and coordination should be worked out with the offices of the Suffolk, Middlesex. Norfolk and Essex County District Attorney's office, the U.S. Attorney's office and the State Attorney General's office. There should be established a permanent coordinating group with representatives of courts, prosecutors, police departments, the organized Bar and neighborhood spokesmen which meets on a regular basis to discuss problems of common interest and avoids inconsistent and counter-productive efforts. A similar multi-interest group should be created to review and assist in the drafting and passage of related legislation.

3. Massive public educational programs about the function, role and workings of the criminal justice system and all of its branches, including explanations of the roles of prosecutors, defense counsel, District Courts, Superior Courts, Sheriffs, jails, Probation Departments and explanations of legal principles, such as those relating to bail, jurisdiction, sentencing, constitutional rights, etc., etc., should be undertaken. The Boston Globe, The Boston Herald and the major local television and radio stations should be asked to set aside their rivalries and join in this effort. A Special Education Committee or the Criminal Justice Section of the Boston Bar Association could be asked to attend to this task and to coordinate its activities with the Boston Against Drugs program already in place.

4. In order to bring the most affected communities into the process and to provide them with support, the formation of Community Advisory groups should be encouraged in order to coordinate and meet on a regular basis with representatives of the Courts, of the District Attorney's office, of the Police Department, and of such other agencies as may deal with the problem at any given time. The Mayor should consider the appointment of a Deputy Mayor specifically charged to lead this effort.

5. The Police Department needs more, and better trained, officers in its Drug Control Unit. More senior officers need to pay greater attention to the day-to-day activities of the Drug Control officers. The City should provide its Police Department with the facilities necessary for the Drug Control Unit to operate efficiently. These facilities should include ample and secure room for the safekeeping of drugs, money, and other things recovered, and the disposal thereof. There must be far greater coordination between the District Attorney's office and the Police Department so that the officers are given better guidance on the important legal and constitutional principles that apply to their daily activities.

But most of all there needs to be a leadership effort by the Police Commissioner to redirect the police approach to the drug problem. This redirection should be along the lines which proved so successful a decade and more ago when the current Commissioner led the Community Disorders Unit in the battle against racial violence. At one time, as fire bombing and violence engulfed several neighborhoods, that battle too seemed beyond the power of the police alone to win; prejudice and racial hatred was too ingrained in Boston's ethnic neighborhoods, went the prevailing wisdom, for the police and the criminal justice system to turn matters around. But turn them around they did. Through a process of open information exchange between citizens and police, through building a sense of public trust, through never waivering decisions of Superior Court judges in their support of what was lawful and right, the police and the justice system finally made the difference.

It can be done again, but it will require application of the same principles, building the same trust and opening up and keeping open the same informational exchange between citizens and police. It will require true community policing, police that become a part of the neighborhood to which they are assigned. It will require citizens willing to help and assist and inform those police. It will require close coordination with the Drug Control Unit. It will require from the police and courts assurance that punishment for offenders will be swift and certain. It will require the development of ways to mobilize the resources of the local community to work closely with the Police Department. Combined with the other reforms to the criminal justice system suggested by this report, all of these requirements should be capable of being met successfully.

6. The prison system is perhaps the largest single impediment to the effectiveness of the present program. Its solution is complex and expensive. Nevertheless, early attention must be given to commandeering sites to hold pretrial detainees; much more speedy construction of modular prison units must be accomplished; and, as the Governor has recently urged, changes in the Ward Commission law, Chapter 579 of the Acts of 1980, must be made to permit faster attention to the construction of new facilities. The Legislature should consider requiring a prison inmate impact statement before any new law becomes effective which would result in increasing the prison population. The Governor and the Mayor must each be convinced to proceed much more aggressively with the siting of facilities and must not permit localized opposition to stand in the way. The Mayor's Office should undertake an immediate program to inventory and identify all unused or underutilized city property to locate sites which can readily be converted to emergency pretrial holding facilities. A similar project is needed to develop locations for sentenced Suffolk County inmates. The Governor should conduct the same kind of inventory for the same reasons, at the state level. The Federal court should be asked to re-examine its orders regarding the Suffolk County Jail upon completion of the new facility.

In addition, and clearly much more important, there should be careful attention given to alternative sentencing and punishment techniques. Programs should be devised to control and regulate offenders outside of prisons, using the latter only as a last resort.

7. The laws that relate to drug violations should be subjected to an immediate study with the object of clarifying them, coordinating them, and putting them together in a cohesive whole. In that regard, serious attention should be given to eliminating, or modifying radically, mandatory sentencing to better facilitate plea bargaining and the processing of cases in court. The laws should be amended to permit judges the discretion to override mandatory sentencing for first time offenders and those who cooperate with the prosecution. Defining the crimes themselves in a way that realistically attends to the situation as it exists is equally important. A more clear allocation of jurisdiction between and among the courts is needed. A forfeiture bill, such as that sought by the Attorney General, is highly recommended. At the same time we consider the proposed change in drug sentencing to include a ⅝ parole requirement, rather than the more usual ⅓ provision, to be counterproductive.

8. The Suffolk County District Attorney's office has a unique opportunity to play a leadership role in the fight against drugs. The assistants involved in drug cases need better training and supervision and must be encouraged to work much more closely with the Police Department and neighborhood groups. Far greater flexibility in charging on drug cases should be encouraged. Compensation adjustments are needed to attract people to longer terms of service as prosecutors.

Similarly, the criminal defense bar needs augmentation and support. Among other things, the budget of the Committee for Public Counsel Services ought to be expanded so that the payment for private counsel can be brought up to more realistic levels above the $25.00/$35.00 per hour rate currently in effect.

9. The Boston Bar Association ought to give consideration to the creation of a Drug Corps or a Criminal Justice Corps whereby the private civil bar would be encouraged to support, with people, a program that makes bright, young lawyers available: to assist the District Attorney's office as prosecutorial aides; to advise the Police Department as law enforcement counsellors on search warrants, wire taps, etc.; to help the Committee for Public Counsel Services with legal research and case preparation; and to aid the Courts, as research and case management assistants. This would serve the purpose of getting some of the rest of the Bar involved directly with the criminal justice system and, hopefully, would have a spill-over effect that would cause an upgrading and greater support for that system.

F. LONG-TERM RECOMMENDATIONS

1. The drug problem is overwhelming and devastating in its effect, not only on Metropolitan Boston, but on Massachusetts and the country as a whole. It is contributing significantly to the breakdown in the criminal justice system. It is in danger of seriously corrupting law enforcement entities. It is causing the expenditure of immense amounts of tax dollars in a losing fight. It is making criminals immensely wealthy and destroying our most vulnerable and needy neighborhoods. Under all of the circumstances, it would be an abdication of responsibility for this Committee not to recommend that a very serious, long-term and detailed study based upon information derived from our conclusion about the need for hard data, should be made of the basic strategic approach we are following in dealing with narcotic drugs.

It may be that expecting the problem to be cured by the criminal justice system is wholly unrealistic and that, in fact, the problem is destroying the criminal justice system and at great expense. It may also be that the problem lies at the other end of the scale and that, in fact, an approach aimed at arresting and jailing all users would be a more effective way to break the drug culture than concentrating only on dealers and suppliers. Society's ambivalence about the use of drugs and its utter unwillingness to date to pay the high cost of having the criminal justice system effectively address the problem, makes the study of basic strategies logical and proper for this Committee to advocate.

2. Our study has revealed a criminal justice system which, wholly separate from the strains imposed upon it by the drug problem, is in desperate condition. It truly has become the orphan of government. Resources, both personnel and physical, and of all kinds, are needed at all levels. There are not enough judges, and they are not compensated well enough. There are not enough clerks and probation personnel, and they are not compensated well enough. Laws have been passed which inhibit the efficient utilization and mobilization of personnel resources to affected courts and communities. Court buildings are crumbling and falling down around the people who attempt to work in them. The whole system has been grossly neglected. The courts lack an advocate and a constituency. As a result, the system is archaic, medieval, bizarre in its details—wholly inadequate to its high mission of administering and delivering justice to our society.

A massive effort must be made by responsible parties and institutions to develop and build a constituency of support for our state justice system. The courts are not just another agency, they are a co-equal branch of government which, much more than the legislative and executive branches, exist to protect the rights of the people. The Boston Bar Association ought to devise a long-term program, perhaps in conjunction with the Massachusetts Bar Association, whereby ongoing and substantial support for the justice system is made a regular and expected duty of every lawyer who practices in the state. Ways must be found to educate and build a constituency to rebuild this vital branch of our state government.

3. American society imprisons offenders at a far greater rate than any other non-communist society except South Africa and yet, at the same time, we seem to have a crime rate that generally outstrips our civilized neighbors. It is not unusual leniency that distinguishes ourselves from less violent nations. It has been asserted that the United States differs from other industrial societies in several dimensions of social and economic life that are crucial in accounting for our high levels of criminal violence. These include a wider spread of inequality, greater extremes of poverty and insecurity, the relative absence of effective policies to deal with unemployment and subemployment, greater disruption of community and family ties through job destruction and migration, and fewer supports for families and individuals in the face of economic and technological change and material deprivation. Social mobility contributes greatly to the breakdown in societal mores and sociological control.

It is certainly true that the growth and threat of drug-related criminal activities is at its greatest in those communities that suffer most from our extremes of inequality and the wide disparities between the rich and the poor. If, as seems likely, the causes behind the vulnerability of our poorest, most segregated neighborhoods to drugs lie in the social deprivation from which these communities suffer, the lack of decent, affordable housing, good jobs, and an adequate public education system, then the solution must lie in improvements to these areas as well. Simply building more prisons and writing more laws will not be a sensible or productive means of addressing the problem in the long run if major efforts are not begun to improve the conditions of inequality and deprivation under which too many Americans presently live.

MAY 23, 1989.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this situation that we are confronting in Boston is replicated in many jurisdictions, and certainly in New York, New York City.

One of the outstanding district attorneys in the country, Bob Morgenthau, who has been about as tough on criminals and has been as tough at obtaining sentences as any district attorney, has cautioned Congress about moving in this area just to demonstrate that somehow Congress is being tough on the drug sellers.

So I had hoped, Mr. President, that we would have an opportunity to examine this concept as it relates to our criminal justice system, the speediness of trials, and whether we are really going to achieve the objectives which I share with the Senator from Texas.

We have now seen, as a result of the mandatory sentencing provisions that we included on the omnibus drug bill last year, the judicial conferences of the 3d, 8th, 9th, and 10th circuits, of the courts, have adopted resolutions condemning mandatory minimum sentences, just like those being proposed, as being counterproductive in trying to ensure swift and speedy justice for those that are involved in drug trafficking. Copies of those resolutions were included in the Senator from Delaware's remarks and I commend them to every Member of the Senate.

I could go on, Mr. President. I understand what the Senator from Texas is attempting to achieve. But I do think that the kinds of concerns which have been expressed by the chairman of the committee and those who are involved in the prosecution of these criminals, prosecutors like Bob Morgenthau, who takes a place second to none in this country in being tough on drug traffickers, realize now that as many as 60 percent of those who are actually arrested for trafficking are out, and the principal reason that they are out is because the courts are jammed. And the principal reason the courts are jammed is because of minimum sentencing.

We are trying to address the jamming in the courts with a number of reforms which are included in the amendments of the Senator from Delaware on the criminal justice system. But I would just caution those that want to ensure that those that are trafficking and selling to children—and all of us realize now the penalty is 5 years—we put the mandatory in.

I am just wondering how many others that are caught up in the whole drug syndrome that may not either be tried or may be out on the streets, and are involved in drug trafficking while awaiting trial.

So I just mention those brief points, Mr. President, so we have some idea of what the basic substantive issue is.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I do not want to get into a long debate here. Let me first say that one of the reasons our courts are so crowded is we keep trying the same people over and over again.

The advantage of my amendment is if we try them once and we convict them, we do not have to try them again for 10 years. In my State, we try the same people over and over and over again because they are not being kept in prison.

It is true that we are moving in the direction of tougher sentencing, but the Senate expressed itself very strongly on this bill last December. We adopted a 10-year mandatory sentence. That, then, died in conference. As long as we are debating the drug bill, it gives us an opportunity to go back to our position.

Also, let me remind my colleagues that we just provided over $1 billion to build new prison space. We are going to build almost 24,000 new prison beds. Who better to put in these beds than people who are selling drugs to children?

So, I do not understand how mandatory sentencing, 10 years in prison without parole, crowds the court docket. In fact, I think it lessens the crowding by assuring we only try these guys every 10 years on the first offense and every 20 years on the second one.

Second, building all this new prison space, I believe that people who sell drugs to children ought to be first in line in getting an opportunity to use it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Texas is right about who he wants to fill the beds first. I might add it was the Senator from Massachusetts who first introduced the notion of same time for the same crime, setting up the sentencing commission so the judges would not have discretion so when we gave them a sentence they went to jail, they did not get out on parole or probation.

So we are all in agreement here. The problem is—and I am prepared to accept the amendment—that the RECORD should show several things. One, that of all those folks in Texas and Delaware and Massachusetts and Utah that we all want to put away, 98 to 99 percent of them are under State jurisdiction, and this law will not affect them at all. It will have absolutely no impact on them at all.

As a matter of fact, one of our problems is that, until the other night, if we followed President Bush's proposal of not providing significantly larger numbers of prosecutors and not providing a significantly larger number of police, we were not even able to or willing to try those cases in Federal court where we had jurisdiction and where they were ours. We were passing them off to the State courts.

That is why the State court dockets are so crowded, in part because the Federal Government is not imposing the penalties that they could impose if they wished to. The Federal Government says the reason we are not is we do not have enough prosecutors, we do not have enough people in the system to do it.

The Senator from Texas has been forthright and helpful in providing, notwithstanding the fact there has been some opposition downtown to it, more money and more authorization to provide for more prosecutors and more agents. So we are on our way. But I want the RECORD to show that my folks in Delaware are not going to be affected much by this amendment, which I am prepared to support.

Second, I would like to have printed in the RECORD a resolution of the Committee on Criminal Law and Probation Administration concerning mandatory minimum sentences that have been passed by the 3d, 8th, 9th, and 10th judicial circuits, where they plead with us to reconsider the issue of whether we are going to continue to add minimum mandatory sentences in light of the fact we now have a sentencing commission.

I might add, I may be wrong but I think I was the first one to get passed a minimum mandatory law for life imprisonment for certain crimes here.

So I share the view of my colleague. I think we are going to have to be a little cautious here.

I ask unanimous consent that be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION OF COMMITTEE ON CRIMINAL LAW AND PROBATION ADMINISTRATION CONCERNING MANDATORY MINIMUM SENTENCES

The Judicial Conference Committee on Criminal Law and Probation Administration's ongoing review of the impact of guideline sentencing on the federal courts has disclosed that a significant number of sentences imposed are effectively determined not by Sentencing Guidelines that reflect the judgment of the United States Sentencing Commission but by mandatory minimum sentences set by the Congress.[1]

As has been noted by several Sentencing Commissioners, including its Chairman Judge Wilkins, and by a number of Senators including Senators Kennedy and Thurmond, mandatory minimum sentencing laws are inconsistent with the scheme of guideline sentencing and impair the efforts of the Commission to fashion sentencing guidelines in accordance with the dictates of the Sentencing Reform Act. Additionally, many district judges have reported that mandatory minimum sentences have frequently had to be imposed in factual situations in which the district judge was convinced that Congress could not have intended that such defendants receive long mandatory minimum sentences without parole. Those judges have also expressed the view that sentences in such cases would be more appropiately governed by sentencing guidelines in which the Congress directed the Commission to set the guidelines at certain high levels. Such Guideline Sentences would, however, import some measure of flexibility into the system because the guideline structure permits departures in extraordinary cases not fitting the conventional profile of the Guideline involved.

Concerned about the matter in view of the foregoing, the Committee requests the Administrative Office Statistical Analysis and Reports Division, the Federal Judicial Center, the U.S. Bureau of Prisons and the U.S. Sentencing Commission to study the problem, develop data on the number of sentences that are driven by the mandatory minimums, and assess the impact of such sentences on the system. The Committee will reconsider the matter after receiving these reports and make an appropriate recommendation.

Resolved on June 23, 1989.

RESOLUTION CONCERNING MANDATORY CRIMINAL SENTENCES SUBMITTED BY THE DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES OF THE THIRD CIRCUIT

Whereas, over the past several years congress has enacted numerous laws requiring the district courts to impose mandatory prison sentences for various offenses;

---

[1] Moreover, a number of the Guidelines themselves reflect the impact of mandatory minimum sentences that pre-dated the Guidelines.

Whereas, as has been noted by several members of the United States Sentencing Commission, including its Chairman Judge Wilkins, and by a number of Senators including Senators Kennedy and Thurmond, mandatory minimum sentencing laws are inconsistent with the scheme of guideline sentencing and impair the efforts of the Commission to fashion sentencing guidelines in accordance with the dictates of the Sentencing Reform Act;

Whereas, these statutory provisions leave no discretion with the trial courts, forcing the courts in many instances to impose long sentences, not subject to parole, which are inordinately harsh;

Whereas, sentences in such cases would be more appropriately governed by sentencing guideliens in which the Congress directed the Commission to set the guidelines at certain high levels, but would at least permit some measure of flexibility because the guideline structure permits departures in extraordinary cases not fitting the conventional profile of the Guideline involved; and

Whereas, the Judges of the Third Circuit look with disfavor on statutory minimum sentences for these reasons;

Now, therefore, be it resolved that the Third Circuit Judicial Conference urge the Judicial Conference of the United States to submit a resolution to the Congress, urging the Congress to reconsider the wisdom of all mandatory minimum sentencing statutes, and to establish such alternate Congressional policy as the Congress deems appropriate to retain some degree of flexibility in the criminal sentencing process.

RESOLUTION OF THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT JUDICIAL CONFERENCE, JULY 19, 1989

The Judicial Conference Committee on Criminal Law and Probation Administration's ongoing review of the impact of guideline sentencing on the federal courts has disclosed that a significant number of sentences imposed are effectively determined not by Sentencing Guidelines that reflect the judgment of the United States Sentencing Commission but by mandatory minimum sentences set by the Congress.[1] As has been noted by several Sentencing Commissioners, including its Chairman Judge Wilkins, and by a number of Senators including Senators Kennedy and Thurmond, mandatory minimum sentencing laws are inconsistent with the scheme of guideline sentencing and impair the efforts of the Commission to fashion sentencing guidelines in accordance with the dictates of the Sentencing Reform Act. Additionally, many district judges have reported that mandatory minimum sentences have frequently had to be imposed in factual situations in which the district judge was convinced that Congress could not have intended that such defendants receive long mandatory minimum sentences without parole. Those judges have also expressed the view that sentences in such cases would be more appropriately governed by sentencing guidelines in which the Congress directed the Commission to set the guidelines at certain high levels. Such Guideline Sentences would, however, import some measure of flexibility into the system because the guideline structure permits departures in extraordinary cases not fitting the conventional profile of the Guideline involved.

Concerned about the matter in view of the foregoing, the Eighth Circuit Judicial Conference (Executive Session) requests the Administrative Office Statistical Analysis and Reports Division, the Federal Judicial Center, the U.S. Bureau of Prisons and the U.S. Sentencing Commission to study the problem, develop data on the number of sentences that are driven by the mandatory minimums, and assess the impact of such sentences on the system.

[1] Moreover, a number of the Guidelines themselves reflect the impact of mandatory minimum sentences that pre-dated the Guidelines.

RESOLUTION NO. 6—MANDATORY CRIMINAL SENTENCES

(Submitted by the Chief District Judges of the Ninth Circuit)

Whereas, over the past several years Congress has enacted legislation requiring the court to impose mandatory prison sentences for various offenses;

Whereas, the statutory provisions leave no discretion with the trial courts, forcing the courts in many instances to impose sentences which are manifestly unjust and harsh;

Whereas, some members of Congress are in the process of urging the Congress to reconsider the wisdom of all mandatory minimum sentencing statutes;

Whereas, the Chief District Judges of the Ninth Circuit look with disfavor on statutory minimum sentences since their inflexibility often results in too harsh a sentence and detrimental circumvention of the law;

Now, therefore, be it resolved, that the Ninth Circuit Judicial Conference urge the Judicial Conference of the United States to submit a resolution to the Congress, urging the Congress to reconsider the wisdom of all mandatory minimum sentencing statutes, and to establish such alternate Congressional policy as the Congress deems appropriate to retain some degree of flexibility in the criminal sentencing process.

RESOLUTION—MANDATORY CRIMINAL SENTENCES

(Submitted by the Tenth Circuit District Judges Association)

Whereas, over the past several years Congress has enacted legislation requiring the court to impose mandatory prison sentences for various offenses;

Whereas, the statutory provisions leave no discretion with the trial courts, forcing the courts in many instances to impose sentences which are manifestly unjust and harsh;

Whereas, some members of Congress are in the process of urging the Congress to reconsider the wisdom of all mandatory minimum sentencing statutes;

Whereas, the Tenth Circuit Judicial Conference looks with disfavor on statutory minimum sentences since their inflexibility often results in too harsh a sentence and detrimental circumvention of the law;

Now, therefore, be it resolved, that the Tenth Circuit District Judges Association urges the Judicial Conference of the United States to submit a resolution to the Congress, urging the Congress to revisit and reconsider the wisdom of all mandatory minimum sentencing statutes, and to establish such alternate congressional policy as the Congress deems appropriate to retain some degree of flexibility in the criminal sentencing process.

Mr. BIDEN. Unless someone wishes to continue to debate the issue, I am prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. We are prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. GRAMM. I want to thank the distinguished chairman. We are moving greater resources into the Federal system which will give us the capacity to prosecute more people in the Federal system. Almost everybody guilty of a drug crime can be prosecuted in either the Federal or State system based on our resources and on the will of the prosecutors. I think this mandatory minimum sentence of 10 years in prison without parole for selling drugs to minors will put more people into the Federal system.

Finally, let me say I am hopeful, given our standard, that Delaware and Texas and Utah and all other States will move to a similar, and hopefully some day a single, standard.

I thank the distinguished chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The amendment (No. 955) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAMM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I realize the pending business is the Kennedy amendment, but I ask, consistent with the unanimous-consent request submitted earlier, upon completion of the Kennedy amendment may we move to the McConnell amendment? A half hour equally divided?

Mr. McCONNELL. That is fine.

Mr. BIDEN. Half hour equally divided, and then move to a Biden amendment. I am prepared to have a half hour equally divided, hopefully with no amendments in order on either of those amendments.

Mr. KENNEDY. Reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, we have one amendment, but it is in two parts, two amendments considered en bloc. So I imagine the consent means disposing of both, either one amendment or the two amendments en bloc; am I correct?

Mr. BIDEN. I say to my colleague, my unanimous-consent request does not apply to the Senator's amendment at all. It just applies to what we do after the completion of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. It only applies to the time agreement and no amendments in order to Senator McCONNELL's amendment and the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HATCH. Reserving the right to object, I am informed on our side there may possibly be amendments or at least debate with regard to the Biden amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. I withdraw the unanimous-consent request. We will make more progress.

Mr. HATCH. Let us just go ahead. That will be good enough. Let us not set any ground rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

AMENDMENT NO. 934, AS MODIFIED

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send a modification of my amendment to the desk and ask that it be divided into two amendments and considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator suggesting division of the originally proposed amendment?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes. I would like to have it divided into two amendments but considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to dividing the amendment proposed into two parts and for consideration en bloc? Hearing none, without objection, it is agreed to.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

DIVISION I

At the appropriate place, insert the following new sections:

SEC. . STATEWIDE DRUG TREATMENT PLAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title XIX of the Public Health Service Act is amended by inserting after section 1916A (42 U.S.C. 300x-4a) the following new section:

"SEC. 1916B. STATEWIDE DRUG TREATMENT PLAN.

"(a) NATURE OF PLAN.—To receive the drug abuse portion of its allotment for a fiscal year under section 1912A, a State shall develop, implement and submit, as part of the application required by section 1916(a), an approved statewide Drug Treatment Plan, prepared according to regulations promulgated by the Secretary, that shall contain—

"(1) a single, designated State agency for formulating and implementing the Statewide Drug Treatment Plan;

"(2) a description of the mechanism that shall be used to assess the needs for drug treatment in localities throughout the State including the presentation of relevant data;

"(3) a description of a Statewide plan that shall be implemented to expand treatment capacity and overcome obstacles that restrict the expansion of treatment capacity (such as zoning ordinances), or an explanation of why such a plan is unnecessary;

"(4) a description of performance-based criteria that shall be used to assist in the allocating of funds to drug treatment facilities receiving assistance under this subpart;

"(5) a description of the drug-free patient and workplace programs, that must include some form of drug testing, to be utilized in drug treatment facilities and programs;

"(6) a description of the mechanism that shall be used to make funding allocations under this subpart;

"(7) a description of the actions that shall be taken to improve the referral of drug users to treatment facilities that offer the most appropriate treatment modality;

"(8) a description of the program of training that shall be implemented for employees of treatment facilities receiving Federal funds, designed to permit such employees to stay abreast of the latest and most effective treatment techniques;

"(9) a description of the plan that shall be implemented to coordinate drug treatment facilities with other social, health, correctional and vocational services in order to assist or properly refer those patients in need of such additional services; and

"(10) a description of the plan that will be implemented to expand and improve efforts to contact and treat expectant women who use drugs and to provide appropriate follow-up care to their affected newborns.

"(b) SUBMISSION OF PLAN.—The plan required by subsection (a) shall be submitted to the Secretary annually for review and approval. The Secretary shall have the authority to review and approve or disapprove such State plans, and to propose changes to such plans.

"(c) GUIDELINES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, in consultation with the States, shall develop guidelines for each area to be covered by the State plan prepared under subsection (a).

"(2) CONFORMITY.—Beginning in fiscal year 1991, no payment shall be made to a State under section 1914 for the substance abuse portion of its allotment under section 1912A unless such State has submitted a plan under this section that is in reasonable conformance with the guidelines developed under paragraph (1), except that with respect to the performance criteria for treatment facilities described in subsection (a)(4), the State plan shall provide a reasonable time for such conformance.

"(3) MONITORING.—The Secretary shall monitor the compliance of the State with the plan submitted under this section and provide technical assistance to assist in achieving such compliance.

"(d) SUBMISSION OF PROGRESS REPORTS.—Each State shall submit reports, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary may, from time to time, require, and shall comply with such additional provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to verify the accuracy of such reports and not overly burdensome on the State.

"(e) WAIVER OF PLAN REQUIREMENT.—At the discretion of the Secretary, the Secretary may waive any or all of the requirements of this section on the written request of a State, except that such waiver shall not be granted unless the State implements an alternative treatment plan that fulfills the objectives of this section.

"(f) MODEL STATE PLAN.—The Secretary shall establish a model State drug abuse treatment plan to guide States in establishing State plans under subsection (a), and shall provide technical assistance to assist States in complying with such plan.

"(g) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term 'drug abuse portion' means the amount of a State's allotment under section 1912A that is required by this subpart, or by any other provision of law, to be used for programs or activities relating to drug abuse.

"(h) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—Expenses incurred for the training of individuals as required under any plans submitted under this section shall not be included in determining the costs of administering funds made available under section 1914.".

(b) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall promulgate regulations necessary to carry out section 1916B of the Public Health Service Act (as added by subsection (a)) not later than 6 months following the date of enactment of this section.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) PERFORMANCE CRITERIA AND WORKPLACE REQUIREMENT.—Sections 1916B (a)(4) and (a)(5) of the Public Health Service Act (as added by subsection (a)) shall become effective on October 1, of the second fiscal year beginning after the date that final regulations under subsection (b) are published in the Federal Register.

(2) REMAINING PROVISIONS.—The remaining provision of such section 1916B shall become effective beginning on October 1, of the first fiscal year beginning after the date final regulations under paragraph (1) are published in the Federal Register.

SEC. . USE OF ADAMHA ALLOTMENTS.

Section 1915 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-3) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)—

(A) by inserting after the comma in paragraph (1), the following: "except that funds may be used to pay for inpatient hospital drug treatment services pursuant to a contractual arrangement with a hospital if—

"(A) needed residential treatment services could not otherwise be provided; and

"(B) the rates paid for such services do not exceed 125 percent of the cost of the rates typically required for comparable residential services."; and

(B) by inserting after the fifth sentence in the matter following paragraph (5), the following new sentence: "The Secretary may waive or reduce the matching rate requirement of the preceding sentence if the State request such a waiver and the Secretary determines that a failure to grant such a request would result in a reduction in the resources that would otherwise be used to provide direct treatment services and that are essential to implementation of the State drug abuse plan.";

(2) in subsection (c)(1)—

(A) by inserting "including social and health services necessary to improve treatment outcomes," after "drug abuse in subparagraph (A),";

(B) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (B);

(C) by striking out the period and inserting in lieu therof "; and" in subparagraph (C); and

(D) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(D) to provide counseling to family members of drug abusers, including such family members in group and family counseling service settings for the treatment of drug abusers."; and

(3) in subsecton (d), by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Expenses incurred for the training of individuals as required under this subpart shall not be included in determining the costs of administering funds made available under section 1914.".

DIVISION II

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . DRUGS FOR THE TREATMENT OF ADDICTIONS.

Chapter V of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 351 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subchapter:

"Subchapter C—Drugs for the Treatment of Addiction to Illegal Drugs

"SEC. 529A. RECOMMENDATIONS FOR INVESTIGATIONS OF DRUGS FOR THE TREATMENT OF ADDICTIONS TO ILLEGAL DRUGS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The sponsor of a drug for the treatment of an addiction to illegal drugs may request the Secretary to provide written recommendations for the nonclinical and clinical investigations that must be conducted with the drug before—

"(1) it may be approved for treatment of such addiction under section 505;

"(2) if the drug is an antibiotic, it may be certified for treatment of such addiction under section 507, or

"(3) if the drug is a biological product, it may be licensed for treatment of such addiction under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act.

"(b) RECOMMENDATIONS FOR INVESTIGATIONS.—If the Secretary has reason to believe that a drug for which a request is made under this section is a drug for the treatment of an addiction to illegal drugs, the Secretary shall provide the person making the request with written recommendations for the nonclinical and clinical investigations that the Secretary believes, on the basis of information available to the Secretary at the time of the request under this section, would be necessary for approval of such drug for treatment of such addiction under section 505, certification of such drug under section 507, or licensing of such drug under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act.

"(c) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall by regulation promulgate procedures for the implementation of subsections (a) and (b).

SEC. 529B. DESIGNATION OF DRUGS FOR THE TREATMENT OF AN ADDICTION TO ILLEGAL DRUGS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) REQUEST.—The manufacturer or the sponsor of a drug may request the Secretary to designate the drug as a drug for the treatment of an addiction to illegal drugs. A request for designation of a drug shall be made before the submission of an application under section 505(b) for the drug, the submission of an application for certification of the drug under section 507, or the submission of an application for licensing of the drug under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act. If the Secretary finds that a drug for which a request is submitted under this subsection is being or will be investigated for the treatment of an addiction to illegal drugs and—

"(A) if an application for such drug is approved under section 505;

"(B) if a certification for such drug is issued under section 507; or

"(C) if a license for such drug is issued under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act; the approval, certification, or license would be for use for treatment of such addiction, the Secretary shall designate the drug as a drug for the treatment of an addiction to illegal drugs. A request for a designation of a drug under this subsection shall contain the consent of the applicant to notice being given by the Secretary under subsection (b) respecting the designation of the drug.

"(2) DEFINITION.—As used in paragraph (1)—

"(A) the term 'drugs for the treatment' means those pharmacological agents or medications that—"(i) reduce the craving for abused drugs;

"(ii) block the behavioral and physiological effects of abused drugs;

"(iii) safely serve as replacement therapies for the treatment of drug abuse;

"(iv) moderate or eliminate the process of withdrawal;

"(v) block or reverse the toxic effects of abused drugs; or

"(vi) prevent, where possible, the initiation of drug abuse in individuals at high risk;

"(B) the term 'addiction' means the state of an individual where that individual habitually uses an illegal drug in a manner that endangers the public morals, health, safety, or welfare, or who is so addicted to the use of illegal drugs that such individual loses the power of self-control with reference to such individuals addiction; and

"(C) the term 'illegal drugs' means a controlled substance, as defined in section 102(6) Schedule I of the Controlled Substance Act (21 U.S.C. 892(6)).

"(b) CONDITIONS.—A designation of a drug under subsection (a) shall be subject to the condition that—

"(1) if an application was approved for the drug under section 505(b), a certificate was issued for the drug under section 507, or a license was issued for the drug under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act, the manufacturer of the drug will notify the Secretary of any discontinuance of the production of the drug at least one year before discontinuance, and

"(2) if an application has not been approved for the drug under section 505(b), a certificate has not been issued for the drug under section 507, or a license has not been issued for the drug under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act and if preclinical investigations or investigations under section 505(i) are being conducted with the drug, the manufacturer or sponsor of the drug will notify the Secretary of any decision to discontinue active pursuit of approval of an application under section 505(b), approval of an application for certification under section 507, or approval of a license under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act.

"(c) NOTICE.—Notice respecting the designation of a drug under subsection (a) shall be made available to the public.

"(d) REGULATION.—The Secretary shall by regulation promulgate procedures for the implementation of subsection (a).

"SEC. 529C. PROTECTION FOR DRUGS FOR THE TREATMENT OF AN ADDICTION TO ILLEGAL DRUGS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), if the Secretary—

"(1) approves an application filed pursuant to section 505,

"(2) issues a certification under section 507, or

"(3) issues a license under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act for a drug designated under section 529A for the treatment of an addiction to illegal drugs, the Secretary may not approve another application under section 505, issue another certification under section 507, or issue another license under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act for such drug for the treatment of such addiction for a person who is not the holder of such approved application, of such certification, or of such license until the expiration of seven years from the date of the approval of the approved application, the issuance of the certification, or the issuance of the license. Section 505(c)(2) does not apply to the refusal to approve an application under the preceding sentence.

"(b) ISSUANCE OF ANOTHER LICENSE, APPLICATION, OR CERTIFICATION.—If an application filed pursuant to section 505 is approved for a drug designated under section 529A for the treatment of an addiction to illegal drugs, if a certification is issued under section 507 for such a drug, or if a license is issued under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act for such a drug, the Secretary may, during the 7-year period beginning on the date of the application approval, of the issuance of the certification under section 507, or the issuance of the license, approve another application under section 505, issue another certification under section 507, or issue a license under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act, for such drug for the treatment of such addiction for a person who is not the holder of such approved application, of such certification, or of such license if—

"(1) the Secretary finds, after providing the holder notice and opportunity for the submission of views, that in such period the holder of the approved application, of the certification, or of the license cannot assure the availability of sufficient quantities of the drug to meet the needs of persons with such addictions for which the drug was designated; or

"(2) such holder provides the Secretary in writing the consent of such holder for the approval of other applications, issuance of other certifications, or the issuance of other licenses before the expiration of such seven-year period.

"SEC. 529D. OPEN PROTOCOLS FOR INVESTIGATIONS OF DRUGS FOB THE TREATMENT OF AN ADDICTION TO ILLEGAL DRUGS.

"If a drug is designated under section 529A as a drug for the treatment of an addiction to illegal drugs and if notice of a claimed exemption under section 505(i) or regulations issued thereunder is filed for such drug, the Secretary shall encourage the sponsor of such drug to design protocols for clinical investigations of the drug which may be conducted under the exemption to permit the addition to the investigations of persons with such addictions who need the drug to treat such addiction and who cannot be satisfactorily treated by available alternative drugs.

"SEC. 529E. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subchapter, such sums as may be necessary in each of the fiscal years 1990 through 1992.".

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, last week the Senate approved a substantial increase in funds for the President's war on drugs in the area of treatment. As a result, the so-called ADAMH block grant, the principal source of Federal funds to the States for alcohol and drug treatment programs, will be doubled—from $500 million in fiscal year 1989 to $1 billion in fiscal year 1990.

These funds are a welcome—and long overdue—increase, but they are still far from adequate to meet the current demand for treatment of drug abuse and drug addiction. It is essential, therefore, to see that our limited resources are used as wisely and stretched as widely as possible.

The amendment I am proposing is designed to reach this goal by requiring the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish guidelines for the States in allocating block grant funds for treatment of drug abuse.

President Bush's drug strategy makes a number of worthwhile recommendations for the types of treatment programs to be supported, such as patient referral services, better training for drug treatment professionals, and earmarked funds for geographical areas of greatest need.

But without at least minimum guidelines to ensure that the recommendations of the national drug strategy are actually carried out, the goals we are setting are less likely to be met.

The guidelines to be developed by the Secretary of HHS under this amendment will apply to each of the programs recommended in the President's program. In addition, the guidelines will require State and local treatment programs to include three additional important types of services:

Aftercare, to help clients who have successfully completed formal, intensive treatment programs;

A targeted program to treat women and minorities, in order to expand the services available to those who need help the most;

A stopgap assistance program to provide interim services such as counseling and referral for addicts who make the decision to seek treatment, but who find themselves condemned to waiting lists because local treatment prgrams are overcrowded.

In addition, the amendment contains three other provisions.

First, it gives States greater flexibility to meet local needs by permitting grant funds to be used for in-patient treatment; under current law, such funds are limited to nonhospital residential facilities.

Second, block grant funds may also be used to provide counseling and other services to families of substance abusers, since the role of family members may well be critical in ensuring lasting results of treatment.

Third, the amendment permits State matching requirements to be waived, so that Federal dollars can be used to pay for the construction of treatment facilities. Construction is costly and is usually not the top priority for treatment funds. But in some communities, existing facilities are so overcrowded that the highest priority for the next treatment dollar is the construction of new facilities.

The second amendment I intend to offer contains an imaginative provision originally suggested to me by Senator BIDEN. The idea is to encourage new investment in pharmaceutical therapies to treat addiction by enabling antiaddiction drugs developed for this purpose to obtain the benefit of the Orphan Drug Act.

The Orphan Drug Act is designed to encourage research and development on drugs to treat so-called orphan diseases—those which afflict relatively small numbers of people, and which therefore offer little potential for profit to drug firms that make investments in these areas.

The Orphan Drug Act has worked brilliantly—far beyond the expectations of Congress when we originally enacted it in 1983. Nearly 300 drugs have received orphan designations from the Food and Drug Administration, entitling the firms to FDA assistance in designing research and testing protocols; 36 drugs have completed the process and obtained final FDA approval, entitling the firms to exclusive marketing of their drugs for 7 years.

Although the estimated number of addicts in the Nation is in the range of 6 million—far above the 200,000 person cutoff in the Orphan Drug Act—the need for new antiaddiction drugs, especially to treat cocaine addiction, is so great that it is time to enlist the concept of the Orphan Drug Act in the war on drugs.

To preserve the current unique character of the Orphan Drug Act as an independent program, the amendment establishes a parallel orphan-drug-type program in the FDA for antiaddiction drugs. Our hope is that with these new incentives, the pharmaceutical industry will invest more heavily in the war on drugs and help us win the war.

Finally, let me just say that many of us who whole heartedly support the Orphan Drug Act have been concerned in recent years that in certain cases it has been too successful, in the sense that the marketing exclusivity feature has enabled particular firms to reap windfall profits by charging exorbitant prices and tapping far larger markets than were anticipated for an orphan drug.

We are continuing to monitor this problem closely, and we intend to do the same for the new Antiaddiction Orphan Drug Program, since with the larger population of addicts, there is even greater potential for abuse.

These two treatment amendments are important contributions to the national drug strategy. They go hand-in-hand with the expansion of treatment resources that we obtained last week, and I urge the Senate to accept them.

I am enormously grateful for the help and the support of my good friend and colleague, the Senator from Utah, who has been very much involved in the fashioning and the shaping of both these amendments as were other members of our committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts was willing to work out a compromise to improve legislation to require States to develop statewide treatment plans. In essence, this compromise will require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to publish guidelines so that States may understand what is required to be in compliance with this new law. These guidelines will not be mandatory upon the States and no Federal minimum standards will be developed which will be imposed upon the States.

In addition, the Secretary will prepare a model statewide treatment plan and provide technical assistance to those States who need help in developing their programs.

I believe that these three new additions will only strengthen the State's ability to better allocate resources for treatment, and I want to applaud the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts for his help.

In addition, I believe that the current plan required by the States should include information on aftercare for those who have completed services; expansion of treatment opportunities for specific populations, including women and minorities; and stopgap assistance so that individuals who cannot be treated immediately will not be lost from the treatment system.

On therapies to treat addictions, Mr. President, I want to thank my esteemed colleague from Massachusetts for modifying his language to provide incentives to companies to develop drugs for cocaine addiction, heroin addictions, and other addictions of class 1 controlled substances.

I also appreciate his willingness to add an authorization to appropriations so this will not not go into effect until there is funding. We have given the Food and Drug Administration, it seems to me, too many responsibilities without the sufficient resources to carry them out. So I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his help on this.

Further, I would just like to ask a question or two of him so we can clarify the record. It is my understanding that this is not part of the Orphan Drug Act, but it is going to be a new program established similar to or patterned after the Orphan Drug Act.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is exactly correct. The initial proposal we were looking at amended the Orphan Drug Act, but we found we were able to find and achieve our objectives by not amending that act, by developing another title which basically tracks that act. We are not in any way affecting the orphan drug legislation.

Mr. HATCH. I thank my colleague. Further, I would like to enlist my colleague's support and ask him for his assurance that we will not in conference allow a fallback on this particular amendment, a fallback to the Orphan Drug Act and other controls; in other words, we will fight to keep this a separate program and see how it works and hope that it does work.

Mr. KENNEDY. I think the Senator makes a good point. Maybe if we are successful in this area we can use that particular model perhaps in some other areas of national need, and I think it is fair to see how this procedure would work. I believe it can make an important impact and, if it is successful, then it will be available to go into other areas. But in the meantime, we will not in any way disturb the integrity of the Orphan Drug Act.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the Senator can work side by side with me to keep it separate. I believe that little act has proven to be one of the most efficient, well thought out, and workable statutes that we have ever passed here in the Congress. It has really been working. If every statute worked like the Orphan Drug Act has worked, I think the American people would have a lot more confidence in the Congress.

I want to thank my dear colleague for that. I really enjoy working with him in this area. In fact, I enjoy working with him in all areas in which we work, and that is a pretty broad coverage here in the Congress. But in this particular area, it is a real rare privilege to work with one of the leaders in all public health and related matters in the Congress of the United States. I have learned a lot from my colleague, and I certainly want to compliment him for his work in this area and hope we can continue to work together in the future.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, in working out our agreement, the amendment dealing with guidelines for block grant funds, we agreed that it was our intention that the Secretary incorporate certain key items in the guidelines that could be considered to be covered generally in the legislation, but were not identified as specifically as we desired or as would be necessary to achieve the objective of the amendment. Is this correct?

Mr. HATCH. Yes. We both agree that the Secretary will need to give far more specific guidance to the States and that there are some key things that need to be addressed in the State plan.

Mr. KENNEDY. Let me outline the areas that, at a minimum should be addressed in the State guidelines.

TARGETING

The guidelines should specify that States should direct funds into the areas of greatest need within the State and should make clear that the State should take into account at least the following factors in identifying priority areas for support:

Current unmet treatment needs in the State, including both the inpatient, outpatient, and long- and short-term drug treatment service needs of defined populations and the availability of essential ancillary services;

The incidence of deliveries of infants who are adversely affected by the maternal use of drugs;

The incidence of communicable diseases transmitted by drug abuse.

PERFORMANCE CRITERIA FOR LOCAL TREATMENT PROGRAMS

The guidelines should include requirements for:

The provision of outpatient aftercare for those individuals completing residential treatment, either directly or through arrangements with other individuals or entities, for patients who have ended a course of treatment provided by the facility, that shall include periodic appointments with the patient to monitor the patient's progress and provide support services or additional treatment as needed, and, for those individuals completing outpatient treatment, periodic contacts, to the extent feasible, to monitor the individual's progress and provide the individual with, or refer the individual for, additional services or treatment as needed;

The coordination and referral of patients to social, health, and employment services in order to assist patients in need of counseling, psychiatric or medical treatment, or job training services to function in society and remain drug free;

The provision of employment, educational, or social services, directly or by referral or arrangement, by facilities that serve a clientele for whom such services are essential to improve treatment outcomes;

The retention of patients in treatment until such treatment is appropriately completed, taking into account the characteristics of patients that may make retention more or less difficult and any other performance-based measures of quality programming as may be appropriate.

WOMEN AND MINORITIES

The guidelines should specify that specialized treatment opportunities for minorities and women should be expanded, if needed.

MONITORING

The guidelines should specify that State plans should include mechanisms for monitoring compliance of federally funded treatment facilities with any standards established in the State plan pursuant to the guidelines.

TRAINING

The guidelines should specify reasonable standards for the training and retraining of employees of publicly funded treatment facilities to assure that employees remain informed about the most effective diagnostic and treatment techniques.

REFERRAL

The guidelines should provide for a referral method to be established in each area of the State that shall assure that each individual is, to the extent feasible, appropriately assessed and referred to the most appropriate treatment facility, and that a current list of unfilled treatment slots is available to assist in such referrals.

STOPGAP ASSISTANCE

The guidelines should provide for the establishment of a program of stopgap assistance for individuals who apply for treatment but who must wait for the availability of treatment opportunities that shall include:

Treatment ready education and counseling; and Referral to, or provision, of other necessary health and social services that may include primary health care, nonmedical education, and vocational training services.

PATIENT TESTING

The guidelines should make clear that patient drug testing should not be performed more frequently than is necessary to achieve the objective of such testing and that policies established to deal with patients failing such tests should be clinically appropriate.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has correctly identified the items that, at a minimum, must be part of the guidelines if they are to achieve their purpose.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, finally, I want to thank the Senator from Utah for his kind words. Basically, what we have attempted to build into our national program are the few but very extraordinary successes that we have seen both educationally and from a community and from community-based systems. We have done that in a strong bipartisan way with members of our committee making very substantial and significant contributions in fashioning these amendments. I think we built upon what I think were important recommendations that the President made and which have generally been included. We have built on them on the basis of the experience of the committee.

We can give assurance to the Senate that with these amendments, we will give careful oversight on these measures because I believe, as the Senator from Utah does, that how we as a Nation are going to deal with the issues of education, prevention, rehabilitation treatment and developing our research capabilities in these areas, and doing it in a responsible and effective way, is going to be enormously important as we are challenged by the scourge of drugs.

I believe that we are off to a very good start and, to a great extent, it has been because of the good work of the Senator from Utah and the members of our committee who have been enormously helpful in shaping and fashioning these amendments.

As I said earlier, the idea of the development of this orphan drug research, which I think is a brilliant idea, was recommended initially to me by the Senator from Delaware. I think it can make a very important and significant contribution to our understanding and treatment of drug addiction.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts. I appreciate what he is trying to do in this Kennedy-Hatch set of amendments. I am happy to cosponsor them with him and work with him in all ways in these areas. I think he has done a great job of bringing them together in the committee where everybody has worked together on these issues, and I think we have a better package as each one of them comes up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I will not take the Senate's time except to say that as one who does not know as much about the area as either Senator KENNEDY or Senator HATCH, I am absolutely convinced of what I do know, that one of the most promising areas in this whole question of dealing with drug abuse in this country is in pharmacology and the whole public health area and research and development. I thank Senator KENNEDY for the overgenerous comments.

Mr. HATCH. I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified.

The amendment (No. 934), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 956

(Purpose: To provide Federal drug interdiction agencies with the authority to use necessary and appropriate force to compel airborne drug traffickers to land their aircraft)

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCONNELL] for himself, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. D'AMATO, proposes an amendment numbered 956.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place add the following:

GENERAL AUTHORITY

SECTION 1. (a) The purpose of this amendment is to provide Federal drug interdiction agencies with the authority to use necessary and appropriate force to compel airborne drug traffickers to land their aircraft.

(b) Whenever any law enforcement officer of the United States Customs Service, United States Coast Guard, or Drug Enforcement Administration, commanding an aircraft displaying proper identifying insignia, instructs an aircraft to land on the basis of knowledge that the aircraft is transporting illegal narcotics on board, and the aircraft does not land or make preparations to land; then, after observing all appropriate safeguards established under section 2 of this Act, the law enforcement officer is authorized to fire a warning signal; and if the aircraft does not land or prepare to land in response to such warning signal and other previous instructions, the law enforcement officer is authorized to fire into the aircraft.

PROCEDURAL SAFEGUARDS

SEC. 2. (a) The United States Customs Service, United States Coast Guard, and Drug Enforcement Administration are required to adopt regulations to implement section 1 of this Act, providing that neither a warning shot, nor disabling or deadly force, may be used against an aircraft until all of the following safeguards have been met:

(1) public notice has been provided, through the Federal Aviation Adminstration, informing all private aircraft operators entering United States airspace that they are required to obey any instructions from United States law enforcement agents, including instructions to land their aircraft, and that failure to obey such instructions may result in use of force;

(2) such aircraft is flying outside of flight corridors established and maintained by the Federal Aviation Administration, which shall in no case be lower than an altitude of three thousand (3,000) feet, except to provide reasonable access to designated airports and landing strips, and provide for emergency flight conditions;

(3) the airborne law enforcement officer has visually confirmed that such aircraft is engaging in illegal narcotics trafficking;

(4) the airborne law enforcement officer must use all means of communication that are available, internationally recognized, and accepted by the International Civil Aviation Organization, including, but not limited to, radio communications on the international emergency frequencies, rocking of wings, and flashing landing lights, to order such aircraft to land;

(5) if such aircraft fails to comply with such instructions to land, the airborne law enforcement officer must notify his command authority located on the ground of the circumstances and seek permission to fire a warning signal to land;

(6) if such aircraft fails to comply with such instructions to land after a warning signal has been fired, the airborne law enforcement officer must notify his command authority located on ground of the circumstances and seek permission to fire into the aircraft; and

(7) no use of disabling or deadly force shall be permitted while such aircraft is over land, or if the airborne law enforcement officer has reason to believe that, under the circumstances, innocent person would be harmed by the use of disabling or deadly force against such aircraft.

(b) The regulations required by this section shall be promulgated and adopted by the United States Customs Service, United States Coast Guard, and Drug Enforcement Administration not later than January 1, 1990.

(c) No officer of the United States Customs Service, United States Coast Guard, or Drug Enforcement Administration shall be deemed to have the authority provided under section 1 of this Act until the regulations required by this section have been promulgated and adopted.

(d) For the purposes of this section, "airborne law enforcement officer" means an officer in command of an aircraft operated by the United States Customs Service, United States Coast Guard, or Drug Enforcement Administration.

INDEMNIFICATION

SEC. 3. The person commanding an aircraft of the United States Customs Service, United States Coast Guard, or Drug Enforcement Administration, and all other persons acting under such person's direction, shall be indemnified from any penalty or action for damages resulting from the firing at or into any aircraft pursuant to section 1 of this act. If such person or persons are arrested or prosecuted as a result of such firing pursuant to section 1 of this Act, such person or persons shall be forthwith admitted to bail.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President—

Try to imagine drug gangsters murdering both Attorney General Dick Thornburgh and his predecessor Edwin Meese. Next, pretend that drug triggermen and their guerrilla allies rub out Justices William Brennan, Sandra Day O'Connor, Byron White and Antonin Scalia—along with hundreds of prominent Federal judges.

Expand the list to include Washington Post Editor Ben Bradlee and Los Angeles chief of police Darryl Gates, both slain; add Amy Carter, kidnaped and held as a warning to authorities who might get tough with narco-barons.

Then the grand climax: the 1987 assassination of George Bush, murdered at a campaign rally just as he had become the favorite to be elected President the following year.

In the U.S. such carnage would be unbelievable. yet an almost precisely equivalent list of crimes has been committed in Colombia. * * *

Mr. President, I have just read Time magazine's opening paragraph for a September 4 story on the crisis in Colombia.

Over the last several years, 178 judges, nearly half the Supreme Court, one attorney general, the leading candidate for the Presidency, the chief of police and the editor of El Espectador have been gunned down by assassins led by the drug cartels.

Last month, President Bush offered emergency aid to Colombia and President Barco, to help fight these vicious, unprincipled, and heavily armed drug thugs.

As a nation, we have asked the Colombian people for their courage and conviction in sustaining their war on drugs.

In the face of the drug cartel's reign of ruin and terror, we have asked each Colombian, including President Barco, to put their lives on the line—literally—as they try to escape from the cartel's stranglehold.

The war against drugs and drug dealers must begin in Colombia, but the course of consumption leads to the United States. We must make every effort at each point along that chain linking source countries to our communities—to stop the flow. That means improving education and local law enforcement as the President recommended in his national drug control strategy, but it also means that we must step up interdiction efforts.

On August 1, the Senate voted to improve our interdiction capabilities by giving the U.S. Coast Guard, Customs Service, and Drug Enforcement Administration the authority to use disabling, and if absolutely necessary, deadly force to interdict drug smuggling aircraft. The Senate responded to the fact that roughly 50 percent of all cocaine coming into the United States is smuggled on board private aircraft.

Since introducing the amendment, I have discussed the issue at length with several of my colleagues, constituents, private pilots and representatives of the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association. I decided to revise the amendment to respond to some of the legitimate concerns I heard expressed, and I offer it today in a new form which includes in the text of the legislation all necessary safeguards to prevent the possibility of accident.

First, the Federal Aviation Administration must issue a public notice advising all private pilots to comply with any instruction to land given by a properly marked and identifiable law enforcement aircraft—which I might note is consistent with current law and practice. The FAA must advise the public that failure to comply with such instructions may result in the use of force against a suspect aircraft.

At the suggestion of the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association, I have added language requiring the FAA to establish and maintain flight cooridors for private aircraft. While the width of the corridor is undefined, pilots will not be allowed to fly below 3,000 feet unless they are experiencing an emergency or, in fact, are intending to land. AOPA advised me that most private pilots fly around 4,000 to 5,000 feet.

I think the concept of flight corridors is a good one because it essentially protects the legal pilot flying home on vacation. If he's in a designated corridor, he will not have a problem with airborne law officers. The problem the legislation addresses is the drug smuggler who may fly a legal route within a designated corridor, but most, sooner or later, drop to 1,000 feet to kick out his lethal cargo or risk having it explode on impact.

Once below the corridor's 3,000-foot floor, force still may not be used unless a series of tests are met. The airborne law enforcement officer must visually confirm that the aircraft has engaged in illegal activity. I believe this is the most effective of all safeguards since the law enforcement officer knows he must see proof that will hold up in court.

Once having identified illegal activity, the law enforcement aircraft still must make every effort to communicate with the suspect aircraft. The FAA and the International Civil Aviation Organization recognize an extensive list of methods of communication including by radio on any number of emergency frequencies, or visual signals such as by crossing the path of the intercepted aircraft and rocking wings or by flashing landing lights. The pilots I have quizzed all have acknowledged familiarity with each of these signals.

So let's review the scenario and safeguards: we have a private plane which has left a landing strip in a remote part of Colombia. It proceeds along a designated corridor until it enters U.S. airspace when it suddenly drops below the 3,000-foot corridor floor.

A few miles from the Florida Keys, the suspect aircraft's back door opens and 10 to 15 40-pound bales are kicked out of the plane. An average smuggling flight drops about 1,000 pounds of cocaine.

As the smuggler turns south for safe haven and the promise of an average $200,000 paycheck per run, a clearly marked Customs Service aircraft pulls along side and radios the suspect, ordering it to land.

This is where Secretary Bennett has pointed out our law enforcement officers are usually given—and I quote: "the most emphatic hand signals by the suspect," and to press the point, I don't think they are waving goodbye.

Without the amendment I am offering today, this would be the end of the encounter right here: The drug smuggler flies back to safety, ready to load up another deadly cargo for delivery to the United States.

But under my proposal, this frustrating outcome may turn out differently: First, that twin-engine Customs Service plane could be armed with light air-to-air weapons.

After the drug smuggler communicates his intention with his hand signal, the law enforcement officer still would have to make every effort to advise the smuggler to land. He communicates on the radio, and by rocking his wings and flashing his lights.

After he has repeated and exhausted every single option, he reports to his commander on the ground and seeks approval to fire a warning shot.

Once that authority is granted and exercised, the law enforcement officer again tries to communicate instructions to land. If he is still unsuccessful, he must again seek authority from the ground to fire into the aircraft. When he finally fires, he does so only over water.

One final safeguard, which really becomes a judgment call, is the law enforcement officer may decide not to use force if he believes he will risk innocent lives.

I think that with all of the safeguards now written into the language of the bill, I simply can't see the room for error.

I have made every effort to satisfy those who are justly concerned about the possibility of accident—without compromising the basic principle that our law enforcement officers should have the authority to use force when it is absolutely necessary and when absolutely every other effort to compel an aircraft to land fails.

Short of this authority, there simply is no real deterrent to smuggling drugs into the United States by air.

I think the Senate—like the courageous combatants in Colombia—has reached a crossroads. We either are serious about stopping half the cocaine smuggled into the United States—which comes in by air—or we will stand by and see a steady increase in the use of our air routes by continuous cocaine airlifts into the United States.

The Senate has voted once before on this issue. A strong, bipartisan majority of the Senate is on record on the Defense bill in support of this amendment.

In anticipation that the conferees on the Defense bill may decide that my amendment has no bearing on the Defense Department and should be stripped off the authorization package, I believe my colleagues should have an opportunity to vote once again to give our law enforcement agencies the authority they need to effectively end the air war on drugs.

Right now, when our narcotics agents see 1,000 pounds of cocaine kicked out the back of a suspect aircraft, they can only wave goodbye. Our law enforcement community needs our support to secure our skies and close down the drug dealers avenue of safe access and choice: the air.

Fifty percent of the cocaine coming in is smuggled on private planes. Cutting 50 percent of the supply of cocaine is not the final cure, but it would be a meaningful advance in this war we are waging.

Mr. President, it is time to stop the cocaine airlift. Back in August, the Senate approved an amendment that I offered to the Department of Defense authorization bill which dealt with a very serious problem, and the problem is this. Fifty percent of the cocaine coming into this country is coming through private aircraft. Under current rules, regulations, and the law, there is simply nothing that our authorities can do other than shoot film of these drug smugglers kicking bundles of drugs out the back of their airplanes.

Mr. President, that has to stop. It is the opinion of the Senator from Kentucky that if we leave this loophole open, if we leave this gaping gap in our defenses, pretty soon a lot more than 50 percent of the cocaine is going to be coming into this country. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to describe what a serious problem that is. We all know. So let us get right down to the nub of the issue.

The Senate, in approving the amendment to the DOD bill 55 to 45 in August, said that it wanted to do something about that. That amendment is currently pending before the conference committee of the House and Senate on the DOD authorization bill. There are some Senators who feel it should not be on that bill because, frankly, it has nothing to do with the Defense Department. My amendment authorizes Customs, Coast Guard, and DEA. It has nothing to do with the Defense Department whatsoever. And so, Mr. President, since this is a bill about drugs, it appeared to this Senator that this amendment should be offered to this particular bill.

In addition, I think it is important to point out that this is not the same amendment the Senate approved in August 55 to 45. We have made substantial changes. We have made substantial changes in order to reassure those who had some legitimate concerns that some innocent pilot might be wrongfully fired upon.

We have crafted a new amendment which I think meets virtually all of the objections that have been made about the previous amendment which the Senate nevertheless supported. I have been told by a number of Members of the Senate on my side that they will support the amendment today even though they did not support it in August because they are convinced that the safeguards we have added have virtually eliminated the possibility of some innocent pilot being shot out of the sky.

The purpose of my amendment, obviously, is to create a deterrent to stop the wholesale use of our skies as the drug smugglers' avenue of choice into Main Street U.S.A. Without this deterrent, Secretary Bennett has testified that we can expect to see a large increase in air drug smuggling. My amendment gives drug enforcement agents the authority to use force in compelling drug smugglers to land for inspection and arrest.

Now, let us look, Mr. President, at the changes that I have made in this amendment as compared to the previous amendment which, as I repeat, the Senate approved 55 to 45.

To prevent any mistake in use of force against innocent persons, I have incorporated all of the safeguards that I discussed the last time this provision was considered into the actual text of the amendment which is at the desk. Further, Mr. President, we have met with the AOPA, the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association, and we have incorporated a suggestion that they made.

Now, I am not going to imply that they are for this amendment. They are not. But we have, in an effort to compromise and to further reassure them that there would be no loss of innocent lives, adopted one of their important suggestions. So, Mr. President, let us go right down the list of safeguards that are incorporated in this amendment. First, the FAA has to notify all private pilots that they must land if ordered to do so by a properly marked and identifiable law enforcement aircraft. Failure to comply with such orders may result in the use of force.

No. 2, at the suggestion of the AOPA, I have added language requiring the FAA to develop flight corridors for private aircraft and no force may be used against any aircraft unless it is flying outside of the corridor. So as I said, Mr. President, we have incorporated into this amendment a useful suggestion made by the AOPA.

At a minimum, such a corridor would have to be at least 3,000 feet above ground level. The only thing we are saying to FAA is the corridor has to begin at last 3,000 feet and up except for access to airports in emergency flying conditions. That is where the corridor would have to start.

AOPA has advised me that most private pilots fly around 4,000 to 5,000 feet. Flight corridors are a good idea because they protect the legal pilot flying home on vacation. Drug smugglers, Mr. President, on the other hand, need to drop below the corridor to make a drug drop to boats waiting below.

Even if an aircraft is flying below the flight corridor, force may not be used unless the airborne officer visually confirms that the aircraft is engaged in illegal trafficking activity.

This provision in my amendment clarifies language in the 1986 drug bill that we passed which makes it a crime to drop drugs from an aircraft to awaiting boats below. This requirement is the most effective of all safeguards since the law enforcement officer knows he must actually witness proof that will hold up in court.

Now, the next safeguard, Mr. President. Having seen this, the airborne officer must make every effort to communicate with the smugglers' aircraft. My amendment requires the officer to use an extensive variety of methods approved by the FAA and international civil aviation organizations including radio contact on many internationally known emergency frequencies and by visual signals such as crossing the path of the intercepted aircraft and flashing the landing lights.

Next, Mr. President, if the smugglers' aircraft still refuses to land, after we have gone through all of that—you have tried to communicate by radio, by visual warnings—if the smugglers' aircraft still refuses to land, the airborne officer must notify his ground commander of the situation and ask for permission to fire a warning signal in the direction of the other plane.

Let me repeat, Mr President, you could not even fire a warning signal without permission from somebody else on the ground. Not even a warning signal.

If that permission is granted, the airborne officer may then, as I indicated, fire the warning signal. If the aircraft still refuses to land or make preparations to land, the airborne officer must once again—once again—notify his ground commander of the situation and request permission to use disabling or deadly force against the other aircraft.

If that permission is granted, Mr. President, then only if the airborne officer is absolutely certain that no innocent person will be harmed, the airborne officer may use force against the smuggler's aircraft.

Mr. President, the issue is this: There has been a lot of talk by the AOPA and some critics of the earlier amendment, and I suspect there will be additional discussion about this amendment as to the possibility some innocent pilot may be shot out of the air.

With all of these safeguards, Mr. President, I think it is virtually impossible for that to happen. I will not stand before the Senate and say there will be no accidents in life. There are accidents in life. One of us may get hit by a car on the way home tonight. But we have incorporated numerous safeguards that make it virtually impossible for that to happen.

Mr. President, we need to weigh that which is virtually impossible to happen against what we know is happening. What is happening is that 50 percent of the cocaine is coming through the cocaine airlift into this country. What is happening is that there are 5,000 new cocaine addicts every day.

What is happening is that lives are being ruined and 50 percent is coming in through private aircraft, and I predict that unless this loophole is closed, unless this gap in our defenses is closed, pretty soon well more than 50 percent of the cocaine will be coming in through private aircraft because it is a mesage to the cartel: "Get yourself a plane and come right on in. Get yourself a plane and come right on in."

Mr. President, this loophole has to be closed. It is not the intent of the Senator from Kentucky to delay consideration of this amendment. I have gone over the safeguards in some detail here. I do want to add as cosponsors of the amendment Senator KERRY of Massachusetts, Senator

D'AMATO of New York, and for the moment, Mr. President, I am happy to yield the floor.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I liked the last bill, so I like this one. I voted with the Senator last time. I would like to mention two things. I will be very brief. The first is the concern that we are going to shoot down an innocent party.

Well, first of all, I thought there were enough safeguards the first time. Safeguards have been added this time significantly increasing or diminishing—depending on how you look at it—increasing the safety or diminishing the prospects of an accident occurring. But I hate to say this: the police in my city, Wilmington, DE, or Washington, DC, or anywhere in the country this very night if they are in hot pursuit of a criminal will speed through the streets at 20, 35, 50, 70, 80 miles an hour, depending on what is needed in order to catch that criminal. Innocent people sometimes get killed. I do not say that cavalierly. When you are dealing with going after people who in fact are breaking the law and are a public hazard, sometimes accidents happen.

The notion that anything short of 99 percent of the people would not land, would not respond, or could not respond, to everything but a scene from "Top Gun" when the kid flew upside down and just about touched his canopy on top of the other guy's canopy—short of that, that is the only thing we are not demanding be done here.

So something may happen. But the fact of the matter is that it is a big problem, and this has many safeguards built in.

There is a second concern people raise; that is, the broader concern of whether or not we should be forcing down aircraft in the sky. Let me make this point. I will only make it once tonight, and I will cease and desist on this point.

We had no reluctance when the CIA was informed and in turn informed our military by informing the President that the terrorists who were involved in the Achille Lauro hijacking were on board a non-U.S. commercial airliner leaving from territory that was not the United States and landing in territory that was not the United States, in another part of the world, not even near our border. We had no reluctance to force a commercial aircraft down on a NATO air force base, not a United States Air Force base, and in fact hold at bay the Italian authorities while we took the terrorist off the airplane.

If we are willing to do that, as I think we should be willing to do, my goodness, the idea that we are going to tie the hands of those attempting to interdict aircraft coming into the United States seems to me somewhat bizarre.

I use this example when the Senator from Kentucky and I discussed this with our colleagues, I believe, in the Foreign Relations Committee. I said no one in this body would say that if the military received information and saw on the radar screen that there was an incoming jet aircraft, that was a fighter aircraft loaded with bombs and ordnance, no one would suggest that there be any reluctance to shoot it down after giving it appropriate warnings to turn or to land.

I would respectfully suggest more damage is done to the American people by one carload of cocaine, which can reach in tons and hundreds and thousands on occasion kilos, of cocaine being flown into the United States on twin engine aircraft, and sometimes on Lear jets and other aircraft, more damage is done by that than can be done to the United States of America by any aircraft flying in here, other than being equipped with a hydrogen weapon. And we would not hesitate to shoot that one down.

I realize these are two separate issues. One is knowledge that the aircraft we are ultimately giving the authority to shoot down if need be—that is one issue, whether or not that aircraft—is, in fact, figuratively speaking an enemy aircraft with a drug dealer flying it. But some have argued this is a separate issue, and that we should not be doing it anyway even if a drug dealer was flying it.

I respectfully suggest I have no hesitation were I in the position to be able to have the authority to do anything about it to suggest to anyone under my command, had I anyone under my command, to blow that aircraft out of the sky after sufficient warning.

Second, the likelihood of there being an innocent—we used to hear about the dentist from Peoria and his family going to Disney World. Well, the dentist from Peoria going to Disney World is not likely to be flying 400 feet above the ground coming off the Caribbean in the middle of the night heading due north. If the dentist from Peoria is doing that, the dentist is probably a drug dealer.

Mr. McCONNELL. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. BIDEN. There are some dentists who are drug dealers.

Mr. McCONNELL. If the dentist wanted to fly below 3,000 feet, he could stay over the land, and then he still would not be covered. The amendment applies if you are over water. The Senator is right on the mark with every point he has made. There is virtually no chance that the dentist from Peoria is going to get shot out of the air.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, in all law enforcement undertakings there is a chance that someone will be hurt. I am not promising, by supporting this amendment, that will not happen. There are people hurt when police officers go in and raid places where there are people engaging in illicit activity; even though some there are engaging in licit activity, people are hurt by stray bullets, and it will happen.

I cannot believe that this is an issue where we are going to find that our law enforcement and military operations are going to act irresponsibly on this. Obviously, if that is shown to be the case, we would have to respond. Obviously, there could be a mistake. My goodness, we are not talking about people flying from Peoria to Disney World. We are talking about people flying from Colombia to Miami or Texas or South Carolina, or other shore points to drop off these drugs.

I am prepared to accept the amendment, and I do not know whether or not there is an objection to the amendment.

Mr. McCONNELL. I would like to ask for the yeas and nays, but I want to make a final point. The authority that we are talking about here is not all that unusual. The Coast Guard has had this authority, with regard to boats, for quite some time. It has been exercised very responsibly. Over the last 9 years, there have been 1,500 interdictions, gunfire on 18 occasions, two people injured, and no one killed.

This authority is being given, not to DOD, but to Customs, Coast Guard, and DEA. They are three law enforcement agencies that, I think, know what to do with this additional authority. The drug czar is in favor of this amendment. I suspect that the majority of the Senate is in favor of this amendment. Mr. President, I have concluded my remarks, and I am happy to vote.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. I hope the Senator would consider withholding the request for the yeas and nays. There appears to be uniform support here. We have a lot of amendments. We have been in here late every night for the past 3 weeks. There are about 15 amendments to go. When we both practiced law and were trial lawyers, it was a good idea when you are winning to sit down, but——

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, there are a number of people on my side who voted against the amendment in August, who tell me they are going to vote for it this time. I would like to have the yeas and nays. It is not my desire to delay the Senate. I have been prepared to offer this amendment for 2 days, and I know there have been other sorrows and problems.

Mr. BIDEN. I understand, Mr. President. All politics is local, though.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am only going to take a minute, I say to my friend.

NEW MEXICO HELPING VICTIMS OF HURRICANE HUGO

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, as Hurricane Hugo victims continue to rebuild their lives after the devastating storm, I want to take a couple minutes to recognize a medical team from New Mexico that performed an invaluable service to the people of St. Croix, a team of New Mexicans, all members of the National Disaster Medical System, which consists of 71 medically trained people who volunteered a week of their time to care for people who have nowhere to seek treatment because the island hospital was destroyed during the storm.

This New Mexico team was selected as the best-trained medical group available and was first to be sent to this disaster area. The team is made up of 11 physicians, 6 registered nurses, 27 emergency technicians, and a number of other valuable people.

I can only begin to imagine what conditions are like there, and this New Mexico team has gone there to treat victims and help to get this island hospital operating again. They are volunteering their own time, medical equipment, and clothing. Such volunteer service to the people of St. Croix deserves recognition.

I commend these fine New Mexicans, and I ask unanimous consent that an article contained in the Albuquerque Journal be printed in the RECORD. I yield the floor.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW MEXICO VOLUNTEERS BRING MEDICAL CARE TO ISLAND

New Mexico has sent a disaster response team of 71 medically trained people to hurricane-ravaged St. Croix in the Virgin Islands.

The volunteers will spend about a week helping to care for people who normally would seek treatment at the island hospital. The hospital building was destroyed by Hurricane Hugo Sept. 17-18.

All the team members are part of the National Disaster Medical System, established in 1984 to respond to disasters anywhere in the United States.

The New Mexico team was selected as the best prepared and became the first team to be sent to an actual disaster area.

At its first staff meeting in the open field Saturday morning, the team gathered in a circle around Dr. Cy Stockhoff and listened to his admonishments against "freelancing the medical care here."

"If someone you never saw before comes and grabs you by the arm and wants you to go somewhere to treat someone, don't do it. We can't have members of this team running off to all parts of the island on individual missions, not without telling someone and knowing what it entails."

Stockhoff said the team's principal mission would be to put medical care on St. Croix back on its feet. "What they need us to do is to open this hospital and get it functioning. Medical people here have been pretty much overwhelmed; we need to give them a break," he said.

"We raised a lot of our own money to come down here," said Dr. Albert Vogel. "We bought our own medical equipment and clothing. Everyone on this team, including communications personnel, has medical training of some sort. We won't take anyone off to a disaster who can't contribute medically."

The team is made up of 11 physicians, six registered nurses, 27 emergency medical technicians and paramedics, and 27 support staff and lab technicans.

Many members of the team declined to be identified for security reasons. But personnel for the New Mexico Disaster Medical Assistance Team have listed the members of the coordinating staff. All but one are from the University of New Mexico Medical Center. They are:

Dr. Paul Roth, medical director.

Dr. Al Vogel, Public Health Service liaison.

Dr. George Key, lead doctor.

Sally Coan, lead nurse,

Rebecca Dickerson, lead paramedic.

Cy Stockhoff, team administrator.

Denis McKeon, assistant administrator.

Col. Robert Blair, Kirtland Air Force Base, communications coordinator.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PRESIDENT'S 1989 NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, this weekend, over a dozen law enforcement officers dressed in military fatigues descended on a crack house. The officers found a large quantity of what appeared to be illegal drugs. They found dozens of hypodermic needles, pipes, and other drug paraphernalia. They found equipment used to process cocaine into crack. Where were they? Helena, MT; not the inner city, not the areas of the country where one would expect to find the crack house, in the District of Colombia; Helena, MT.

During a recent hearing before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee a witness mentioned that members of a Columbia drug cartel had purchased land in the United States, laundering their drug proceeds.

I found out that some of this land is in one if the most beautiful spots in this country, the Flathead Lake region in my home State of Montana.

I am joining my colleagues, Senators PRYOR and BIDEN and others to once again stress the need for an adequate Federal commitment to the rural war on drugs.

A crack house in Helena and drug money in the Flathead brought home to me the enormity of the drug problem in this country. It is everywhere. Just last March I came to the floor in support of William Bennett's nomination as the first director of national drug control policy. At that time, I stressed the need for an overhaul of Federal policy concerning drug interdiction in rural areas.

Last July, I introduced a bill to increase funding for law enforcement efforts in rural States, because of dramatic increases in drug-related crime. For instance, Drug Enforcement Administration cocaine arrests in Montana have increased 100 percent in the last 5 years. My colleague from Arkansas, Senator PRYOR, tells me his State has experienced a similar increase.

Rural areas are especially conducive to methamphetamine production, since crack labs are less easily detected in the countryside than they are in the cities. A crank high—that is a substance made from various drugs which is, I think, even worse than crack—is similar to a cocaine high, except for one major difference: The cocaine high lasts for a few minutes, at most, but a crank high lasts for hours. And drug dealers do not have to import crank. They can make it anywhere. They can make it in rural areas, they can make it in America, and, unfortunately, they are making it in Montana and Arkansas and other rural States.

The Federal Government can no longer afford to underestimate the effects of drug-related crime in rural areas.

Last week Senator PRYOR and I joined together in introducing a bill to encourage the implementation of treatment programs in rural areas. In addition, we introduced another bill to provide for the establishment of a clearinghouse for information on rural drug education progams.

Substance abuse, including alcoholism, has taken its toll in Montana, as it has in Arkansas, California, New York, and other places across our country. But access to treatment is not readily available in many rural areas. This must change.

Senator BIDEN, Senator KENNEDY, and Senator HATCH worked with Senator PRYOR and myself to incorporate major provisions of our legislation into amendments to the bill that we are now considering. I hope these provisions are accepted.

I appreciate the cooperation of my colleagues. They realize that the battlefield for the war on drugs stretches across the entire country. No State, no city, no county, is exempted.

Mr. President, I also wish to thank Senator BIDEN, chairman of the committee, for being very, very helpful in incorporating these rural drug provisions. I thank him at this time.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the rural drug provisions contained in Senator BIDEN's State and local law enforcement amendment. I take pride that these rural drug provisions are based on several measures that I have introduced with Senator BAUCUS. In fact, these amendments include all central features of S. 1634, the Drug-Free Rural America Act, and S. 1353, the Rural Drug Initiative Act.

I applaud the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee for recognizing that the scourge of drugs is not confined to our Nation's large cities, but has spread to small towns and rural areas throughout our country. The sad fact is that no community is safe from illegal drugs and the dangerous criminals who sell them.

Let me cite a few examples from my home State of Arkansas:

In El Dorado, a community of 25,000 in southern Arkansas, drug arrests have almost doubled in a single year. The police chief attributes almost all of this to the introduction of crack cocaine early last year.

Los Angeles street gang members have been seen walking the streets of several southern Arkansas communities.

As of July 1989, the DEA had already located and shut down seven clandestine drug labs operating in remote areas of Arkansas.

Admissions at State-funded substance abuse treatment facilities outside the Little Rock region increased 33 percent between 1985 and 1988.

As of August 1989, the average waiting period at State-funded treatment facilities in Arkansas was 3 weeks.

These alarming facts illustrate the growing severity of the drug problem in rural areas of our country. Now is the time to declare war against the drug crisis in rural America. It is a war we must wage on two fronts: Reducing the supply of drugs through increased support for rural law enforcement and cutting demand for drugs through expanded rural treatment and prevention programs.

Tuesday night, the Senate provided needed assistance to one front of the rural drug war. By establishing a rural drug clearinghouse and authorizing grants to rural substance abuse treatment and education programs, the Senate brought rural America one step closer to the goal of providing treatment to all drug abusers who seek help. These proposals originated in two rural drug treatment and education bills I introduced with Senator BAUCUS. I am pleased that these proposals had the support of the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member of the Labor and Human Resources Committee.

Today, I urge my colleagues to assist rural America on the other key front of the rural drug war by increasing support for rural drug interdiction. Senator BIDEN's law enforcement amendment establishes a $20 million rural supplement to the law enforcement block grant program, targeting $10 million to special-need rural States, such as my home State of Arkansas, and channeling another $10 million for use in rural areas within other States. This measured block grant supplement will send Federal resources to rural law enforcement officers who are crying out for help in the fight against drugs.

Again, I wish to praise the chairman of the Judiciary Committee for including rural drug provisions in his State and local law enforcement amendment. Rural Americans will surely welcome this assistance in their fight against drug abuse in their communities.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, we are all busy around here, and I am no exception. I have been in a number of meetings today. I did not realize this particular subject was going to come up again this soon. Although I did not have a fully prepared speech, when I found out this was on the floor and about to be voted I felt compelled to come to the floor to speak on it, if only briefly.

One of the biggest shocks I have had since I have been in the U.S. Senate was when this matter came up before, just a few weeks ago, and passed. I had not even come over to talk about this, because I thought it was such a ludicrous proposal I was not going to bother with it. I supposed it would go down by 8 or 10 votes and that would be it, but in fact it passed by a substantial margin.

I have done a quite a bit of flying. I have an airplane of my own. I have experience as a private pilot, as well as flying militarily. I have been in aerial combat and know about airplanes and being shot at.

How some of these provisions in this thing are to be carried out, I do not know. If I have ever seen anything that I thought was posturing on behalf of the U.S. Senate, this is it. All we have to do is go into a frenzy around here to get our names on it quick so we can release our press releases.

Here we are saying nothing about the frequencies, the kinds of warning shots, and what about international situations, saying nothing about night flying when most of this occurs. It says nothing about flying around our borders, which I do occasionally, and have done in my own airplane.

So I will run through this very briefly here. I do not plan to take a lot of time because I do not want to delay the Senate's time on this. But I just do not see how any of this really, truly works.

Now, the only thing to be said on the other side is that we do have lined up a number of things here that have to be met, which, if we really put a strict interpretation on this, which we have to do to keep from losing lives unnecessarily, means that all we are doing is setting up something that looks like we have done something that will never possibly be used, as I see it.

The amendment reads:

> Whenever any law enforcement officer of the United States Customs Service, United States Coast Guard, or Drug Enforcement Administration, commanding an aircraft displaying proper identifying insignia, instructs an aircraft to land on the basis of knowledge that the aircraft is transporting illegal narcotics on board, and the aircraft does not land or make preparations to land; then, after observing all appropriate safeguards established under section 2 of this Act, the law enforcement officer is authorized to fire a warning signal; and if the aircraft does not land or prepare to land in response to such warning signal and other previous instructions, the law enforcement officer is authorized to fire into the aircraft.

Fire, shoot him down, kill him.

Now, let me go back to this: "* * * an aircraft displaying proper identifying insignia." That is the No. 1 qualifier right there.

Let us say I am flying my Beech Baron, flying around the Mexican border, well on the American side on a beautiful night. There is no requirement for me to have the radios on, even if I am flying on a visual flight plan, as it is called. I am navigating, in that case, by looking from one town to another, going along, flying at the proper altitude. I do not even have to be on a particular frequency, and there is not any FAA requirement.

Let us say the aircraft that comes up to challenge me on that night flight has identifying insignia. I cannot see him. I do not know what he is doing. He has no searchlights on him or anything like that. I have no floodlights that I can illuminate an aircraft with. I might not even see him if he comes up behind me. But he is supposed to have identifying insignia and then he instructs me to land.

Now, how does he instruct me to land? That is a good one.

Senator HUMPHREY is here. He is a former airline pilot. He knows all these same things. How does somebody instruct you to land at night on a VFR flight plan? There is no way that you could do that that I know of.

Mr. HUMPHREY. If the Senator will yield, I agree with the Senator. I would not want anyone in a pursuit aircraft maneuvering close to me at night, close enough so that he could signal me by hand that he wants me to land, because he is going to bump into me.

Mr. GLENN. I tell the Senator that I agree with him 100 percent. If I am flying my airplane and someone comes flying up beside me at night and I see him up close enough that I could get some sort of signal, I am going to turn my lights off and take evasive action. And he will not hit me. I will guarantee that. I have had practice doing that, as a matter of fact.

So I think the whole thing is just so ridiculous to assume that this can be done.

Now, then we get into the procedural safeguards, all of which have to be met, I grant you, so there will not be anybody shot at if—and this is a big "if"—if the Customs Service and people like that do not get carried away with this new authority and go ahead and do some dumb things and shoot at airplanes.

We are supposed to adopt regulations "providing that neither a warning shot, nor disabling nor deadly force, may be used" unless all the safeguards have been met.

Now, what does this warning shot consist of? Is this a very pistol? Is it a tracer?

In the original legislation, there was going to be a warning shot fired. I would ask the author of this legislation: Has he ever watched a shot go by? You do not see many of them. Yet, we are going to fire a warning shot. We do not say if it has to be a tracer. What if I am not looking out when this warning shot goes past? What if I am in my airplane, flying in there, talking to somebody, looking down on the floor at instruments, picking up a chart or something, and somebody fires a warning shot and I do not see the warning shot? Then, supposedly, they can shoot me down?

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GLENN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. When we were down in El Salvador, Senator CHILES and I, our helicopter came under fire from the ground. We were told later by the other helicopter that they were shooting tracers at us, but we did not see the tracers. We could hear the bullets, and some hit the helicopter.

The Senator from Ohio has been shot at with tracers a lot. Can you always see the tracers?

Mr. GLENN. No; I have been hit 12 times by antiaircraft fire, never saw a single bullet coming that hit me yet; five times in World War II, seven times in Korea.

Now, I have seen tracers go by. It scares the devil out of you, I can tell you that.

The first thing you do is take evasive action and get out of there as fast as you can.

Let me continue on some of these. We are going to fire these warning shots. You cannot fire a warning shot nor disabling or deadly force unless you have some other things met first. The FAA has to provide public notice. They have to inform "all private aircraft operators entering U.S. air space that they are required to obey any instructions from U.S. law enforcement agents, including instructions to land their aircraft, and that failure to obey such instructions may result in use of force."

Who identifies these airplanes? What tells me that they are a U.S. law enforcement agency if I see an aircraft coming toward me out there, particularly at night? You do not see them coming. How on Earth do I know that this is a U.S. law enforcement airplane that is coming at me out there? And yet, failure to obey such instructions may result in use of force. And I am completely innocent, flying, with my family, along the border space.

Well, No. 2: "Such aircraft is flying outside of flight corridors" and the flight corridors are 3,000 feet wide.

Now, I would ask anybody that does any flying these days—well, this is 3,000 feet lower. OK. This is altitude.

Now, what if you are flying over land? Is this 3,000 feet altitude above ground level? Airplanes fly these days above sea level. Even though you are going to Denver, when you land at Denver, your altitude on your airplane indicates 5,000 feet or so because that is what you are interested in, avoiding running into the ground when you are one of these flights.

Let us say you are going along in this airplane——

Mr. McCAIN. Will the Senator yield on that point.

Mr. GLENN. No, not on that point. I want to continue. Then I will respond to anything the distinguished Senator has to offer on this. But I would like to complete this while I have my thoughts going here.

So we find out here that we are not even specifying here. Are we saying an altitude of 3,000 feet above mean sea level? Is that what they mean? That is what they are flying at.

Now, if they get below that, are we saying that if all other criteria have been met now that we can shoot at them? Are you going to shoot somebody down?

We do not even spell out these things in this proposed legislation. Yet we are sayng that "in no case be lower than an altitude of 3,000 feet except to provide reasonable access to designated airports and landing strips, and provide for emergency flight conditions."

How on Earth does the other airplane know that there are emergency flight conditions? I have no way of informing somebody else. There is no requirement to be on emergency frequency here. There is no requirement to be on anything. And if I am flying into a field out here at some elevation, it does not even say whether I am above cloud level or above sea level, which is the normal way of flying.

No. 3:

The airborne law enforcement officer has visually confirmed that such aircraft is engaging in illegal narcotic trafficking.

Can anybody tell me how they can look in another airplane and tell me that that other airplane has in it, not just my wife and my two kids, but a load of cocaine in the backseat? I really do not know how we know something like that.

No. 4:

The airborne law enforcement officer must use all means of communication that are available, internationally recognized, and accepted by the International Civil Aviation Organization, including, but not limited to, radio communications on the international emergency frequencies, rocking of wings, and flashing landing lights, to order such aircraft to land.

I, as a private pilot flying in this country, am not required to monitor a single one of those frequencies. As a domestic pilot, I do not have to monitor international emergency frequencies.

The rocking of wings? What if I am flying at night. I do not look at somebody rocking wings at me in the middle of the night. How on Earth do I see him? I do not have floodlights on this thing. This gets a little crazy. I cannot believe people took this seriously and voted on this. Flashing landing lights. That is fine, but landing lights are on the forward part of the airplane and they face forward.

When somebody comes up to my airplane he has to be behind me when he flashes his landing lights. No. 1, if he is behind me, I cannot see his landing lights and if he is ahead of me, he is out ahead of me and I cannot see his landing lights. So how does he flash his landing lights to signal me to do anything? He cannot do it.

Rocking his wings. That is a great one in the middle of the night. I am going to rock my wings until I wear out the wheel on the airplane and it is not going to make any difference. This is supposed to be part of our signaling system.

Then, if such aircraft fails to comply with such instructions to land, the airborne law enforcement officer must notify his command authority located on the ground of the circumstances and seek permission to fire a warning signal to land; undesignated as to what type signal. What is it? We fire a bullet? Do I watch that bullet go by? Then I know I should land real quick when I see that bullet. That is a good one.

Tracers? What intensity of tracer? Tracers will get my attention but what if it is at night and I am looking down in the cockpit getting a chart or something and I do not see that tracer go by? Are you going to shoot me down? My wife, my kids, me, private pilot flying along minding my own business?

We are going to fire a warning signal to land yet we do not designate even what that warning signal is.

No. 6:

If such aircraft fails to comply with such instructions to land after a warning signal has been fired, the airborne law enforcement officer must notify his command authority located on the ground of the circumstances and seek permission to fire into the aircraft.

I certainly hope the command authority is consulted on that.

No. 7:

No use of disabling or deadly force shall be permitted while such aircraft is over land, or if the airborne law enforcement officer has reason to believe that under the circumstances, innocent persons would be harmed by the use of disabling or deadly force against such aircraft.

How on Earth can an intercepting aircraft come up and fly alongside my Beech Baron cruising along and know whether there are innocent people inside or not? There is no possible way we can do the things we are talking about here.

Then we get off of all those things and say, "The regulations required by this section shall be promulgated and adopted by the U.S. Customs Service, U.S. Coast Guard, and Drug Enforcement Administration not later than January 1, 1990."

If anybody can tell me how they are going to do that and how this thing will not have the potential of creating much more havoc than it is going to correct, I just do not know what it is.

And then, on top of this we finish up by saying that if anybody makes a mistake and shoots down innocent people we are going to indemnify them and say they are not held responsible for just doing what they did.

As I said, I did not even come over before when this was up because I trusted the judgment of the U.S. Senate to be more mature than it was. I think we have to fall back once in a while, even if it is drugs, even hard drugs. No one has been more consistent in calling for penalties on hard drugs than I have, but let us not go into a piranha-like feeding frenzy here every time somebody says drugs. We all rush to support something if somebody says it is against drugs, even with the potential of shooting down innocent people in private airplanes.

Do I want to stop that kind of drug traffic? Of course I want to stop that kind of drug traffic. But not at the expense of taking a chance of having innocent people shot down in their private airplanes.

I will not belabor this any further. My colleagues may guess from this I am against this piece of legislation. I think it is ludicrous and I suggest that everybody vote against this thing and let us send it back where it came from before we kill some innocent people out there. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I have voted against this amendment every time I had an opportunity to vote against it, but I must say I have never heard a more compelling, persuasive reason than the Senator from Ohio has just delivered.

I say there is not a person here in this body who commands more respect than the Senator on almost any issue, and certainly on this one.

Here is a decorated marine combat pilot who has been shot at, who has been hit, and who understands what it is like in the air, and who understands what it is like in the air at 2 a.m. That expression over in the House, "if you fly you die," may be some hyperbole. But I can tell my colleagues one thing, I can conceive of 20 scenarios in the middle of the night, of an innocent family coming back from the Bahamas or St. Croix or St. Johns in their little Beech Baron, the father a weekend pilot, off the corridor, off the beaten path. My gosh, if a KAL Airlines 747 can get out of its corridor, pop, who is a weekend pilot, can certainly get out of the corridor.

This is just a disaster waiting to happen, if the Senate ever takes leave of its senses and approves this thing.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I have to confess from listening to the distinguished Senator from Ohio, if one were to take any one of the points that he makes—we may say flashing lights cannot be seen from behind, but then if they are behind, then they are tail lights, and they get ahead—certainly, we might say, that is not adequate warning.

Mr. President, let me suggest, though, that there is a comprehensive set of procedures delineated and there will be additional procedures as they relate to the rulemaking capability of CAB, FAA, and also the other agencies involved.

But these are some of the safeguards. We are not talking about anyone. We are not talking about a visual contact that somebody makes with plane that he or she does not recognize and therefore becomes a target. That is nonsense.

We are not talking about shooting planes down over land, over a populated area. The legislation specifically says that it will only be used over waters. It does not have land mass. This is nonsense.

The FAA publishes announcements to all pilots. All pilots are going to know. This is not going to be implemented without there being the widest possible dissemination. The FAA establishes and maintains air corridors with a floor of 3,000 feet. Aircraft dropping below this floor for anything other than emergency landing, yes, they know that they will be suspect. They will know that.

There is the issue of transponders, whether or not they can be utilized in furtherance of this.

Law enforcement agencies visually confirm illegal activity. There has to be a reason. Not just that the plane is below 3,000 feet and has not been identified. We are not just going to come out and shoot them down. They see things such as emptying bales, suspicious activities, place of origination.

We are not going to find a plane that happens to cross our path and we do not know where it started. Most of these planes are going to be tracked from the airfield they take off from when there is pretty darned good reason to know and suspect they are drug planes, involved in illegal activity. We have those capabilities.

This is nonsense to say it is just going to be the poor guy coming from the Bahamas on a family trip and he has lost his way and we are going to shoot him down. That is not the case at all. And if he lands on a field in America and is held there we are going to follow him in. The problem is when he heads to Mexico to outrun us, or heads to another country. That is the problem.

What do we do then? What about hot pursuit? What about the local law enforcement people?

When somebody commits a bank robbery, shoots people, hops in a car and takes off, how do you know that was the car that was identified?

Day in and day out our law enforcement officers are called upon to make critical choices and critical decisions. We can say, following the same logic, does a bad guy run around with a headlight behind him that says I am a bad guy? I am the guy that did it.

It is just about as silly as taking every single one of these and saying any one of these is fatal. Take the totality of the law. Law enforcement agencies must repeatedly attempt to communicate by radio and visual signals to instruct the suspects to land.

We have to trust in the common sense of our law enforcement officers. These are law enforcement officers, DEA people, customs people, trained in this. They certainly are going to give every benefit of the doubt, and err on the side of caution. Unless they know and unless everything possible has been done, and yes unless they ascertain that these are people who are trying to run.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, this discussion goes further. It says if this decision is not made by the fellow up there in the sky who may become trigger happy, he has to seek permission from the ground commander before firing a warning shot. We are not saying just a warning shot, the kind of warnings that are necessary that would be given.

These decisions are made every day on the ground, on the water and, Mr. President, we are suggesting it is about time we had it in the air. Let me tell you why. Because our people are being brutalized on the ground. They are being killed. There are 200,000 crack babies born addicted. Nineteen thousand planes it was estimated crossed our border by the DEA. We intercepted 1 percent of it. Hopefully, by using the kind of technology we will have, we will be able to do better. And if we shoot down a couple of these guys, maybe there will not be 19 planes to carry in the bulk of cocaine.

Mr. President, we can find a way to pick at anything. I suggest we stop picking and start going after the drug dealers. I am pleased to support this legislation.

Mr. McCONNELL. Will the Senator yield just for an observation?

Mr. D'AMATO. Yes, certainly.

Mr. McCONNELL. The Dominican Republic went to this procedure 2 years ago. They do not have a flight problem. It stopped, it ended it. It stopped once and for all. I thank the Senator from New York for his support for the amendment and articulate comments.

Mr. D'AMATO. The Cubans do not have an overflight problem that they do not want and do not know about. People know. You do not hear people getting shot down willy-nilly. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I am a supporter; I am a cosponsor and I think the Senator from Ohio has done a masterful job of ridiculing a plan, but it is not this plan, No. 1, and I think that a great many of his comments, which I enjoyed listening to, also, simply do not apply to what this particular piece of legislation is trying to do. There are few Americans with the distinguished flying record of the Senator from Ohio, with the distinguished combat record, and the combination of the two is powerful when he speaks to this. Very powerful.

I am a pilot with a mere 1,200 civilian hours. I have never flown in combat, although I have been in combat and I have had tracers fired at me and I worked under rules of engagement, very complicated rules of engagement in Southeast Asia. But as a private pilot with an instrument flight rules commercial rating, I am not intimidated by what this represents to me as a private pilot. There is not a pilot who is worth their salt flying across a body of water, which is what this contemplates, who does not check with their notice to airmen, who does not first file a flight plan on almost all occasions, who is not tuned in to the frequencies, checking in if you are leaving from Miami, whatever, which is controlled air space, talking with the tower and the flight center and eventually with the arrival authorities in another country.

This specifically does not apply over land. It is not meant to. It also specifically contemplates that regulations are going to be issued by the appropriate people; specifically, regulations would be issued by the Coast Guard, Customs, the DEA and until those regulations are adopted, obviously nothing can happen. I presume, and we have to make some presumptions of common sense here, that the Coast Guard, the DEA and Customs are going to issue regulations which are within the realm of common sense with respect to any kind of engagement, No. 1.

No. 2, this legislation is directed only at that situation where there has been a visual confirmation of illegal narcotics activity. What this is specifically designated to do is not to deal with the dentist flying from Peoria. They do not come under this whatsoever. There has to be a visual confirmation of bags of heroin, whatever, being kicked out in a drop, that is, in the Bahamas or somewhere.

Why is this legislation designed this way? Because we have heard from countless agents and we have seen the films. With infrared photography, you can see at night. And with the infrared photography, we have seen the actual films of these people flying low, dropping their drugs and then dipping their wings and flying away. Our agents who film these are powerless to do anything about it—powerless. We have had daytime photography and we actually had daytime sightings where as they fly in and drop the drugs, they turn around and the pilot flips the bird to our agents and flies away with impunity. Now that is what this bill is supposed to deal with. There is no permission going to be granted if there is any doubt whatsoever if there has not been a visual observation of illegal narcotics activity.

So the distinguished Senator from Ohio has spoken effectively, and he has adequately ridiculed the concept of shooting down planes anywhere over the United States. I agree with that ridicule. That would be folly. It would be insanity. But that is not what this legislation does or is intended to do. It applies only to that situation where you have visual sightings of narcotics trafficking taking place; where you have rules and regulations; where you have checked with the authorities and it is over water, and it is specifically designed to deal with flights from Colombia, flights from the islands.

I think that regulations can be put together within the realm of common sense that allow our enforcement officials to stop being made into people who are put out on this line without the ability to do anything about it. I respectfully suggest that it is simply not the kind of open-ended turkey shoot that the Senator from Ohio has suggested it is.

Mr. GLENN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. MIKULSKI). The Chair recognizes the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. GLENN. Madam President, let me go to the authorities on this. I was a bit emotional a while ago. Let me be a bit dispassionate at this time and quote from those people who are charged with enforcing the drug enforcement laws of this country. The chief operations officer for the drug enforcement agency came before the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations on September 26. During that hearing, he was asked some questions by Senator NUNN with regard to this particular situation. His name is David Westrate, chief operations officer for DEA. Senator NUNN said:

> I want to get back to the source in a moment, but just one other question, because we are having to struggle with it, or will soon, in conference. What do you think the need is, is there a need for the ability of law enforcement to shoot down aircraft in this country that do not respond to orders to land?
> Mr. WESTRATE. Well, Mr. Chairman, that is a very sensitive thing. I have been trained as an agent. I have 25 years of experience, and one of the fundamentals we learn as Federal agents is you never shoot at a fleeing felon. If a felony were committed in my presence here on the streets in Washington, let's say we had 5 hand-to-hand purchases of drugs from somebody, we went to arrest him and that person ran, or jumped in a car and ran, we can't shoot at him as a matter of policy.
>
> So, first of all, when we talk about shooting down an aircraft, you are talking about shooting at a fleeing felon, in a sense, one nobody.
>
> Senator NUNN. Suspected felon.
> Mr. WESTRATE. Right, suspected. I mean, who knows who is in the airplane, is it perhaps an undercover agent somebody doesn't know about it? Is it an informant? Is it some innocent people along with a guilty party? What are we really dealing with here? So, you know, is it somebody maybe who doesn't have a full understanding of the language? Who knows, there are a million possibilities here.

On the other hand, I think we have to have some strength in our interdiction activities. I don't think a shootdown policy is something that will ultimately come to pass, in my view. It might, but I don't think it will.

Senator NUNN. You don't think that is needed now, or desirable?

Mr. WESTRATE. Well, I don't think it is, for the reasons I have said. You know, we have a constitutional rule that says you are innocent until proven guilty, and to me proven guilty means a trial.

Now, when you shoot across the bow of a vessel or you shoot into the engine compartment of a vessel, that is disabling fire and that boat stops and you arrest the people. When you shoot an aircraft, there is only one way that plane is going and that is down. I mean, the odds of someone surviving that, I don't think are very strong.

Senator NUNN. So there is no such thing as shooting not to kill in terms of downing an aircraft.

Mr. WESTRATE. Not that I know of. You would have to be awful lucky.

Senator NUNN. What I was trying to get at in terms of percentage, is the question of how much cocaine comes in by air, what percentage of the cocaine coming into America comes by air, therefore how important is this, even if the authority was given?

Mr. WESTRATE. A rough guess, between 10 and 20 percent. I will get you the specific estimates, but I would say 10 to 20 percent.

But let me add something real quick. If we do not have a shootdown policy, I still think we have the opportunity to address these people if we are organized as police forces multi-nationally. That is why we can pursue these people back. If the Colombians have the air capacity to chase an aircraft that has gone to the Bahamas, seen law enforcement presence and decided to flee back to Colombia, we have every capability of being able to communicate, to track through radar, U.S. military, U.S. Customs, U.S. Coast Guard, to track that aircraft all the way to Colombia, having alerted our Colombian counterparts. They will make a seizure of that airplane when it lands, simple.

The question is having the Colombia police or the Colombian military, whatever their choice is, to be able to fly to a target and arrest them, it is not a difficult thing to do.

That is the Chief Operations officer of the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Mr. KERRY. Will the distinguished Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GLENN. I will yield but I think that says it all, in addition to what I said before. As soon as the remarks are finished, I will move to table.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will ask if both Senators will yield.

Mr. GLENN. I am finished.

HL RECONCILIATION

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, if the Senator from Ohio has yielded the floor, I seek recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, I remind Senators that for this week we must complete action on the pending measure. Then we have to complete action on the catastrophic measure, on which we hope we will be able to obtain a time agreement, limiting the amendments, but that would still take several hours under the best of circumstances. And then we must proceed to the reconciliation bill.

I have already indicated that we will be in session this weekend in an effort to complete that prior to Sunday evening. If we fail to do that, then the Senate will return to session on Tuesday and continue until such time as we do complete action on the reconciliation bill.

There has been a great deal of discussion and comment and analysis about the reconciliation process. The House passed their bill today. I have several times in the last few days, beginning with the lengthy Finance Committee meeting earlier this week, said to the distinguished Republican leader it is my belief that the best approach we could take as a Senate, as a Congress, and as a Government is to attempt to return the reconciliation process to its original intention, which was a limited process, to achieve meaningful deficit reduction.

For a variety of reasons, which need not be detailed now, it is apparent that that process has gone awry and the reconciliation process, because it contains limitations in an effort to give prominence to the original objective of deficit reduction, has by virtue of those limitations served as a magnet to a great deal of other legislation.

One need only look at the House bill passed today as dramatic evidence of the statement I have just made.

To help move us toward the public policy that is in the best interest of the country, I have met on several occasions with the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee and the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee.

I have advised the distinguished Republican leader of our discussions in this regard and of our intention to present a suggestion to our colleagues this evening on how best to proceed in that regard.

Accordingly, Madam President, I am going to ask that we permit that discussion to occur now, having been notified the former chairman of the Budget Committee and ranking member, the Senator from New Mexico, is present, as is the distinguished Republican leader.

I will yield, asking that the chairmen of the Budget Committee and the Finance Committee be recognized to make a suggestion, and then yield to the distinguished Republican leader or, if he wishes, to yield to him now to respond.

Mr. DOLE. Only briefly now. I am more interested in trying to get a tighter agreement on catastrophic. I would just say to all Senators we submitted a list I think of four amendments plus there will be a budget waiver, which I think both sides will have to do if you are going to have any plan, and the time is about 4½ hours.

I was prepared to go back to those Senators to see if we could reduce that time. This thing has been argued so often I cannot believe we need more than 30 minutes equally divided on any plan or at most 40 minutes equally divided.

I think I can encourage Senator MCCAIN and others to abide by that because it would be my hope, if we take up catastrophic, we could vote on these various plans and complete action in a day or less because, as the majority leader indicated, there is a lot of work to be done.

So I did submit earlier today a proposal to the majority leader. I understand now that he has had some indication on his side of the number of amendments.

I urge my colleagues on both sides, if we want to leave on Sunday sometime, then we should not take—I think I counted last time 15 hours on the catastrophic bill—15 hours. By the time you have quorum calls and rollcalls, you are talking about a good day and a half of an all-night session.

As far as catastrophic is concerned, I think the principal person on this side, Senator MCCAIN, would be willing to settle for less than an hour, much less than an hour, and all those who feel constrained to speak could speak sometime during the day on one of the amendments or one of the plans.

So I want to join the majority leader in suggesting if we can put that consent agreement together tonight, that would be something we might be able to do starting early tomorrow morning and maybe finish it by 2 or 3 o'clock.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the leader yield on catastrophic?

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I might say to the distinguished majority leader——

Mr. DOLE. I do not have the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. DOMENICI. On catastrophic, there is a genuine concern about the point of order. If you have five or six agreed-upon amendments, I think all of them that I have seen would technically require a waiver of the Budget Act.

I think our Republican leader will be suggesting that we find a mechanism whereby we could test the Senate on a waiver of the budget process for all of them, once they have been looked at, so we either vote yes or no.

I am not suggesting that. I am saying there is talk about it. It might alleviate some of the problems. I would think it makes sense. I merely suggest it. I think our Republican leader is aware of it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator. I thank the distinguished Republican leader and join him in requesting restraint from all Members. Senators constantly ask me during the evenings why we are here so long. The answer is—it is, of course, a rhetorical question in reality because everyone knows why we are here for so long—because we move slowly during the day, and then there are a number of amendments and lengthy debate.

Mr. McCAIN. Madam President, will the distinguished majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. McCAIN. I thank the majority leader.

I was looking at the proposed amendments. There are several of them that say they request 2 hours equally divided, 90 minutes equally divided. They are issues well-known to all of us. I hope we can agree to, on some of these, 15 minutes to a side.

I might also add that some of them are basically minor iterations of other amendments.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that particularly given the knowledge that most of us have on this issue, we should be able to cut this down to 4 or 5 hours. I hope the distinguished Finance chairman will agree with that.

Mr. BENTSEN. I say that I certainly share the viewpoint that we ought to be able to cut them substantially. I hope we can do it. We are much more familiar, of course, with the amendment of the Senator from Arizona, although he just changed it some. I understand he is asking permission to further change it to an additional form.

But if we have a few amendments that have quite a different approach to it, it is not one of those things that we can settle in 15 minutes with some of those, but to the extent I can convince those members to cut back on time, amendments from our committee, I will be so doing.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will urge that. I would like, according to my prior statement, to yield to the distinguished chairmen of the Budget Committee, and the Finance Committee, who are prepared to present the suggestion to which I earlier alluded, and then obviously the opportunity to respond will be available to the distinguished ranking member of the Budget Committee. And I would like to make some additional comments as well.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the distinguished majority leader for yielding.

Mr. President, it is critical that we avoid sequester. I have taken the floor of this Chamber three times this week to speak on the question of sequester and about the necessity of avoiding sequester. Sequester will take place on October 16 unless we pass reconciliation in both Houses and a reconciliation in the conference is agreed to.

October 16 is only a short time away. When you deduct from the remaining time the 2 weekends and the holiday for Columbus Day, and a religious holiday, that gives us 7 working days to avoid sequester.

In the event of sequester, that is going to create chaos. It will be a chaotic condition.

It is elementary that one of the fundamental duties of government is to bring order to human affairs. If government is there for no other reason, it is for that. And for us to allow a sequester to take place I believe destroys confidence in government and destroys confidence in those who are responsible for government, whether they be in the White House, whether they be in the U.S. Senate, or in the House of Representatives.

I am pleased to see the distinguished ranking member of the Senate Budget Committee on the floor because I know he shares my concern about sequester and the consequences of sequester.

He and I worked hand in hand for long hours, long days, and weeks to come up with what we thought was a fair bipartisan budget agreement. And the driving force behind that was that we could bring order to the budget process for fiscal year 1990.

We are faced now with the task of avoiding a sequester with time running out. We are faced with a reconciliation bill here in the U.S. Senate that is fairly heavy with extraneous matter.

I say to my colleagues that many, in fact most, of these extraneous matters are meritorious. They are matters that I think most of us would support. But the fundamental fact is that they have no place on a reconciliation bill. They simply load it down, and make it too heavy to carry.

I have been in meetings with the distinguished majority leader, the very distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, and I think we have concluded jointly—the chairman of the Finance Committee can certainly speak for himself. But I think we have concluded there is only one responsible course to take at this very late hour; that is, to strip the bill, the reconciliation bill, of every extraneous provision, every single one of them, and we must lay aside the capital gains debate, lay aside all matters that would keep us from finishing the reconciliation bill in time to avoid sequester.

That I think is the only responsible course to take at this particular time.

I know that the distinguished ranking member of the Budget Committee shares my concern about extraneous matters. He circulated a letter which detailed the various extraneous provisions on the House reconciliation and on the Senate reconciliation at the time it was circulated. I say to may friend form New Mexico that we picked up quite a few more heavy matters since then. The reconciliation bill has been weighted down even more.

So the proposal that I would like to lay before this body this evening is that all Senators, our friends on the other side of the aisle, join us in restoring the improved function of the reconciliation bill, join us in stripping it clean, join us in laying aside the debate over capital gains which has been so divisive, and let us simply let the Finance Committee go forward and raise the $5.3 billion and no more which was the basis of the bipartisan budget agreement that we made a few months ago—a bipartisan budget agreement that was announced with such fanfare in the Rose Garden, one that some of us took some dubious pride in, and certainly it was one supported by the administration and by our friends on the other side of the aisle.

We simply have an obligation to move forward, meet our fiscal responsibilities to this reconciliation bill, and then deal with extraneous matters and capital gains on another day.

Mr. BENTSEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. BENTSEN. Madam President, we have reached a critical position in trying to achieve a cut in the deficit that we think is important to our country. It is impeded by the fact that we have a difference of opinion on what to do on capital gains. The President of the United States thinks that we ought to move on the capital gains. This Senator thinks that should be a lower priority. But that kind of a debate is going to continue. When you reach that kind of an impasse, then I think it is time to look at the procedures to see if we should not take a different approach.

We fought part of this fight night before last. And the chairman's position was debated, and we won that point. We are now in the position where the capital gains provision would take 60 votes to be able to win that point and establish a waiver.

So from a tactical standpoint at least the IRA has the advantage for the moment. But we have a higher priority. I am well aware of that; that is, to try to achieve what we have to do, reach the Gramm-Rudman targets, and avoid sequester.

So with that in mind, in spite of a great amount of work done by the members of the Finance Committee, whether we are talking about rural health or talking about child tax credit, et cetera, whether we are talking about earnings limitations raised on Social Security or talking about the elderly, which I feel so strongly about.

I am ready, if the leadership on both sides is ready, to see that we move to a stripped-down bill, and that would be the removal of the IRA's, and that would also mean no capital gains offer. If we take out some of these measures that so much work and so much effort has been made on, that does not mean that they will not be visited at another time after we get past reconciliation.

They will be coming back. Capital gains will come back, and the IRA will come back, child tax credits will be coming back, and certainly raising the earnings limitations on Social Security will be coming back.

I am prepared to explore with the majority leader and with the chairman of the Budget Committee and the leadership on the Republican side to see if we cannot arrive at an accommodation, so we can get the job done and do it in time to meet the sequester deadlines. I will tell you, my friend, I am ready to do that, if it will accomplish an objective.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, I will be very brief. The two chairmen have stated well the situation and the mechanism we propose to deal with. I simply say to my colleagues that this is a good faith, serious suggestion. It would obviously require participation by Senators from both sides of the aisle in making determinations as to what is extraneous, what should be excluded, and what should not be.

But every single Senator, without exception, has made countless speeches on the problem and threat to our future and our economy posed by the Federal budget deficit and the rapidly growing Federal debt. We devised a mechanism that attempted to focus our energy and effort on dealing with it, and each of us now knows that that mechanism is not achieving its intended purpose.

What we must do is restore a sense of responsibility and discipline when dealing with the deficit. This would not disadvantage anyone, any proposal or legislative initiative or amendment to be offered at some other time to some other measure. It simply says that we have a crisis in this country, we have an impending deadline, and I hope that we can join together and deal with it in a serious and responsible way.

This is not a gimmick; this is not a mechanism to gain tactical or other advantage; this is a serious effort to deal with a very serious problem, and I hope very much that we will be able to do so.

I thank my colleagues for their patience. I am pleased to yield the floor.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Madam President, I think the words of the chairman of the Budget Committee and the majority leader and the chairman of the Finance Committee have been most generous. I am totally inclined to agree for a variety of reasons, and one more that I will add on my own. It is responsible to strip this out.

Second, it does not serve any of us well, the majority or minority, to start this body down the process where the majority decides to use the reconciliation process—It started out as itsy, bitsy things, and now it has become a super appropriations finance budget bill and put everything into it you can, prohibit debate on it, and that does not serve this body well, Republican or Democrat, majority or minority.

I think this offer is a generous, intelligent offer. I hope we can sit down and honestly try to bargain out what is extraneous and what is not. We may have slight differences of opinion, but I will wager that on 95 percent of the things in that bill, we will go yes, yes, that is extraneous. Even if there are things we want, we know if they are extraneous.

I thank the majority leader and the chairman of the Budget Committee and the chairman of the Finance Committee.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Let me first thank the distinguished Senator from Oregon who had to rush back to be here. As I started to say earlier, the reconciliation process which was established in 1974, and I was here at that time, and I remember all the debate we had and all the good intentions that went into that.

There were a lot on both sides of the aisle. I remember, particularly, Senator Muskie and Senator Percy spent many hours trying to put something together on a bipartisan basis.

But the process has been used for unintended purposes since it was first initiated, making it sort of a mockery. The inclusion of unrelated provisions, referred to extraneous matter in reconciliation legislation, has long been criticized since it was started by the Congress and the Senate in 1980.

That was a Democratic-controlled Senate, but I must say Republicans thought it was a pretty good thing, and it was continued.

We tried to curb the practice with the adoption of the Byrd rule, which happened in a Republican Senate, to eliminate extraneous provisions. But I must say, I think we have sort of gone back to where we were in the early eighties.

In addition to the extraneous provisions, another concern is "what type of deficit reduction is considered appropriate for reconciliation measures?" The type of provision that produces only one-time savings and that may result in greater costs in the future years, such as asset sales or shift in payments and other transactions from one fiscal year to another are harmful and we use them all the time. They should not be considered reconciliation.

Under the 1985 Balanced Budget Act asset sales and loan payments generally may not be counted as deficit reduction. This year we adopted a sense-of-the-Congress provision that asset sales and loan payments should be counted as reconciliation.

The 1987 Balanced Budget Reaffirmation Act expanded the definition of extraneous matters under the Byrd rule to include provisions increasing outlays for decreasing revenues in fiscal years beyond those covered by the reconciliation measure, and extended the expiration date of the rule to September 30, 1992.

The act also prohibited counting as deficit reduction the transfer of any government transaction including any payment, expenditure, asset sale, or revenues from one fiscal year to another, with certain exceptions. But it is clear that the exceptions are too broad, so we found all kinds of ways to get around that.

It seems to me that when we come up with the bill that we now have the question is, "Is it a reconciliation bill at all?" We might ask for a ruling on whether this is a reconciliation bill. It seems to me that there may be an opportunity here to set a precedent for fiscal sanity.

I know that there is concern about the capital gains reduction. If that prompted this, maybe it is worth it. If we start cleaning up our own act, perhaps we can deal, as the chairman of the Finance Committee indicated, with some of the other matters later on.

I think there may be other questions that arise, speaking from this side, and I certainly consider the offer to be in good faith and not a gimmick or whatever. We would want to know who determines what is extraneous. Is it going to be a joint decision? Are Republicans going to be invited to that meeting? I assume they will, based on the statements made by the majority leader and others.

Can we get a commitment from the House to follow suit? I know the majority leader has spoken to the Speaker. I know the Speaker feels as strongly about this as the majority leader does, and I think I can say that the minority leader, Congressman MICHEL, feels about the same even though the vote on the House side today was overwhelming.

But, if we strip ours and the House keeps theirs, then I am not certain what happens in conference, and I guess we would have to know what is the plan for all those items that are stricken out of reconciliation. Is there somebody who has already thought how we will put them all on a revenue bill and send them out next week or the following week? I do not oppose that necessarily. At least we would not be under time constraint or under some 20-hour rule. And when you combine all these measures that are kicked out and stripped out into one package, it will be a number of packages, and I would guess that would depend on whether or not the chairman of the Finance Committee has any revenue measures that he could make available for the IRA package or any other revenue packages.

But having said that, I can tell the majority leader and anyone else who may be interested that I want to put the record of the vote on the Byrd rule back in the RECORD because I think we did try to deal with it at that time thanks to the distinguished President pro tempore now because we knew it was getting out of hand, it was being abused by everyone on both sides. Everybody waited for reconciliation; we could not get it passed, stick it in reconciliation. What was surprising to me, you did not put minimum wage in reconciliation. That is about the only thing that has been overlooked. So it would seem to me that if, in fact, we can have some time to sit down with Senator DOMENICI meeting with Senator SASSER, and Senator PACKWOOD meeting with Senator BENTSEN and other appropriate committees, the two leaders, we might be able to put together a deal that would be good for the country for a change.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the vote to which I made reference.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VOTE No. 254

YEAS—96

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, first, I want to say that I join the distinguished Republican leader in saying that I believe this offer is made in good faith and obviously it is directed at solving a very, very thorny problem that is serious.

I would just like to make a couple of points to my good friend, the chairman of the Budget Committee. The target is continually moving, so I assume in the last few days he has found more potentially extraneous material than we did. We think there are at this point 300 known provisions on the Senate side that are probably extraneous, and you note, I say to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the Senator from New Mexico said "probably" because I submit that the Byrd rule on extraneousness and all the rules we adopted are pretty subjective. We could not draw them as objective as our precedents on germaneness, and the like. So right off I am delighted that the Senator is suggesting that this is not an easy task. Clearly, we have plenty to work on without any question.

Second, I do want to make a couple of points that the Republican leader made. Frankly, I think I would start working on this, if I am asked to, with the idea that we may not have a reconciliation bill at all. That is not terribly relevant if we make a deal, but I think it is important in terms of how we negotiate because this whole thing may not be a reconciliation bill. I am not sure how the Parliamentarian is going to rule when it is all packaged up, but I have looked at it, and I really have some serious doubts about the precedents of the Senate, the Byrd rule in its entirety.

I do not know that we have a reconciliation bill. I am concerned when I look at our reconciliation bill and it is vested with all of the negative aspects that Senators have all talked about, including our leader on this side. But I submit, if that is the case, the House bill is vested with perhaps three times as many and in some cases they are far more important issues from the partisan standpoint to maybe that side of the aisle or this side of the aisle.

I think it is important that we know whether we are working to fix something that needs fixing and then we are going to go to the House with a package that is absolutely enormous and try to negotiate what we would call a stripped-down bill. I think there is a lot of danger in that.

Just two more points: I am not at all sure that we do not already have a sequester.

So I say to my good friend, the chairman of the Budget Committee, as I read the law, we already have one. I am not so sure how we get out of it, but I would like to act in such a way that we really reduce the deficit. So I am interested in that as we talk about cleaning up this bill because there are so many ways to figure out that you cut the deficit when you have not, that the spirit and the words are genuine, that we are here because we have a deficit and we want to fix it. When we have finally agreed, if we do, I am kind of interested in whether we really have had a positive effect on the deficit or not.

Last, since it has not been said by either of the two Republicans, the Senator from New Mexico is not at all sure that unless we want to agree to this that capital gains of necessity by definition is subject to the Byrd rule and extraneous. We may end up agreeing we are not going to take up capital gains. But I just want to make the point that we do not know yet that a capital gains amendment cannot be crafted and drafted which is indeed not extraneous and not subject to the Byrd rule. That is entirely possible. That is an important issue on this side and important to the President of the United States.

So while I am saying we are taking a good step forward with the Senator's ideas to come back to our senses, I wish we would have had our senses as we produced the bills that are packaged up in that reconciliation bill, and I wish we would have had our senses about us in the last 3 or 4 weeks when we even produced some new ones. I am not speaking of Finance. We could not get finished. We even had committees report a second time within the last 2 or 3 weeks.

So I am willing to work on this under the direction of our leader, but, frankly, we have to make sure we know that we have a game plan. It could go on forever, and we could have all kinds of definitions. I do not want to be part of that. I do not want to be that referee, but I do not mind working, and I do not mind doing my share if I know what I am trying to do.

So I thank the majority, including the chairman of the Finance Committee and Budget Committee and the distinguished majority leader for the proposal here. I do not want the palaver here tonight exhilarated. We are a long way from solving the problem of avoiding a sequester, but what we do should at least reduce the deficit. I am sure we are not talking about other things that will reduce the deficit. I am not sure the reconciliation we are talking about and appropriations we are talking about and everything else that we all fund, that we would reduce the deficit. But I am sure the sequester will.

I am willing to do what the distinguished leader suggests and I thank him for the proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, I will yield in a moment.

I wish to respond to one question and one point that were raised.

The distinguished Republican leader asked who will make the decisions. Will they be joint? Will Republicans be invited?

Let me assure him that the only decision that was not joint, that was unilateral, was the decision to make this suggestion. I made that decision after consultation with the chairmen of the Budget Committee and the Finance Committee, and I emphasize that it could not conceivably succeed in any event if this be unilateral in any sense; it must be a joint effort.

I propose that the chairmen of the Budget and Finance Committees begin meeting with the ranking members of those committees promptly to address the admittedly difficult questions which the distinguished Senator from New Mexico has pointed out. No one disputes the difficulty of this course of action. On the other hand, no one can dispute the difficulty of the alternative. And that is proceeding down the road which this reconciliation process is now taking us.

We expend so much energy and effort here seeking to gain and retain tactical partisan advantage that it is often difficult to keep a focus on what our central objective is, and that is to deal with the very serious problem in a responsible way. That is all that motivates this.

I am heartened by the response, and I suggest that the four Members whom I have just indicated meet as promptly as possible to begin to address it to see if there is some way to work through these very difficult, admittedly very difficult, questions.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BRADLEY. Madam President, let me compliment the majority leader and the distinguished chairmen of the Finance Committee and the Budget Committee for making this offer to the Republican side. Let me also compliment the Republican leader for his willingness to entertain this. This is really an effort to let reconciliation be reconciliation.

In the Finance Committee, on the revenue side, that means raising $5.3 billion. That is clearly what is required for us to do. I hope that we would do that and little if anything else. I think then we could be fulfilling our responsibilities and reducing the deficit in the process.

I thank the majority leader for making this offer and I hope the Republican side will take it up seriously and use reconciliation to reduce the budget deficit.

Mr. PRYOR. Madam President, I am a member of the Senate Finance Committee. I, like my colleagues and the distinguished chairman, worked diligently with our colleagues on the Republican side until 3 a.m. the night before last.

Frankly, as I was walking back to get in my car, I heard many, many people in the respective offices kind of opening champagne bottles and celebrating individual victories that some of us had accomplished in getting our little deal in the tax bill, and winking at this person for slipping this in, and having someone else put this in for us.

Madam President, I must tell you—this is not an admission, this is a fact—I come to the floor tonight as one who ended up with a busload of extraneous matter.

It was nothing more or nothing less than a feeding frenzy. What started simply as a $5.3 billion reconciliation bill ended up, Madam President, to be a $37 billion bill.

As I was driving home, I did not feel very good about myself. I truly did not. I also felt, Madam President, that somehow or other that we did not act responsibly. I felt that after all this frenzy was over, had I gone back there to the lobby of the Dirksen Office Building outside the Finance Committee room, and looked down that long hall of lobbyists, I should say, well-meaning, good people, representing a lot of fine institutions and companies, whatever, I sometimes wondered during the course of that evening if I went out there and shouted down the hall, "Does anyone out here represent Maude Smith?" Somehow or other I felt like Maude might not have been represented that night.

I think what the proposal has been, and the advancement of this idea of stripping and of being responsible, would probably send a shock wave through this country that for once we have done something extremely responsible on the eve of a sequester, a tremendous national debt, uncertainties about the market. But more than anything else there is the fear that we do not have the discipline to do it.

Madam President, I hope we will have that discipline. I also hope we will have that joint leadership between both sides of the aisle in this good-faith effort. I hope that we will succeed. I am willing to be a part of attempting to make it succeed, even though I would like IRA's, I say to my distinguished chairman; even though I am one who would like to see at some time some form of capital gains. I think that there will be another day. But I think this day should be marked as one when we must be responsible.

The majority leader has proposed, I think, a responsible package. I appreciate very much the comments of the minority leader, Senator PACKWOOD and the distinguished chairman. I hope it will work. I yield the floor.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I am not going to prolong this because I think we heard some statements that I know are sincere on each side. But if I did not make it clear, there is one other person in this town who has an interest in what we do, and obviously many more than that, and that is the President of the United States. I have not discussed this with him. He will be visiting up here in the morning about 9:30. I know by then he will have heard about this. In fact, we have already had a call from somebody in the White House, some unidentified source. [Laughter.]

So I would be very happy to start the process, however the majority leader wishes to proceed. I know the ranking Republican on the Budget Committee is prepared to do that.

I indicated earlier I want to put the vote on the Byrd amendment in the RECORD. I was reminded by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia that it was fairly unanimous. It was. It was 96 to 0. There were four absentees.

So it indicated on that date we felt pretty much as we feel tonight. That was October 24, 1985. So perhaps there is still time to come to grips with this issue.

I wish to thank the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, because I thought he had done pretty well that night. [Laughter].

And he did. As we all did. The chairman was very generous. Those are difficult things to do in the Finance Committee.

I also noted that large group of public-spirited citizens, who were just there observing the process, out in the audience. Some were happy and some were a little sad after it was over.

Mr. DOMENICI. Did they know the Byrd rule, Mr. President? Were they aware of the Byrd rule?

Mr. DOLE. They were in flight, but I do not think so. They were not concerned about the Byrd rule.

In any event, I am prepared to do whatever the majority leader wishes to do. We could start meeting now on our side or we could start early in the morning. I do not know what the plan is for the rest of the evening.

Mr. MITCHELL. Under the circumstance, I do not think we have any alternative but to proceed this evening on the pending measure and hope to complete action on it as soon as possible. I implore all concerned to show restraint in the amendment that they offer.

We are going to return to the pending amendment, I believe, by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky. I hope there will be vote on that soon and then we will just proceed.

Mr. DOLE. I am advised that on the night we were marking up the bill in the Finance Committee there were 31 amendments agreed to on this bill. I do not have the foggiest notion what is in each of those amendments. But I understand there are some on each side who were a little displeased when they found many of the amendments had been accepted.

I now understand there are between 12 and 20 on this side and maybe a dozen that side. That means there are at least 20 or 30 on the drug bill. This amendment has taken a couple of hours. If that is the case, we will probably not be able to complete action this evening.

Mr. DOMENICI. If the distinguished majority leader will yield on this point, I do not know if the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR] was here when I spoke. But I was here at the end of his discussion. I want to just repeat again my observation.

It has been referred to as a package. I think we have a proposal to try to negotiate a bill that is something that we could all call a reconciliation bill. But the discussion now seems to be that we can take up capital gains at some later time. I am not so sure that you all suggested that capital gains is off the table. If that is the case, then I am not so sure we are ready to talk.

I thought we were supposed to talk about getting a reconciliation bill that we were absolutely certain met the Byrd test on extraneousness, but that we were not here negotiating what the tax package might look like that met the test of reconciliation or amendments that might meet the test of the Budget Act. So I hope nobody thinks that my agreement means that.

We can offer amendments, if you get 60 votes that pass here, that become a part of reconciliation whether they are extraneous or not. You can offer nonextraneous amendments. There is not much latitude, they are pretty limited, but you can. A package that is discussed that could be within the most narrow definition could be negotiated. Certainly the Senator from New Mexico is not saying capital gains is off the table here.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let me just say that no one is attempting to establish preconditions. But I say to the Senator, we understand the practical reality is that, if we are going to strip this down, it means effectively stripping those things that are involved with both sides. We are simply not going to have a bill that takes things out that one side is concerned about without an agreement on the other.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is not in any bill, is my point.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that. The IRA's are in. Of course my colleague's remark is there is no point debating it now, negotiating it now. The Senator said he may be able to come up with a capital gains amendment now that is germane. The IRAs do not need that. He is able to take the IRA's out even though they do not need to meet that test; and a great many other things that are of keen concern to Members on this side.

I think it is most useful not to attempt to reach a decision on negotiations now; that we will enter the negotiations without precondition. But as a practical matter that is going to be, obviously, a major part of the decision.

Mr. DOMENICI. I understand.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

IMPLEMENTING THE PRESIDENT'S 1989 NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, on the matter we are returning to, the so-called drug bill, I heard the distinguished Republican leader—I apologize, I was in the Cloakroom—indicate how many amendments there were.

I have been working with his staff—he has been extremely cooperative—and with some of my colleagues with whom I have been trying to be extremely persuasive. I do not know that I have been. But right now there are a total of 46 amendments.

It is the hope of the Senator from Delaware we could reduce that to less than 18 to 20 amendments, and that we would be able to voice vote them. My proposal, that the Senator's staff will soon make to him, is that we take all of the amendments we are ready to accept on both sides, put them in one package and tell every Senator if he wants to posture on his amendment, wait until we pass the bill, stay later tonight, have their statements printed in the RECORD, and then from 11 p.m. to 3 a.m. this morning come to the floor ans speak to those issues, depending on what time zone they find themselves in.

But I really mean this sincerely. I think we are able to package the amendments that can be agreed to and put them in one package. We would be able to do literally in 5 minutes what otherwise will take 3 hours, of what we are willing to accept.

The Senator from Delaware has about nine amendments. I will not propose those amendments. There are only three in one package that I am prepared to propose, and I think they will be accepted. I may be wrong. If there is one piece that is not, we can even negotiate that.

But I strongly urge my colleagues, if in fact they come to the floor and the managers of the bill are willing to accept their amendments, it will be only on the condition that they do not speak. I mean this sincerely.

If a Senator speaks, this manager will not accept the amendment and will fight the amendment. I mean if the Senator speaks at all. Come and send the amendment to the desk, put the statement in the RECORD and come later when we pass the bill and make the speech.

Most of the ones who want to speak the most on both sides are in different time zones anyway and they will be all right. But, please, please let us see if we can work this out. And I think we can.

Mr. DOLE. Will that take care of all the amendments?

Mr. BIDEN. That will take care of every amendment. In other words, we have a total of 46 amendments. I believe we can talk our colleagues out of 24 to 26 of them, and that will leave 18 to 20. Of those, somewhere between 10 and as many as 14 can be agreed to. And we really can get ourselves down to, hopefully, somewhere between four to eight that would be debatable.

I see my friend, the chairman of the Finance Committee who is used to having to deal with this a lot, looking at me like: Young man, it is nice for you to try. And, he is new to this business. And the Senator is right. I have only been here 17 years. I might not be able to do this. But I think everyone on the floor is probably drugged out.

Mr. LEAHY. So to speak.

Mr. BIDEN. So to speak.

I might say, by the way, staffs on boths sides of the aisle have been ready to admit to me when I have been sitting with the staff trying to negotiate this, that both sides are running out of things that they can think of to put on the bill.

Of those 46 amendments, at least 26 represent runout ideas. And so hopefully we can move. I really think with a little bit of effort in the next half hour we ought to be able to finish this whole matter this evening, by 10 p.m. If there is any good will.

If we cannot finish by 10 p.m. and there is not any good will here, then we are in for God knows how long.

Mr. DOLE. As I understand it there would only be about four that may require rollcalls? Is that what the Senator is saying?

Mr. BIDEN. My most optimistic projection would be four requiring rollcalls. My most pessimistic would be eight, if we can get any agreement. I do not think we have to get to eight. I think we can move to four.

I know the Senator from California has been on the floor and he is willing to give up some of his amendments. I am willing to give up some of my amendments. The Senator from Massachusetts has in the past given up some of his. And so on.

So I think the best thing for us to do is get moving, vote on the one before us without any further debate, let our staffs continue to work and try to package this thing.

Mr. DOLE. Anything we cannot take care of we will put in reconciliation.

Mr. BIDEN. Since I am the only one not in that conference, I think that is a good idea. Let us vote on that McConnell amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 956

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BREAUX). Is there further debate on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, Senator MCCONNELL? The yeas and nays have been ordered. Is there further debate?

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I move to table.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no further debate, the question is on the motion to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced, yeas 52, nays 48, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 230 Leg.]

So the motion to lay on the table the amendment (No. 956) was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion to table the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GLENN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 958

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] proposes an amendment numbered 958.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is a follows:

On line 3 of the bill, strike "Section" and all that follows through the period on line 4 and insert the following:

CHAPTER .—RURAL DRUG ENFORCEMENT ACT

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Rural Drug Enforcement Act."

SEC. 2. LEADERSHIP ON RURAL DRUG POLICY.

(a) DESIGNATION OF OFFICIAL.—The Director of National Drug Control Policy (hereafter in this chapter referred to as the "Director") shall designate an official in the Office of National Drug Control Policy to act as the Rural Drug Policy Coordinator.

(b) DUTIES OF OFFICIAL.—The Rural Drug Policy Coordinator shall—

(1) examine the special needs of rural areas in drug interdiction;

(2) recommend to the Director policy options for the enhancement of drug interdiction in rural areas;

(3) coordinate the drug interdiction efforts of Federal agencies (including the Drug Enforcement Administration, Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the National Forest Service) in rural areas; and

(4) make available to law enforcement agencies in rural areas materials pertinent to drug interdiction in rural areas.

SEC. 3. RURAL DRUG ENFORCEMENT ASSISTANCE.

(e) Part E of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 is amended by adding a new section 509 as follows:

"RURAL DRUG ENFORCEMENT ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 509. (a) There is authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992.

"(b) Of the total amount appropriated for this section in any fiscal year:

"(1) 50 per centum shall be allocated to and shared equally among rural States as described in subsection (c); and

"(2) 50 per centum shall be allocated to the remaining States for use in non-metropolitan areas within those States, as follows:

"(A) $100,000 to each non-rural State; and

"(B) of the total funds remaining after the allocation in clause (A), there shall be allocated to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of remaining funds described as the population of such State bears to the population of all States.

"(c) For the purpose of subsections (b) and (c), the term "rural State" means a State that has a population density of 52 or fewer persons per square mile or a State in which the largest county has fewer than 150,000 people.".

(b) Section 503(a) of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3753(a)) is amended by:

(1) at the end of paragraph (10) strike the "." and insert in lieu thereof "; and";

(2) inserting a new paragraph (11) as follows:

"(11) A separate and detailed request for a grant under section 509 of this subpart, including how the funds provided by a grant under section 506 shall be coordinated with the funds provided by a grant under section 509.".

SEC. 4. FEDERAL DRUG ENFORCEMENT ASSISTANCE.

(a) In order to provide adequate Federal drug enforcement assistance to each of the several States, and to encourage Federal, State and local drug enforcement cooperation, the Attorney General shall attempt to assign not less than 10 Drug Enforcement Administration special agents to each of the several States.

(b) In order to provide adequate Federal drug enforcement assistance to rural States for any rural State that is currently assigned less than 10 * * *; the Attorney General shall attempt to assign not less than 4 additional Drug Enforcement Administration special agents to each rural State as defined in section 3 of this Act.

SEC. 5. TRAINING FOR RURAL LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury, acting through the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, shall develop a drug training program for law enforcement officers in rural areas.

(b) TRAINING.—By no later than September 30, 1991, the Secretary of the Treasury shall double the number of law enforcement officers from rural jurisdictions in each of the several States that receive drug enforcement training.

(c) AUTHORIZATION—There is authorized to be appropriated $1,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992 to carry out the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 1002. BASE ALLOCATION FOR DRUG ENFORCEMENT GRANTS.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—Paragraph (5) of section 1001(a) of part J of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 is amended to read as follows:

"(5) There are authorized to be appropriated $600,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992 to carry out the programs under parts D and E of this title.".

(b) BASE ALLOCATION.—Section 506(a) of part D of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act (42 U.S.C. 3756(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Of the total amount appropriated for this part in any fiscal year, the amount remaining after setting aside the amount to be reserved to carry out section 511 of this title shall be set aside for section 502 and allocated to States as follows:

"(1) 0.40 percent shall be allocated to each of the participating States; and

"(2) of the total funds remaining after the allocation under paragraph (1), there shall be allocated to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of remaining funds described in this paragraph as the population of such State bears to the population of all the States.".

(c) MATCHING REQUIREMENTS.—Section 504 of part D of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3754(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) A grant made under this subpart may not be expended for more than 75 percent of the cost of identified uses for which such grant is received to carry out any purpose specified in section 502, except that in the case of funds distributed to an Indian tribe which performs law enforcement functions (as determined by the Secretary of the Interior) for any such program or project, the amount of such grant shall be equal to 100 percent of such cost. The non-Federal portion of the expenditures for such uses shall be paid in cash.".

SHORT TITLE

SEC. . (a) This section may be cited as the "Department of Justice Community Substance Abuse Prevention Act of 1989".

(b)(1) COMMUNITY PARTNERSHIPS.—Part E of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3711 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Subpart 4—Community Coalitions on Substance Abuse

"GRANTS TO COMBAT SUBSTANCE ABUSE

"SEC. 531. (a) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term 'eligible coalition' means an association, consisting of at least seven organizations, agencies, and individuals that are concerned about preventing substance abuse, that shall include—

"(1) public and private organizations and agencies that represent law enforcement, schools, health and social service agencies, and community-based organizations; and

"(2) representatives of 3 of the following groups: the clergy, academia, business, parents, youth, the media, civic and fraternal groups, or other nongovernmental interested parties.

"(b) GRANT PROGRAM.—The Attorney General, acting through the Director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance, shall make grants to eligible coalitions in order to—

"(1) plan and implement comprehensive long-term strategies for substance abuse prevention;

"(2) develop a detailed assessment of existing substance abuse prevention programs and activities to determine community resources and to identify major gaps and barriers in such programs and activities;

"(3) identify and solicit funding sources to enable such programs and activities to become self-sustaining;

"(4) develop a consensus regarding the priorities of a community concerning substance abuse;

"(5) develop a plan to implement such priorities; and

"(6) coordinate substance abuse services and activities, including prevention activities in the schools or communities and substance abuse treatment programs.

"(c) COMMUNITY PARTICIPATION.—In developing and implementing a substance abuse prevention program, a coalition receiving funds under subsection (b) shall—

"(1) emphasize and encourage substantial voluntary participation in the community, especially among individuals involved with youth such as teachers, coaches, parents, and clergy; and

"(2) emphasize and encourage the involvement of businesses, civic groups, and other community organizations and members.

"(d) APPLICATION.—An eligible coalition shall submit an application to the Attorney General in order to receive a grant under this section. Such application shall—

"(1) describe and, to the extent possible, document the nature and extent of the substance abuse problem, emphasizing who is at risk and specifying which groups of individuals should be targeted for prevention and intervention;

"(2) describe the activities needing financial assistance;

"(3) identify participating agencies, organizations, and individuals;

"(4) identify the agency, organization, or individual that has responsibility for leading the coalition, and provide assurances that such agency, organization or individual has previous substance abuse prevention experience;

"(5) describe a mechanism to evaluate the success of the coalition in developing and carrying out the substance abuse prevention plan referred to in subsection (b)(5) and to report on such plan to the Attorney General on an annual basis; and

"(e) PRIORITY.—In awarding grants under this section, the Attorney General shall give priority to a community that—

"(1) provides evidence of significant substance abuse;

"(2) proposes a comprehensive and multifaceted approach to eliminating substance abuse;

"(3) encourages the involvement of businesses and community leaders in substance abuse prevention activities;

"(4) demonstrates a commitment and a high priority for preventing substance abuse; and

"(5) demonstrates support from the community and State and local agencies for efforts to eliminate substance abuse.

"(f) REVIEW.—Each coalition receiving money pursuant to the provisions of this section shall submit an annual report to the Attorney General evaluating the effectiveness of the plan described in subsection (b)(5) and containing such additional information as the Attorney General may prescribe. The Attorney General, in conjunction with the Director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance, shall submit an annual review to the Committees on the Judiciary of the United States Senate and United States House of Representatives. Such review shall—

"(1) evaluate the grant program established in this section to determine its effectiveness;

"(2) implement necessary changes to the program that can be done by the Attorney General; and

"(3) recommend any statutory changes that are necessary.

"(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this section, $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $25,000,000 for fiscal year 1992.".

(2) The table of sections of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3711 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"SUBPART 4—COMMUNITY COALITION ON SUBSTANCE ABUSE

"Sec. 531. Grants to combat substance abuse.".

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

SEC. . ENHANCED STATE AND LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT PROGRAMS.

Section 503(a) of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3753(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(11) A certification that State and local law enforcement agencies, prosecuting attorneys, and courts have in place, or are committed to develop, arrangements, to the extent permitted by law, for—

"(A) the prosecution and sentencing of drug offenders within 100 days after arraignment;

"(B) the use of civil injunctive and other remedies to limit illegal activities; and

"(C) the use of civil and criminal forfeiture proceedings, including—

"(i) authority to seize real property, cash proceeds, cash found in proximity to a criminal enterprise or activity, and substitute assets;

"(ii) civil remission or mitigation and innocent owner protections; and

"(iii) distribution of forfeited proceeds from illegal drug activity evenly between State supply and demand reduction programs (after reimbursement of agencies of the cost of conducting forfeiture proceedings).

"(12) An agreement to report to the Bureau concerning—

"(A) the results) of the programs described in paragraph (11); and

"(B) the need for changes in State laws to allow more effective use of the programs described in paragraph (11).".

Subtitle C—Juvenile Justice Anti-Drug Grant Program

SEC. 21. GRANT PROGRAM.

The Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 is amended in part * * * by—

(1) inserting after the heading for such part the following:

"Subpart I—General Grant Programs"

; and

(2) adding at the end thereof a new subpart III, as follows:

"Subpart III—Juvenile Drug Trafficking and Prevention Grants

"FORMULA GRANTS

"SEC. 231. (a) The Administrator is authorized to make grants to States and units of general local government or combinations thereof to assist them in planning, establishing, operating, coordinating, and evaluating projects directly or through grants and contracts with public and private agencies for the development of more effective programs to reduce the use and sale of illegal drugs by juveniles, including education, prevention, treatment and enforcement programs.

"(b) The grants made under this section can be used for any of the following specific purposes:

"(1) To reduce the participation of juveniles in drug related crimes (including drug trafficking and drug use), particularly in and around elementary and secondary schools;

"(2) To develop within the juvenile justice system, including the juvenile correction system, new and innovative means to address the problems of juveniles convicted of serious criminal, drug-related and gang-related offenses;

"(3) To reduce juvenile involvement in organized crime drug and gang-related activity, particularly activities that involve the distribution of drugs by or to juveniles;

"(4) To reduce juvenile drug and gang-related activity in public housing projects;

"(5) To provide technical assistance and training to personnel and agencies responsible for the adjudicatory and corrections components of the juvenile justice system to identify drug-dependent juvenile offenders and to provide appropriate counseling and treatment to such offenders;

"(6) To promote the involvement of juveniles in lawful activities, including in-school education and prevention programs and after-school programs;

"(7) To facilitate Federal and State cooperation with local school officials to develop education, prevention and treatment programs for juveniles who are likely to participate in the drug trafficking, drug use of gang-related activities;

"(8) To prevent juvenile drug and gang involvement in public housing projects through programs establishing youth sports and other activities, including girls club, boys club, scout troups and little league.

"(9) To provide pre- and post-trial drug abuse treatment to juveniles in the juvenile justice system; with the highest possible priority to providing drug abuse treatment to drug-dependent pregnant juveniles and drug-dependent juvenile mothers; and

"(10) To provide drug abuse education and prevention involving police and juvenile justice personnel in demand reduction programs.".

"(c) Of the funds made available to each State under this section (Formula Grants) 50 percent of the funds made available to each State in any fiscal year shall be used for juvenile drug supply reduction programs and 50 percent shall be used for juvenile drug demand reduction programs.

"SPECIAL EMPHASIS DRUG DEMAND REDUCTION AND ENFORCEMENT GRANTS

"SEC. 232. (a) The purpose of this section is to provide additional Federal assistance and support to identify promising new juvenile drug demand reduction and enforcement programs, to replicate and demonstrate these programs to serve as national, regional or local models that could reused, in whole or in part, by other public and private juvenile justice programs, and to provide technical assistance and training to public or private organizations to implement similar programs. In making grants under this section, the Administrator shall give priority to programs aimed at juvenile involvement in organized gang- and drug-related activities, including supply and demand reduction programs.

"(b) The Administrator is authorized to make grants to, or enter into contracts with, public or private agencies, institutions, or organizations or individuals to carry out any purpose authorized in section 231. The Administrator shall have final authority over all funds awarded under this subchapter.

"(c) Of the total amount appropriated for this subchapter, 20 per centum shall be reserved and set aside for this section in a special discretionary funds for use by the Administrator to carry out the purposes specified in section 231. Grants made under this section may be made for amounts up to 100 percent of the costs of the programs or projects.

"AUTHORIZATION

"SEC. 233. There is authorized to be appropriated $100,200,000 in fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary in each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992 to carry out the purposes of this subpart.

"ALLOCATION OF FUND

"SEC. 234. Of the total amounts appropriated under this subpart in any fiscal year to carry out the purposes of section 231 (formula grants) the amount remaining after setting aside the amounts required to be reserved to carry out section 232 (discretionary grants) shall be allocated as follows:

"(1) $400,000 shall be allocated to each of the participating States;

"(2) Of the total funds remaining after the allocation under paragraph (a), there shall be allocated to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of remaining funds described in this paragraph as the population of such State bears to the population of all the States.

"APPLICATION

"SEC. 235. (a) Each State applying for grants under section 231 (Formula Grants) and each public or private entity applying for grants under section 2322 (Discretionary Grants) shall submit an application to the Administrator in such form and containing such information as the Administrator shall prescribe.

"(b) To the extent practical, the Administrator shall prescribe regulations governing applications for this subpart that are substantially similar to the applications required under part I (general juvenile justice formula grant) and part C (special emphasis prevention and treatment grants), including the procedures relating to competition.

"(c) In addition to the requirements prescribed in subsection (b), each State application submitted under section 231 shall include a detailed description of how the funds made available shall be coordinated with Federal assistance provided in parts B and C of title II of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 and by the Bureau of Justice Assistance under the Drug Control and System Improvement Grant program.

"REVIEW AND APPROVAL OF APPLICATIONS

"SEC. 236. The procedures and time limits imposed on the Federal and State governments under sections 505 and 508 respectively, of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 relating to the review of applications and distribution of Federal funds shall apply to the review of applications and distribution of funds under this subpart.".

SEC. 22. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) Section 291 of title II of the Juvenile Justice Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5671) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) in paragraph (1) by striking "(other than part D)";

(B) and by striking paragraph (2) in its entirety; and

(2) in subsection (b) by striking "(other than part D)".

(b) Part D of title II of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 is hereby repealed.

(c) Part E of title II of such Act is redesignated as part D.

SEC. 2. AMENDMENT RELATING TO JUSTICE ASSISTANCE AND DRUG TESTING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3711 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end of part E (42 U.S.C. 3750-3766b) the following:

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I am sure all my colleagues are working hard, and the reason they are talking on the floor is to eliminate the number of amendments that are on this bill, but I would suggest the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is correct. The Senate is not in order.

Mr. BIDEN Mr. President, this amendment is in three parts. The first part adds $150 million to State and local drug block grants above the level provided in last week's drug bill. And I might note that it also adds $15 million for citizen action groups to fight drug-plagued neighborhoods.

Many organizations have joined with police departments and formed citizens coalitions to take back their neighborhoods. This is an idea that has been put forward by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL]. It is of significant merit in my opinion.

The second part of this amendment is for rural drug initiative. I think most of my colleagues, whether they are from an urban or rural State, understand that in the rural parts of their States there is significant trouble and there is a need for help.

This week the DEA chief, John Lawn, told me that DEA simply does not have the resources to pursue major drug cases in rural areas. I might add, to make it clear to my friends on the minority side who were concerned about this amendment, I originally wrote this law so that it would require the DEA to have at least 10 DEA agents in every State. Keep in mind now, just the other day you voted for a Biden amendment that added 300 DEA agents. DEA is in desperate need of more agents. The rural communities are in desperate need. I gave as one example, so I will not be too parochial, the State of Montana. The State of Montana, a vast State, is becoming the home of the synthetically produced methamphetamine that is being distributed throughout the country.

I see my friend from South Dakota [Mr. PRESSLER] on the floor. His State as well is becoming a place in which methamphetamine is being distributed. Methamphetamine is equally as addictive as crack. It has similar properties. It is called the poor man's crack. It is becoming a major epidemic in this country. In the State of Montana, I believe, there are only three agents and only two in South Dakota. This is a place where there is a major need in such a vast territory.

So I insisted at first there be a requirement that in every State there be at least 10 DEA agents. I have withdrawn that. I have amended the amendment to say that we recommend that the DEA place no fewer than 10 agents in every State. It would add 14 States, I might point out, which do not fall within this category.

Also, this provides a $20 million grant for rural drug agencies at the State and local level. They could establish rural drug-enforcement task forces in over 200 rural counties. There are certain counties in the country, we know, where there are particular problems. Again, I will not take the Senate's time.

Anyone who has followed this area—I know all my colleagues on the floor have been deeply involved in this drug issue—all of them will tell you, I suspect, the degree to which the law enforcement agencies in this country need help in rural States. It is a problem, and a big problem.

Third, this would require Federal law enforcement training, the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center at Glynco, GA, to develop a specialized training course for rural drug enforcement and provide the money to train an additional 700 police officers for those rural agencies. That totals $1 million.

We are not talking about breaking the bank. But the idea here is to require us to put more focus on the problems in—I see my friend from Wyoming is here—Wyoming and southern Delaware.

There is no city in my State with more than 85,000 people. It is a rural State; the same with a number of people on the floor. Essentially, the DEA and the trained police agencies have had to ignore these areas. I am suggesting that there be training money here.

There is slightly more in there. I will not take the time to go into it.

The third part of this amendment is the portion that my friends on the other side may have trouble with, and that is it establishes a juvenile justice antidrug and antigang initiative in the Department of Justice. We all know the extent to which gangs are not only a menace in our communities, but they have become the vehicle by which the dissemination of some of the most dangerous drugs in America takes place.

This is a means, an attempt to deal, through the Justice Department, with setting up juvenile antidrug and antigang initiatives. It would allow us to do so in over 250 cities, and this amendment would fund 1,000 drug prevention projects, including youth sports programs, projects in public housing, and boys and girls clubs.

So, Mr. President, I obviously could and I and I obviously will not go on in greater detail. But these proposals here are designed in summary to basically do three things: One, to help train and help provide the expertise for the drug war in rural America; two, in the urban areas to provide for antigang and juvenile progams that provide for outlets not only for those gangs and those gang members, but within the housing projects within those communities; and, third, it provides for block grant money that is distributed not based on any formula other than the one that exists now in the law to provide help for State and local law enforcement agencies which would include the suburban areas, as well as what we particularly focus on with regard to rural America.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KOHL addresssed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, Senator BIDEN's package of amendments contains many thoughtful proposals, and I am pleased that he continues to be a leader on this important issue. I want to spend a few moments addressing one particularly exciting provision. It was inspired by Senator CRANSTON, and it is something that he and I have worked hard to promote. And it is finally coming to fruition. In fact, later today I will be joining the senior Senator from California when he offers the amendment to establish a related program in HHS.

The idea is community-based action against drugs. As I discussed this morning, grassroots activity produces creative and lasting solutions. Local communities know what they need; how to achieve it; and whether it works. The best thing Washington can do is spur coalitions in each city among business leaders, neighborhood activists, municipal officials, teachers, parents, labor unions, police organizations, religious groups, and others. We're talking about community self-help, community self-reliance, and community repair.

This amendment will spark such action. It would authorize the Attorney General to assist communities in planning and implementing comprehensive drug abuse programs. A community that organizes a representative coalition may receive a grant through the Bureau of Justice Assistance. That money would be used to plan strategies and coordinate prevention activities. But the coalition would also be required to identify and solicit funding source to make its activities self-sufficent. In other words, we're talking about seed money only. We're providing seeds for trees planted and nurtured by the neighbors—not by Federal agencies.

I think all of us could agree that we need to concentrate on the next generation. Accordingly, receipient coalitions must involve those who work with children, such as teachers and coaches. Also, coalitions must include police and social service agencies.

Mr. President, I am actuely aware of the need to assess our antidrug efforts as we go along. We simply cannot afford to throw money at problems. We have to make sure each program is getting results, and in a cost-efficient way. That's why this amendment requires every coalition to provide an annual report to the Attorney General. In turn, the Attorney General must evaluate the effectiveness of the grant program in an annual report to the House and Senate Judiciary Committees. In this way, Congress will maintain oversight of the entire program and can make any necessary modifications.

I want to close by emphasizing the promise of community-based activity. Take the case of Kansas City. Leaders there organized a comprehensive community program involving parents, local groups, the media, and the schools. They targeted teens with an antidrug message—and it worked. Adolescents who participated in the program were less likely than their peers to use cigarettes, alcohol, or marijuana, which are the gateways to harder drugs. The authors of the study said it was because of "multiple environmental influences"—a fancy way of saying that they got the whole community involved.

Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will support this important proposal. Community self-help is not a partisan issue. It's a matter of letting the people who experience a problem devise methods for fixing it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment (No. 958) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

Do we need to ask unanimous consent to set anything aside?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open for amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 959

(Purpose: To authorize additional judicial positions for the Courts of Appeals and District Courts of the United States)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] proposes an amendment numbered 959.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following new section:

SEC. .—AUTHORIZING ADDITIONAL JUDICIAL POSITIONS.

(a)(1) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional circuit judges for the third circuit court of appeals, four additional circuit judges for the fourth circuit court of appeals, one additional circuit judge for the fifth circuit court of appeals, two additional circuit judges for the eighth circuit court of appeals, and two additional circuit judges for the tenth circuit court of appeals.

(2) In order that the table contained in section 44(a) of title 28, United States Code, will, with respect to each judicial circuit, reflect the changes in the total number of permanent circuit judgeships authorized as a result of subsection (a)(1) of this section, such table is amended to read as follows:

"Circuits:	Number of judges
District of Columbia	12
First	6
Second	13

Tenth	12
Eleventh	12
Federal	12".

(b)(1) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional district judge for the western district of Arkansas, two additional district judges for the northern district of California, six additional district judges for the central district of California, two additional district judges for the district of Connecticut, two additional district judges for the middle district of Florida, one additional district judge for the northern district of Illinois, one additional district judge for the southern district of Iowa, one additional district judge for the western district of Louisiana, one additional district judge for the southern district of Mississippi, one additional district judge for the eastern district of Missouri, three additional district judges for the district of New Jersey, one additional district judge for the district of New Mexico, one additional district judge for the southern district of New York, one additional district judge for the eastern district of New York, one additional district judge for the southern district of Ohio, one additional district judge for the northern district of Oklahoma, two additional district judges for the western district of Oklahoma, one additional district judge for the district of Oregon, three additional district judges for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, one additional district judge for the eastern district of Tennessee, three additional district judges for the southern district of Texas, one additional district judge for the western district of Texas, and one additional district judge for the district of Utah.

(2) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional district judge for the northern district of Alabama, one additional district judge for the eastern district of California, one additional district judge for the district of Hawaii, one additional district judge for the central district of Illinois, one additional district judge for the southern district of Illinois, one additional district judge for the district of Kansas, one additional district judge for the middle district of Louisiana, one additional district judge for the district of Maryland, one additional district judge for the district of Massachusetts, one additional district judge for the western district of Michigan, one additional district judge for the eastern district of Missouri, one additional district judge for the district of Nebraska, one additional district judge for the district of Nevada, one additional district judge for the northern district of New York, one additional district judge for the northern district of Ohio, one additional district judge for the southern district of Ohio, one additional district judge for the western district of Oklahoma, one additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, one additional district judge for the middle district of Tennessee, one additional district judge for the eastern district of Texas, and one additional district judge for the eastern district of Virginia. The first vacancy in the office of district judge in each of the judicial districts named in this subsection, occurring five years or more after the position for that district authorized by this subsection is first filled, shall not be filled.

(3) The existing district judgeships for the northern district of Illinois, the northern district of Indiana, the district of Massachusetts, the western district of New York, the northern district of Ohio, and the western district of Washington heretofore authorized by section 202(b) of the Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-353, 98 Stat. 347-348) shall, as of the effective date of this Act, be authorized under section 133 of title 28 of the United States Code, and the incumbents in those offices shall henceforth hold the office under section 133, as amended by this Act.

(4) The existing two district judgeships for the eastern and western districts of Arkansas, heretofore provided by section 133 of title 28 of the United States Code, shall hereafter be district judgeships for the eastern district of Arkansas only, and the incumbents of such judgeships shall henceforth hold the offices under section 133, as amended by this Act. The existing district judgeship for the northern and southern districts of Iowa, heretofore provided by section 133 of title 28, shall hereafter be a district judgeship for the northern district of Iowa only, and the incumbent of such judgeship shall henceforth hold the office under section 133, as amended by this Act. The existing district judgeship for the northern, eastern, and western districts of Oklahoma, heretofore provided by section 133 of title 28 and the occupant of which has his official duty station at Oklahoma City on the date of enactment of this Act, shall hereafter be a district judgeship for the western district of Oklahoma only, and the incumbent of such judgeship shall hereafter hold the office under section 133, as amended by this Act.

(5) In order that the table contained in section 133 of title 28, United States Code, will, with respect to each judicial district, reflect the changes in the total number of permanent district judgeships authorized as a result of subsections (b)(1), (b)(3), and (b)(4) of this section, such table is amended to read as follows:

(c)(1) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional judge for the District Court of the Virgin Islands, who shall hold office for a term of 10 years and until a successor is chosen and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President for cause.

(2) In order to reflect the change in the total number of permanent judgeships authorized as a result of subsection (c)(1) of this section, section 24(a) of the Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands, Chapter 558, 68 Stat. 506, as amended (48 U.S.C. § 1614(a)), is further amended by striking out "two" and inserting in lieu thereof "three".

(d) This Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(e) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

Mr. HATCH. I do not expect to take very long.

This is a very serious and significant amendment. This particular amendment I am offering of the drug bill is the Federal Judgeship Act of 1989. This is as proposed by the Judicial Conference. This amendment would authorize 11 new Federal Appeals Court Judges and 60 new Federal District Court Judges.

These numbers reflect the Conference's recommendations as of the end of 1987, and if anything, the situation is much worse. These are new positions that the Conference recommended even before the enactment of the 1988 omnibus drug bill and the changes in the drug laws that we have voted upon in the last couple of weeks.

So these are very, very needed judges. If we need 1,000 FBI agents, 350 DEA agents, new U.S. marshals and others, you can imagine the need we must have for Federal judges in both the district and circuit courts.

Mr. President, these additional judges are clearly needed even without the new drug legislation. In other words, they were recommended before the legislation. You can imagine the pressure this legislation is going to bring.

Criminal caseloads particularly on drug issues are increasing dramatically. One of the concerns expressed by many court commentators has been the burden of these caseloads on the Federal judges. Given the provisions of the 1988 drug bill and the measures that we have included in this and the appropriations bills, it is reasonable to expect that these caseloads will increase.

Just last night, as well as in the appropriations bills, we voted to increase by several hundred the number of Federal agents and Federal prosecutors. If they do the job that we expect them to do, we will shortly be confronted with a severe bottleneck in the criminal justice system of our Federal courts. And it will occur in the courts.

Federal speedy trial rights will require that these cases be disposed of in an expeditious fashion or be dismissed. We must not let the fine work of these agents and prosecutors be wasted due to the lack of judges to hear these cases.

The following jurisdictions will benefit under this bill with the addition of new district court judges: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Florida, Hawaii, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, and the Virgin Islands.

Mr. President, it is my fear that we are overburdening our Federal courts. It is stated in the judiciary speech that the Chief Justice indicated we need additional judges. And with the changes we are making in the laws today, and with the bill we passed last week, we are increasing that need dramatically. Without more judges to handle the increased case load, I am afraid that the results of all of our efforts of the last couple of weeks will be greatly reduced.

So I urge my colleagues to support this amendment so that the war on drugs can be fought and won. I hope nobody is going to raise the issue that this is just a Judicial Conference recommendation. We have always followed those recommendations.

As a matter of fact, they have been conservative, if anything. I think we just simply have to get serious about what we are doing in this country, and if we are going to need all these other officers which the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee called for yesterday, and which we passed, then we certainly are gong to need the judges.

Even if we did not have the additional FBI agents, the additional DEA agents, additional marshals, and other courtroom officials, we would still need these judges, because the judicial conference recommended this in 1987, which is 2 years before today, and they were necessary then, and you can imagine the increased need today.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I just want to endorse this amendment. The judicial conference had already recommended these people before this vital drug question came up. We have to have these judges sometime, and there is no use delaying it. I think now is a good time to get these judges so they can be installed into office and go to work, because we need them very badly. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

AMENDMENT NO. 960 TO AMENDMENT 959

(Purpose: To authorize the appointment of 20 additional district court judges in districts with heavy caseloads of drug-related prosecutions)

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I send an amendment in the second degree to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] proposes an amendment numbered 960 to amendment No. 959.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

(a) UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT JUDGES.—(1) In accordance with the provisions of paragraph (2), the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, 20 district judges in addition to those appointed pursuant to section 133 of title 28, United States Code.

(2) Prior to the appointment of any judge pursuant to paragraph (1), the number and locations of such judges among the several judicial districts shall be established by law after consideration, by the Congress, of the recommendations of the Judicial Conference of the United States submitted pursuant to subsection (b).

(b) JUDICIAL CONFERENCE.—The Judicial Conference of the United States shall prepare a report evaluating the impact of drug-related criminal activity on the Federal district courts. Such report shall contain recommendations as to how the additional United States District Court judges should be allocated based on criminal drug-related felony filings per judgeship in each district. The report shall be transferred to the Committees on the Judiciary of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this section.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I cannot argue with the Senator from Utah. I do not like to do that anyway. I cannot argue with him on the basic premise that he has put forward, that we need more judges, because there is no question about that.

The problem that the Senator from Delaware has is that notwithstanding the fact that the judicial conference recommended these 80 judges, it is not clear that the assignment program—and let me ask this as a question, actually. Are we agreeing, I ask the Senator from Utah, if we were to accept his amendment, to the assignment as proposed by the Judicial Conference?

Mr. HATCH. We are, and my amendment, as proposed by the Judicial Conference—because we have always abided, as far as I recall, by their recommendations with regard to assignments. That does not mean that we cannot change that.

Mr. BIDEN. I thank the Senator for his answer. I want to discuss briefly what my perfecting amendment does. My perfecting amendment says that we will now authorize 20 judges tonight and 80 judges, and those 20 judges must be distributed around the country by the Judicial Conference, based upon high intensity drug areas.

For example, that will mean that, if the amendment of the Senator from Delaware were to be adopted, we would have the Judicial Conference probably sending additional judges to Miami and Houston and Los Angeles and the southern district of New York and so on, where there is phenomenal overload. That is No. 1.

No. 2, the remaining 47 judgeships which are vacant and for which we have no nominees, and 56 vacancies total that we have sitting out there, would mean that in the very near term, we would be able to put—if the administration would move and nominate people—on the bench, roughly, 80 judges. And I will commit, as I have, and no one ever suggested I would not, to take up the judgeship bill now in committee, as we had planned to do anyway, and ask the Judicial Conference to update their recommendations.

For example, I see the Senator from California here. He badly needs additional judges in California, particularly in the Los Angeles and San Diego area. He needs it throughout the State, but particularly there. I made a commitment to the former Republican Senator from Florida, Senator Paula Hawkins, when she was here, that I would try to get more judges for south Florida, which are badly needed because of the drug problem.

I am recommending the following: That the combination of adding the 20 new judges, requiring them to place those judges in high intensity areas, and couple that with the 57 vacancies that now exist, 47 or thereabouts for which we have no nominees. This is not January or the day before. This is 8 months ago that these vacancies have existed. We will end up with roughly 77 judges instead of 80, and it will give us the chance to do what we should be doing, intelligently studying this proposal by the judicial conference.

Mr. President, I hope that the purpose of the Senator from Utah will be fulfilled. Let me set one thing aside, by the way. I am sure that there are some on the floor on both sides who know that over the past 20 years, depending on who is President, the other team that may be in power will say, hey, wait a minute, we do not want to let this President appoint x number of new judges.

Well, the record of the Senator from Delaware shows that has not been his position. I think we badly need additional judges, and whether it is a Republican President and a Republican Congress or a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress, it does not matter. I come in here on the floor tonight as chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I will move rapidly to expand the number of judges, but make a sound recommendation that after everything, the Judicial Conference will come in and make their recommendation and update it for us this year.

So, Mr. President, I again suggest that adding 20 judges immediately to drug-impacted areas, plus the 57 vacancies or 54 vacancies that now exist—do not hold me to the precise number—over 50 vacancies now that are not filled, we will be able to meet the needs the Senator talks about and also do what we normally do. We do not just come to the floor and one night add 80 judges, bingo.

That has not been the practice. I do not think we should start it now, and I hope that my colleague will consider accepting my modification on the absolute commitment to him that it will come out of the Judiciary Committee; if not, I will come with him to the floor, before this Congress is over, to add additional judges to the district courts. I make that commitment to him now that, even if the Senator and I cannot get it passed out of the committee—and I believe we can—I promise the Senator I will come to the floor and introduce legislation moving on additional judgeships beyond the 20 that I am offering tonight.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Let me ask my distinguished colleague from Delaware a question. As I understand what my friend is saying, he is not ignoring the fact that the Judicial Conference has called for these additional judges?

Mr. BIDEN. I am not ignoring that fact.

Mr. HATCH. And he is saying what was true in 1987 is probably true today?

Mr. BIDEN. Probably more, quite frankly.

Mr. HATCH. We listed these States that need these judges, and that is probably true?

Mr. BIDEN. Probably true.

Mr. HATCH. The distinguished Senator wants to discuss this further with members of the Judiciary Committee and, of course, his friend from Utah. The Senator would like to approve 20 judges tonight?

Mr. BIDEN. Correct.

Mr. HATCH. Then that is, before the end of this Congress and in time to get it through both Houses?

Mr. BIDEN. Correct.

Mr. HATCH. We should bring up additional judges?

Mr. BIDEN. Maybe even more, I say to my friend.

Mr. HATCH. Maybe more.

Mr. BIDEN. That is more than have been put forward here tonight. There is no question additional judges are needed. My friend from Utah knows full well I am not one who ever subscribed to the school of thought I will not vote for more judges because a Republican President is going to appoint them. If I subscribed to that theory when I came to the Senate we would never have any additional judges.

Mr. HATCH. I would also like to ask my friend: The Judicial Conference recommendation embodied in my amendment does indicate we need 60 district judges and 11 appellate court judges?

Mr. BIDEN. Correct.

Mr. HATCH. Does my friend from Delaware have any appellate court judges in his?

Mr. BIDEN. No, the Senator's friend from Delaware does not. Only trial court judges, 20 of them.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to have a chance to talk to my friend about having 11 appellate court judges, so we get those done. I suspect that is where we are going to have a major logjam in this country.

Mr. BIDEN. I would respectfully decline because as we both know the appellate court is where there is the most controversy as to what the workload is. There is no controversy relating to the trial court. Everyone knows the trial courts are up to their ears in cases.

Let me say further to my friend from Utah—and I just note this and I think my friend from Utah supported me in this this time last year when we had the drug bill up—last year he will recall we wanted to add 20 judges in drug-impacted areas. The administration, as well as my colleagues on the Republican side, opposed that at that time. So what I am coming back to here now is referencing that original request of 20 for drug-impacted areas and let the Judicial Conference make the recommendations where they should go.

As we all know, and I say to my friend from South Carolina who has forgotten more about appointing judges than this Senator is going to know, we will and should continue to make our views known to the Judicial Conference as to where we think those judges should go. We have never been reluctant to do that in the past and I am not inclined to reluctance to do that now.

Although I greatly respect the Judicial Conference, the Judicial Conference consists of what we might call a lot of home boys; they are all getting together, they know what they want, where they want it; they make their deals, not deals in a bad way, in a nefarious way, but they make their own arrangements and allegedly based on statistical need. The fact of the matter is we have not hesitated to intervene.

My view is we would be much wiser to let the committee work its progress. I commit, and I have no doubt the ranking member will commit, we will move on the judgeship bill quickly and like we have in the past with genuine hearings, bringing people before us, bringing the Judicial Conference up. And if I remember correctly the last time we did this the ranking member, the Senator from South Carolina, was the chairman, and at that time as he will recall I remember making an argument to him that the third circuit needed an additional judge and the Judicial Conference resisted. But we ended up putting an additional judge on the third circuit. That is in the normal process the way it works.

I would commit to continue that because I believe there is no question the Senator from Utah is right. As we add additional prosecutors, additional prison space, and additional agents, we are adding additional workload on the court.

Mr. HATCH. If I could make a comment, I can appreciate what the distinguished Senator from Delaware is saying. As a matter of fact, I take his word, because I know it is good, that he will proceed in an expeditious fashion to come up with Judicial Conference recommendations, move to the Judiciary Committee, and move through the Judiciary Committee these judges.

But there is one thing I need to point out. The distinguished Senator from Delaware knows as well as I that it will take time to get a bill through the committee and right now we have a stack of bills that literally makes it impossible to get it out before the end of the year.

Mr. BIDEN. I go on to suggest that if we cannot get it out of committee in time to be deliberated by the total body, the House and the Senate, then what I will do is, I will come to the floor and attach a judgeship bill based on our hearings without having had it reported out of committee, because we need additional judges. I might add some of my Democratic friends are not really crazy about the commitment I am making, I am sure.

Mr. HATCH. I understand.

Mr. BIDEN. But I believe they are needed. I do not want to do it without having hearings on the conference recommendations.

Mr. HATCH. I would do the same thing if I were in the distinguished Senator's position, if there were a Democratic President, because I think we need these judges. I have confidence that George Bush will appoint decent strong judges.

Let me just make one other request of my dear friend. I appreciated his comments, and I do appreciate his commitments here on the floor. I know he will live up to those and I have not the slightest doubt about that. I am grateful to him. If we needed 60 additional district court judges and 11 appellate court judges in 1987, 2 years ago before the legislation and this pressure came to bear, we need them more today.

I, myself, agree with the Senator that this administration has to get more serious about getting these judgeships up here because we do have some vacancies that are putting even additional pressures on our current judges. I will do everything in my power to encourage and help the administration to do that. The process is a very slow process, as I see it, but perhaps a necessary one. But is it possible that the distinguished Senator knowing that they recommended 60 district court judges and 11 appellate court judges would go with a higher number than 20 here tonight, maybe 30.

Mr. BIDEN. The answer is no, Mr. President, and the reason for that is that is as far as I can get consent for us to move tonight.

Mr. HATCH. On the Senate's side. I think I can get 100 percent on our side who would support the 71 judges, but I know I could get them to support 10 judges. I cannot see why the Senator's side would not do the same since we need them.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, we beg the question a bit. The Senator from Utah is assuming that the Judicial Conference recommendation is legitimate, that is the one that is needed and the numbers are correct. That is the reason I want to hold the hearings, No. 1, and No. 2, I have always had the unfortunate habit of being frank. It is clear that the Senator's side opposed 20 judges last October or September.

Mr. HATCH. No; it was a bipartisan position. There were some on the Democratic side.

Mr. BIDEN. It was not bipartisan. The GOP flat out opposed it. It was simple. They looked at the polling data and then the Governor of Massachusetts was wining in the polls and they said "no."

I, unlike my colleagues tonight, am saying we have a Republican President; no wonder, of course, the Senator's side would get 100 percent of the vote tonight. They would not take 20 before the election because they wanted to know what the outcome would be. That is not the Senator from Utah, in particular.

Mr. HATCH. I was for it.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator did not want to take 20 before he knew the outcome of the election. I was for 20 before, I am for 20 now. I was for more judges before and for more judges now.

The issue is how many the Judicial Conference recommends, and how many we think they recommend are, in fact, needed. We have historically cut back on their recommendations and sometimes added to their recommendations.

So, I really think in the interest of time we should end the discussion. I hope my friend will take the 20 judges with the modification that was sent to the desk and drop his insistence on the remainder of the judges for this evening.

Mr. HATCH. Let me just say this one final sentence. I appropriate the commitments of the distinguished Senator from Delaware here this evening. I think even 20 is a move in the right direction, and certainly he is committed to do much better than that within a short period of time. I have no qualms or difficulties about hearings.

I do want to make it clear though that I certainly was for 20 judges back then and a lot more than that, regardless of who was going to be elected President. I have always taken that position. I am for the 71 judges today and, frankly, I think the Judicial Conference will come up with more judges as they look at the burdens that have been placed upon the court by the legislation that we passed just the last couple of weeks, not considering other legislation that we passed over the last couple of years, the intervening years since the 1987 recommendation.

So with the recommendation of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee and his good commitments here this evening, I would agree to his amendment that modifies or that is amended to my amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I would like the RECORD to show, so later it is not assumed that the Senator from Delaware did not know, I am aware of the modification, I accept the modification to my amendment, and I yield back my time.

Mr. HATCH. I urge the amendment of the distinguished Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will note for the record that the modification was to the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I think what we are trying to get at here is I am prepared to go with 20 judges with the Judicial Conference dispensing them as modified by the request of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following new section:

SEC. . AUTHORIZING ADDITIONAL JUDICIAL POSITIONS.

(a)(1) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional circuit judges for the third circuit court of appeals, four additional circuit judges for the fourth circuit court of appeals, one additional circuit judge for the fifth circuit court of appeals, two additional circuit judges for the eighth circuit court of appeals, and two additional circuit judges for the tenth circuit court of appeals.

(2) In order that the table contained in section 44(a) of title 28, United States Code, will, with respect to each judicial circuit, reflect the changes in the total number of permanent circuit judgeships authorized as a result of subsection (a)(1) of this section, such table is amended to read as follows:

"Circuits:	Number of judges
District of Columbia	12

(b)(1) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional district judge for the western district of Arkansas, two additional district judges for the northern district of California, six additional district judges for the central district of California, two additional district judges for the district of Connecticut, two additional district judges for the middle district of Florida, one additional district judge for the northern district of Illinois, one additional district judge for the southern district of Iowa, one additional district judge for the western district of Louisiana, one additional district judge for the southern district of Mississippi, one additional district judge for the eastern district of Missouri, three additional district judges for the district of New Jersey, one additional district judge for the district of New Mexico, one additional district judge for the southern district of New York, one additional district judge for the eastern district of New York, one additional district judge for the southern district of Ohio, one additional district judge for the northern district of Oklahoma, two additional district judges for the western district of Oklahoma, one additional district judge for the district of Oregon, three additional district judges for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, one additional district judge for the eastern district of Tennessee, one additional district judge for the district of South Carolina, three additional district judges for the southern district of Texas, one additional district judge for the western district of Texas, and one additional district judge for the district of Utah.

(2) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional district judge for the northern district of Alabama, one additional district judge for the eastern district of California, one additional district judge for the district of Hawaii, one additional district judge for the central district of Illinois, one additional district judge for the southern district of Illinois, one additional district judge for the district of Kansas, one additional district judge for the middle district of Louisiana, one additional district judge for the district of Maryland, one additional district judge for the distinct of Massachusetts, one additional district judge for the western district of Michigan, one additional district judge for the eastern district of Missouri, one additional district judge for the district of Nebraska, one additional district judge for the district of Nevada, one additional district judge for the northern district of New York, one additional district judge for the northern district of Ohio, one additional district judge for the southern district of Ohio, one additional district judge for the western district of Oklahoma, one additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, one additional district judge for the middle district of Tennessee, one additional district judge for the eastern district of Texas, and one additional district judge for the eastern district of Virginia. The first vacancy in the office of district judge in each of the judicial districts named in this subsection, occurring five years or more after the position for that district authorized by this subsection in first filled, shall not be filled.

(3) The existing district judgeships for the northern district of Illinois, the northern district of Indiana, the district of Massachusetts, the western district of New York, the northern district of Ohio, and the western district of Washington heretofore authorized by section 202(b) of the Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-353, 98 Stat. 347-348) shall, as of the effective date of this Act, be authorized under section 133 of title 28 of the United States Code, and the incumbents in those offices shall henceforth hold the office under section 133, as amended by this Act.

(4) The existing two district judgeships for the eastern and western districts of Arkansas, heretofore provided by section 133 of title 28 of the United States Code, shall hereafter be district judgeships for the eastern district of Arkansas only, and the incumbents of such judgeships shall henceforth hold the offices under section 133, as amended by this Act. The existing district judgeship for the northern and southern districts of Iowa, heretofore provided by section 133 of title 28, shall hereafter be a district judgeship for the northern district of Iowa only, and the incumbent of such judgeship shall henceforth hold the office under section 133, as amended by this Act. The existing district judgeship for the northern, eastern, and western districts of Oklahoma, heretofore provided by section 133 of title 28 and the occupant of which has his official duty station at Oklahoma City on the date of enactment of this Act, shall hereafter be a district judgeship for the western district of Oklahoma only, and the incumbent of such judgeship shall hereafter hold the office under section 133, as amended by this Act.

(5) In order that the table contained in section 133 of title 28, United States Code, will, with respect to each judicial district, reflect the changes in the total number of permanent district judgeships authorized as a result of subsections (b)(1), (b)(3), and (b)(4) of this section, such table is amended to read as follows:

(c)(1) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional judge for the District Court of the Virgin Islands, who shall hold office for a term of 10 years and until a successor is chosen and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President for cause.

(2) In order to reflect the change in the total number of permanent judgeships authorized as a result of subsection (c)(1) of this section, section 24(a) of the Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands, Chapter 558, 68 Stat. 506, as amended (48 U.S.C. § 1614(A)), is further amended by striking out "two" and inserting in lieu thereof "three".

(d) This Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(e) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I think, since the distinguished Senator from Delaware does not recommend where the judges will be placed but merely that there will be 20 judges, we will then make those determinations in the Judiciary Committee. I am sure the modification of the distinguished ranking member will be considered at that time.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, let me make sure how my amendment is hereby being modified.

The Senator from Utah has been kind enough to withdraw his amendment—not withdraw. I should not say that. I am not being very articulate here.

Mr. HATCH. I am happy to accept the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Delaware.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor this alternative. A winning strategy against drug abuse involves three approaches: Law enforcement, prevention, and treatment. Each is vital, and none can be downgraded or ignored.

We have stepped up the pressure on the law enforcement component in the drug war, with enhanced resources and penalties. These enhancements have taken many drug traffickers off our streets, but at the same time we have put a tremendous strain on our criminal justice system.

Our efforts over the past several years have already saddled us with a criminal justice system that is bursting at the seams, causing prosecutors, courts, and prisons to call out for help.

We need to address the fact that Federal court dockets are heavily clogged by narcotics prosecutions. The current number of district court judges—575—is based on 1984 caseload needs. Since 1984, the criminal caseload has increased 20 percent from 36,000 to 44,000 cases. The burden on the courts is continuing to increase under the 1986 and 1988 drug legislation, and it will become even heavier under the new national strategy. An omnibus judge bill has no place as part of this important drug bill, however. An omnibus bill should be given full consideration by the Judiciary Committee.

This compromise proposal, to authorize 20 new judges to be assigned to districts whose dockets are hardest hit by drug prosecutions, is the same proposal I included in the 1988 Democratic drug bill. My proposal fell victim to partisan opposition last year. If we had prevailed last year, the criminal caseload in the Federal courts would not have been as pressing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH].

The amendment (No. 960) was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now occurs on agreeing to the amendment, as amended, of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, as amended, is the only thing left in the amendment of the Senator from Utah what was the Biden amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BIDEN. I thank the Chair very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now occurs on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, as amended, of the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH].

The amendment (No. 959) as modified, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming would just note that he has been on his feet waiting for recognition for an hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California sought recognition.

AMENDMENT NO. 961

(Purpose: To provide for comprehensive community substance abuse programs)

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California, [Mr. CRANSTON], for himself, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. KOHL, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. LEAHY], proposes an amendment numbered 961.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . COMPREHENSIVE COMMUNITY SUBSTANCE ABUSE PREVENTION PROGRAMS.

(a) FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.—

(1) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(A) preventing substance abuse is the key to reducing the demand for illegal drugs and stopping the drug epidemic;

(B) substance abuse prevention activities have been seriously ignored and underfunded;

(C) successful prevention efforts require the involvement of all segments of the community including those in leadership positions and other concerned individuals and organizations on the grassroots level;

(D) many communities lack the tools, resources, and knowledge to mount an effective and comprehensive substance abuse prevention program; and

(E) the Federal Government should be a partner with local and State governments and community organizations in an effort to prevent substance abuse.

(2) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to assist communities in planning, developing, and implementing long-term comprehensive substance abuse prevention strategies and programs—

(A) by developing communicative and cooperative relationships between various organizations, agencies, businesses, clergy, schools, parents, youth, and interested citizens regarding substance abuse prevention activities; and

(B) by assisting communities in training individuals in methods of planning, developing, and implementing substance abuse prevention and intervention programs and activities.

(b) COMMUNITY PARTNERSHIPS.—Part A of title V of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa et seq.) as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SEC. 509H. COMMUNITY COALITIONS ON SUBSTANCE ABUSE.

"(a) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term 'eligible coalition' means an association, consisting of at least seven organizations, agencies, and individuals that are concerned about preventing substance abuse, that shall include—

"(1) public and private organizations and agencies that represent law enforcement, schools, health and social service agencies, community-based organizations, and substance abuse prevention specialists; and

"(2) at least three representatives of the clergy, academia, business, parents, youth, the media, civic and fraternal groups, or other nongovernmental interested parties.

"(b) GRANT PROGRAM.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Office, shall make grants to eligible coalitions in order to—

"(1) plan a comprehensive long-term program for substance abuse prevention;

"(2) implementing such substance abuse prevention program, including the development of materials, public awareness campaigns, and community events;

"(3) develop a detailed assessment of existing substance abuse prevention programs and activities to determine community resources and to identify major gaps and barriers in such programs and activities;

"(4) identify and solicit funding sources to enable such programs and activities to become self-sustaining;

"(5) develop and implement a consensus regarding the priorities of a community concerning substance abuse;

"(6) provide outreach prevention services to target populations; and

"(7) coordinate substance abuse services and activities, including establishing referral linkages, between prevention activities in the schools and communities and substance abuse treatment programs.

"(c) COMMUNITY PARTICIPATION.—In developing and implementing a substance abuse prevention program, a coalition receiving funds under paragraph (1) shall—

"(1) emphasize and encourage substantial voluntary participation in the community, especially among individuals involved with youth such as teachers, coaches, parents, and clergy; and

"(2) emphasize and encouraging the involvement of businesses, civic groups, and other community organizations and members.

"(d) APPLICATION.—An eligible coalition shall submit an application to the Secretary in order to receive a grant under this section, such application shall—

"(1) describe and, to the extent possible, document the nature and extent of the substance abuse problem including any identifiable target groups;

"(2) describe the activities and services needing financial assistance;

"(3) describe the substance abuse prevention plan;

"(4) identify participating agencies, organizations, and individuals;

"(5) identify the agency, organization, or individual that has responsibility for leading the coalition and provide assurances that such agency, organization or individual has previous substance abuse prevention experience;

"(6) describe a mechanism to evaluate the success of the coalition in developing and carrying out the substance abuse prevention plan referred to in subsection (b)(5); and

"(7) contain such additional information and assurances as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(e) PRIORITY.—In awarding grants under this section, the Secretary shall give priority to a community that—

"(1) provides evidence of significant substance abuse;

"(2) proposes a comprehensive and multifaceted approach to preventing substance abuse;

"(3) encourages the involvement of businesses and community leaders in substance abuse prevention activities;

"(4) demonstrates a commitment and a high priority for preventing substance abuse; and

"(5) demonstrates support from the community and State and local agencies for efforts to eliminate substance abuse.

"(f) EVALUATION.—The Director shall establish a mechanism to evaluate the effectiveness of community coalitions established under this section in preventing substance abuse and to disseminate the results of such evaluations to community coalitions.

"(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $60,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, $70,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $80,000,000 for fiscal year 1992.

"(2) SIZE OF COMMUNITIES.—The Secretary shall allocate at least 35 percent of the amount appropriated under paragraph (1) for a fiscal year to communities, with populations of no more than 250,000 individuals, that have made substance abuse prevention a high priority, as determined by the Secretary.

"SEC. 509. SUBSTANCE ABUSE PREVENTION TRAINING.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Office, shall establish a National Substance Abuse Prevention Training Program (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Program').

"(b) PROGRAM DIRECTOR.—The Progam shall be headed by a Director who has extensive experience in substance abuse prevention (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Program Director').

"(c) DUTIES.—The Program Director shall—

"(1) develop a substance abuse prevention training curriculum for community groups in organizing development, program operation, prevention concepts, and models;

"(2) provide technical assistance and support for community training on substance abuse prevention, including organizing the community, developing skills, and establishing program goals;

"(3) provide technical assistance and support for advanced prevention and intervention training for the community organizing staff and State and local substance abuse agency staff;

"(4) develop specific training modules for problem areas such as substance abuse, teen pregnancy, and acquired immune deficiency syndrome and for professional groups that work with children and adolescents, such as juvenile court judges, pediatricians, coaches, and counselors;

"(5) provide substance abuse prevention outreach and support to communities with substantial minority populations through workshops and collaborative initiatives with organizations serving such populations;

"(6) disseminate successful curricula and training practices in substance abuse prevention in communities through involvement with parents, civic groups, members of the business community, clergy, law enforcement representatives, and community leaders; and

"(7) evaluate the appropriateness and effectiveness of substance abuse prevention training.

"(d) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $15,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990 through 1992.

"SEC. 509J. SPECIALIZED TRAINING PROGRAM.

"(a) GRANT PROGRAM.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Office, shall make grants to States, local agencies, and community organizations in order to—

"(1) provide substance abuse prevention training to representatives of such organizations and agencies;

"(2) provide substance abuse prevention training to parents, teachers, clergy, the business community, and civic groups;

"(3) coordinate with other community resources and programs; and

"(4) provide specialized training programs for professional groups that work with children and adolescents, or that are targeted to specific population groups.

"(b) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $20,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990 through 1992.".

"(c) OFFICE FOR SUBSTANCE ABUSE PREVENTION.—Section 508(d)(2) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aaa(d)(2)) is amended by striking out "$5,300,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$4,000,000".

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, let me say to my friend from Wyoming that I will be very brief. I believe we are rotating back and forth between both sides and the last amendment came from that side. I will be exceedingly brief in stating the reason for this amendment, as is my usual custom, and it is my hope that will help lead to enthusiastic support from as many as possible who know that we should be completing our business as rapidly as possible.

Mr. President, my amendment would address the one area of the drug war that I believe has been most neglected—substance abuse prevention. Specifically, it would establish a community-based substance abuse prevention program. I am delighted that the amendment is cosponsored by Senator HARKIN, the chairman of the Labor-HHS Appropriations Committee, Senator KOHL, and Senator DECONCINI—all of whom I know share my belief that drug prevention must be a high priority in our drug efforts. Also co-sponsoring the amendment are Senators GRAHAM, KENNEDY, and LEAHY.

Mr. President, if we as a society are ever going to be successful in stopping drug abuse, and increasingly violent crime that often goes along with it, we must stop the demand. We can step up efforts to stop the flow of drugs at our borders and increase law enforcement efforts to crack down on drug trafficking—and I think these activities are important—but they cannot ultimately stop people using drugs.

Unfortunately—until this year—substance abuse prevention programs—particularly those that focus on community efforts—have received very little attention or funding. Communities represent an untapped resource in our war against drugs. I believe, with some assistance, community coalitions would be a very effective force in helping young people stay off of drugs.

Mr. President, the Senate-passed Labor-HHS Appropriations Act as amended by the Byrd-Hatfield amendment provides a total of $60 million for community substance abuse prevention efforts.

Mr. President, I believe that this money will be well invested. However, this is a substantial amount of new money for which very little congressional direction is provided. I believe—to ensure that the program has the greatest chance to succeed—we should more clearly spell out its intended use.

Early this summer I introduced legislation—S. 1233, the Comprehensive Community Substance Abuse Prevention Act of 1989—that would provide a blueprint for a program to support community prevention efforts. My amendment, which is based on S. 1233, would complement the appropriations action. It would specifically authorize for 3 years an initiative to assist communities in planning, developing, and implementing a substance abuse prevention and intervention program. It would provide direction for what community prevention coalitions should be composed of and provide guidelines for assigning priority to grants. It would also stipulate that 35 percent of the funding must go to communities with populations of no more than 250,000 individuals.

The legislation would also establish a national substance abuse prevention training program. Although an amendment was adopted last week that would expand training of drug treatment professionals, training programs for individuals in substance abuse prevention were not included.

COMMUNITY-BASED PREVENTION PROGRAMS WORK

Mr. President, recent research has found that a comprehensive community program—involving schools, businesses, parents, community organizations and leaders, and the media—is the most successful in preventing drug and alcohol use. A recent study conducted in the Kansas City area has followed sixth- and seventh-graders for the last few years who have participated in an experimental drug prevention program which involved parents and family members, community organizations, and the media in addition to the schools. After the first year, students who participated in the experimental program reported that they used drugs and cigarettes far less than those who did not. I am informed that the program effects may even be greater in the subsequent 2 years.

Mr. President, I have seen such coalitions in action, and I have been greatly impressed by their ability to rally people to develop innovative responses to the drug problem. Over the last few months I have been holding community forums throughout California to learn about what they are doing and what needs to be done to stop the scourge of drugs.

I have heard from ordinary citizens rising to the challenge of fighting back. Communities coming together with limited resources and unlimited heart to send a strong and united message that goes beyond urging young people simply to say "no" to drugs.

Mr. President, the Appropriations Committee has provided the funding for these prevention projects, and I congratulate Senators BYRD, HARKIN, and others for their efforts. My amendment would provide the blueprint to carry out the program. It would provide for program evaluation and instill accountability. It would help ensure that Congress knows how the funding for community prevention efforts is spent. I urge all my colleagues to support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 962

(Purpose: To recognize the organization known as the 82d Airborne Division Association, Inc.)

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk which grants a Federal charter to the 82d Airborne Division Association. This legislation currently has bipartisan support.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must inform the Senator that there is a pending amendment which is offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we temporarily lay aside the pending amendment, because we have to anyway while we are waiting, and give the Senator from South Carolina the opportunity to propose for no more than 5 minutes his amendment.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, but I would hope that this would not be viewed by the Chair as an alternation between the Democratic side and the Republican side. This Senator has been standing here, while other Senators have been off eating dinner, waiting to present an amendment, and people who just wander in on the floor seem to be able to get recognition.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, that is not the intention of the Senator from Delaware. I am just attempting to accommodate the senior Senator here, and it will then go to the Republican side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, this amendment grants a Federal charter to the 82d Airborne Division Association. This legislation currently has the bipartisan support of 49 cosponsors and the companion legislation on the House side has 221 cosponsors. Identical legislation which I introduced last Congress passed the Senate with 55 cosponsors.

The 82d Airborne Division was activated initially as an infantry division which participated in three of the major campaigns of World War I: Lorraine, St. Mihiel, Meuse-Argonne. On May 27, 1919, the 82d Airborne was inactivated. The division was reactivated on March 25, 1942, under the command of Maj. Gen. Omar Bradley and became the Army's first airborne division under the command of Maj. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway. Deployed to North Africa in 1943, the 82d made parachute and glider assaults on Sicily and Salerno. In a 2-year period during World War II, the regiments of the 82d saw action in Italy at Anzio, in France at Normandy, where I landed with them, and at the Battle of the Bulge.

Following the end of the war, the sky soldiers of the 82d were ordered to Berlin to serve as "America's Guard of Honor" for 5 months of 1945. Due to logistical problems associated with the servicing of an airborne division overseas, the division returned to the United States where it was greeted with a New York City tickertape reception as it marched triumphantly on Fifth Avenue, on January 12, 1946.

The division was assigned to Fort Bragg, NC, to become a leading element of the Nation's military reaction force as well as to participate in a number of peacekeeping missions. Elements of the division have valiantly served in Korea, the Dominican Republic, Vietnam, and Grenada. Peacekeeping units have served in Sinai.

Designed to move quickly to any part of the world and to be prepared to fight immediately upon arrival, the members of the 82d Airborne have served with distinction for over 45 years. They have demonstrated a tireless commitment to our Nation's defense and ideals. Therefore, I can think of no other military association more deserving of the recognition given by Congress in the granting of a Federal charter. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the passage of this measure to grant such a charter to the 82d Airborne Division Association.

Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] proposes an amendment numbered 962.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place add the following:

CHARTER

SECTION 1. The 82d Airborne Division Association, Incorporated, a nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, is recognized as such and is granted a Federal charter.

POWERS

SEC. 2. The 82d Airborne Division Association, Incorporated, (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "corporation") shall have only those powers granted to it through its bylaws and articles of incorporation filed in the State or States in which it is incorporated and subject to the laws of such State or States.

RESTRICTIONS

SEC. 8. (a) No part of the income or assets of the corporation may insure to the benefit of any member, officer, or director of the corporation or be distributed to any such individual during the life of this charter. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the payment of reasonable compensation to the officers of the corporation or reimbursement for actual and necessary expenses in amounts approved by the board of directors.

(b) The corporation may not make any loan to any officer, director, or employee of the corporation.

(c) The corporation and any officer and director of the corporation, acting as such officer or director, shall not contribute to, support or otherwise participate in any political activity or in any manner attempt to influence legislation.

(d) The corporation shall have no power to issue any shares of stock nor to declare or pay any dividends.

(e) The corporation shall not claim congressional approval or Federal Government authority for any of its activities.

LIABILITY

SEC. 9. The corporation shall be liable for the acts of its officers and agents whenever such officers and agents have acted within the scope of their authority.

BOOKS AND RECORDS; INSPECTION

SEC. 10. The corporation shall keep correct and complete books and records of account and minutes of any proceeding of the corporation involving any of its members, the board of directors, or any committee having authority under the board of directors. The corporation shall keep, at its principal office, a record of the names and addresses of all members having the right to vote in any proceeding of the corporation. All books and records of such corporation may be inspected by any member having the right to vote in any corporation proceeding, or by any agent or attorney of such member, for any proper purpose at any reasonable time. Nothing in this section shall be construed to contravene any applicable State law.

AUDIT OF FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS

SEC. 11. The first section of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for audit of accounts of private corporations established under Federal law," approved August 30, 1964 (36 U.S.C. 1101), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(74) 82nd Airborne Division Association, Incorporated".

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 12. The corporation shall report annually to the Congress concerning the activities of the corporation during the preceding fiscal year. Such annual report shall be summitted at the same as the report of the audit of the corporation required by section 2 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for audit of accounts of private corporations established under Federal law", approved August 30, 1964 (36 U.S.C. 1101). The report shall not be printed as a public document.

RESERVATION OF RIGHT TO AMEND, ALTER, OR REPEAL CHARTER

SEC. 13. The right to amend, alter, or repeal this Act is expressly reserved to the Congress.

DEFINITION OF STATE

SEC. 14. For purposes of this Act, the term "State" includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the territories and possessions of the United States.

TAX-EXEMPT STATUS

SEC. 15. The corporation shall maintain its status as an organization exempt from taxation as provided in the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

TERMINATION

SEC. 16. If the corporation fails to comply with any of the restrictions or provisions of this Act, the charter granted by this Act shall expire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment (No. 962) was agreed to.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 961

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now occurs on amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in the interest of time, I have to say this amendment of the distinguished Senator from California is going to require a new grant program for comprehensive community substance abuse activities. I am extremely supportive of prevention efforts, especially those in local communities. As a matter of fact, we, in Congress, have been so supportive of such efforts that we have already established several such programs in current law.

For example, we created the Office of Substance Abuse Prevention to provide demonstration grants to local communities for the development of community-based prevention activities. We have also set aside a part of the Drug-Free Schools Act for community-based prevention activities. And, we have a 20-percent set-aside in the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Services Block Grant for community-based prevention activities relating to substance abuse.

Mr. President, if we need to modify our existing efforts, let us discuss it and decide. However, I reject the idea that we should abandon our current efforts, or at the worst duplicate these programs, just so we can claim we are fighting the war on drugs.

If we are going to do it, let us do it with common sense and practicality, not duplication of the funding or more bureaucracy. That is what this amendment does. It just duplicates an existing number of programs already in existence that are in the prevention area that will do this as well, if not better.

I might add, the administration is opposed to this amendment as well. Why do it? Why add another bureaucracy on top of four or five already existing ones and on top of OSAP which is very capable of seeing that these funds are well utilized.

That is the problem here, and I hate to let this amendment through. On the other hand, I do not want to hold colleagues up by having a rollcall vote.

I am going to make it clear. I have to say it is not cleared on this side. I have been trying to clear it just to let it go through and hopefully knock it out in conference, but, frankly, I cannot even get that kind of clearance.

Mr. President, I am going to ask the distinguished Senator from California to allow us to set this aside while I try to clear it. If I cannot clear it, I will try to come up with some other solution while we go to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Hearing no objection, the Chair recognizes the Senator from Wyoming.

AMENDMENT NO. 912

(Purpose: To require drug testing for applicants for title IV, Social Security Act benefits aid to families with dependent children)

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP], for himself and Mr. NICKLES, proposes an amendment numbered 912.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end insert the following new section:

SECTION . DRUG TESTS FOR CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS APPLYING FOR OR RECEIVING AID TO FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN.

Section 402 (a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 602(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (39);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (40) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(41) provide that the State agency—

"(A) shall require each applicant who is a parent or caretaker of a dependent child, as a condition of eligibility for aid under this part, to submit to a confidential test for illegal drugs approved by the Secretary;

"(B) shall implement a drug testing program under which any individual who receives aid under this part may be selected to submit to a confidential test for illegal drugs approved by the Secretary (such individuals selected for testing under this clause shall be selected on a random basis);

"(C) shall require that any individual required or selected to submit to a test for illegal drugs under this paragraph resulting in evidence of illegal drug use by such individual shall register for and participate in a drug treatment program approved by the State as a condition for continued eligibility for aid under this part; and

"(D) shall provide that—

"(i) if an individual who is required or selected pursuant to the provisions of this paragraph to submit to a test for illegal drugs and without good cause fails to submit to such test or refuses to participate in the State approved drug treatment program the needs of such individual shall not be taken into account with respect to such individual's family under paragraph (7) of this subsection, and if such individual is the parent or other caretaker relative, payments of aid of any dependent child in the family in the form of payments described in section 406(b)(2) (which in such a case shall be without regard to clauses (A) through (D) thereof) will be made unless the State agency, after making reasonable efforts, is unable to locate an appropriate individual to whom such payments can be made;

"(ii) any sanction described in clause (i) shall continue—

"(I) In the case of the individual's first failure to comply, until the failure to comply ceases;

"(II) in the case of the individual's second failure to comply, until the failure to comply ceases or 3 months (whichever is longer); and

"(III) in the case of any subsequent failure to comply, until the failure to comply ceases or 6 months (whichever is longer); and

"(iii) the State will promptly remind any individual whose failure to comply has continued for 3 months, in writing, of the individual's option to end the sanction by terminating such failure.".

SEC. . DEFINITION OF ILLEGAL DRUGS.

Section 406 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 606) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) The term 'illegal drugs' means a controlled substance in Schedule I or II, as defined under section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)); the possession of which is unlawful under such Act. The term 'illegal drugs' does not include a controlled substance used pursuant to a valid prescription or authorized by law.".

SEC. . REGULATIONS.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall prescribe such regulations as the Secretary deems necessary to implement the illegal drug testing program and required by the amendments made by section 2.

SEC. . EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall become effective on October 1, 1990.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming always thought he knew why America's legal bills are so high. He has now seen it along, of course, with the rest of America who may be watching on C-SPAN. Why, when the clock runs, the lawyer's fees go up.

We have had a surfeit of redundancy, I would suggest, in the last couple of amendments. But this one, Mr. President, I hope will go quickly.

The amendment I offer is similar to a proposal that I offered in the 100th Congress to the Welfare Reform Act. During the debate on the welfare bill it was suggested by the bill's managers—Senator MOYNIHAN in particular—it would be more appropriate to offer my amendment to the drug bill. They agreed with the concept behind my amendment but wanted it debated in the context of the Omnibus Drug Act.

However, when we got to the Drug Act, it was on a fast track, late in the session, and amendments were strongly discouraged.

Today, we have an opportunity to revisit my amendment. The proposal is simple. As a condition of eligibility for aid to families with dependent children, the title 4 AFDC benefits, a parent applicant must submit to a drug test.

If the individual tests positive for abuse of illegal substances, he or she must register for a drug treatment program to obtain eligibility for benefits. Random drug testing of current welfare recipients would also be required.

There are, Mr. President, already a number of requirements to be eligible for AFDC benefits. Individuals must, of course, have dependent children. They must register for employment training. They have to meet income limits.

A drug testing requirement is but one more simple eligibility requirement. It is based on a concept of individual responsibility that is all too often missing from public policy.

It is my belief that if we do not require some sort of self-discipline, some accountability on the part of those who benefit from the generosity of the American taxpayer and the public welfare program, we will never have any success in our campaign against drug abuse.

This is nothing more than a recognition of the extent of and the extant problem of drug abuse.

America's low-income neighborhoods are ravaged by drugs. Drug lords prey on the poor. The poor are America's most vulnerable population. We have just passed the Byrd amendment which increases funding for drug education and treatment. Earlier, we passed an amendment of the Senator from California, Mr. WILSON, that, in the process of cutting down some of the Senate's own self-promotion, provided money for the treatment of children of drug-dependent mothers.

We have the resources to respond to drug addiction. It seems now only appropriate to take the steps to ensure that those most in need can no longer evade their addiction and can find treatment for it in the process of receiving the other generous help that America provides for them.

It is not appropriate to evade an addiction at the expense of the American taxpayer. The generosity of the American people should not be obliged to pay for a drug habit. The generosity of the American people has already been expressed in a desire to pay for a treatment of drug problems. How are we to discover drug problems in families with dependent children if we are not going to do the testing suggested in this amendment?

When I introduced my amendment as a bill earlier this year, I cited a recent news story about the Democratic mayor of San Diego, a liberal, self-professed, woman. She had spent some time on her own initiative acting as, behaving as and living amongst the homeless people to learn about the extent of that problem in her community. Her shocking discovery was the openness of the drug trade in low-income communities and how dependent the drug dealers were on the benefits of their victims. Sales picked up noticeably on the days when welfare checks were distributed. This is not right. It is not right for the recipients; it is not right for America's contributors.

Some will argue that my amendment discriminates against the poor. In my opinion, it is an attempt to help the poor. The whole purpose of America's welfare program is to elevate people from the binding poverty, from the binding ignorance, and it should be the binding addictions of that world.

We already, Mr. President, require Federal contractors to have drug-free workplaces. We already require America's military to submit to drug testing. Just last week the Senate approved random drug testing for transportation workers. The purpose of my amendment is not discrimination but in elevating these folks who necessarily have become dependent on the aid that America gives in the welfare system to totally rehabilitate.

It is not possible to rehabilitate when we ask somebody to register for job training if that same individual is drug dependent. It is impossible to suppose that in job training, whatever dimension it is, that jobs will be the ultimate result and freedom from dependency upon the welfare system will be the ultimate consequence.

So the purpose of the amendment is not discrimination. It is accountability; accountability for the program of welfare; accountability for the recipients of welfare. I challenge my colleagues to explain why this might be a bad idea.

Drug testing, since it is a condition of eligibility, would be funded out of the administrative expenses of the title 4 program. One estimate we have received from the Department of Health and Human Services is that the cost of a drug test is $26 per applicant, a small cost to pay in a war against drugs and an even smaller cost to pay if in the process of receiving treatment and counsel and freedom from addiction, we would have saved the American taxpayer a bundle of money and America's welfare recipients, some few of them at least, the possibility of evading a lifetime of addiction to debilitating substances.

Mr. President, that is my amendment. It would be my hope that the managers might see their way fit to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I do not know that I am up to the challenge, but I will rise to the challenge of trying to show the Senator why his amendment is not a good idea, with all due respect.

First of all, I know of no statistics that demonstrate that women receiving welfare, women receiving aid to dependent children, have a higher percentage of drug addiction than any other percentage of the population. That may be a stereotypical prejudice we have, but I know of no evidence to prove that, and I would be delighted to be educated if that, in fact, is not the case, if there is evidence. There may be; I know of none.

Can the Senator tell me how many people are receiving AFDC now?

Mr. WALLOP. Roughly 10 million. I would say to my friend that is including children. That figure is not just parents. I would also say to my friend no longer, because of changes we have made, is it just women who receive AFDC.

Mr. BIDEN. But is the Senator suggesting all persons receiving AFDC be drug tested?

Mr. WALLOP. All parents.

Mr. BIDEN. So the man or woman receiving AFDC would be required to be drug tested and the cost of that, by the Senator's admission, if they are drug tested once a year, is $26 million. It is $26 a test, we agree. If there are roughly 1 million people, and let us assume that.

Mr. WALLOP. But I say to my friend, it would not be $26 million. I point out again that it is 10 million people who are recipients. That includes a number of children. It would be down closer to a figure less than 5 million.

Mr. BIDEN. I am prepared to say only 1 million. It may be 5 million. Even if it is only 1 million people that will be tested, that is $26 million per test.

Mr. WALLOP. Will the Senator yield, not $26 per test. I would say to my friend that it only applies to initial applicants.

Mr. BIDEN. I see. How about people, I ask my colleague from Wyoming, who already are receiving AFDC, would not they have to be tested under this amendment?

Mr. WALLOP. We are talking about new applicants.

Mr. BIDEN. Only new applicants?

Mr. WALLOP. Under the amendment, there is some provision for random testing, but it would not be universal among the recipients.

Mr. BIDEN. If I understand correctly, then, every new applicant for AFDC would have to be drug tested, and all those who receive AFDC would be subject to random testing. Does the Senator have any idea what the cost of this testing program would be per year?

Mr. WALLOP. The Senator has not received a specific figure on that, but I ask my friend to contemplate how much money, talking in the abstract, one would save by elevating people off of AFDC, which would not be possible to us so long as they are drug-dependent.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I am not at this moment trying to argue the case. I am trying to ascertain the facts. Let me now go to arguing the case from the position of the Senator from Delaware.

Again, let me point out that to the best of my knowledge—and there are enough qualified staffs on both sides of the aisle that can correct me if I am wrong—the Senator from Delaware is unaware of any study to indicate that recipients of AFDC are more or less likely to be drug addicted.

Now, assume for the moment the Senator from Delaware is correct about that. If that is true, then there is no reasonable rationale for us, it seems to me, not to go out and insist on drug testing for Social Security recipients, Medicare recipients, Medicaid recipients in States, small business administration loans, farm benefits, grazing rights on Federal land, student loan programs, veterans benefits, aid to disabled, unless the underlying rationale is that somehow AFDC types are those who are likely to be the ones to break the law and be addicted, and that once we find out whether or not they are addicted we will somehow tell them they will not receive benefits, ergo they will no longer participate in drug abuse and therefore they will have elevated themselves out of poverty, because the presumption is the only thing that keeps them in poverty is their drug addiction.

Now, it seems to me to be somewhat circular reasoning we would have to subscribe to to reach that conclusion.

I think it is a notable idea and a worthy notion that the Senator from Wyoming puts forward that anyone who would test positive would be able to go into a drug treatment program.

I would like to point out to my friend from Wyoming that NASADAD points out, after having recently done a survey, that the State agencies have come back and said there are 58,460 persons currently listed—not guessing—on treatment program waiting lists—58,460 persons.

In addition to that, I would add that as estimated by the Federal and local drug agencies, there are roughly 10,262,878 people including 8,333,000 adults and 1,451,000 adolescents who are in need of drug treatment programs now. The money we came up with, and the States have available to them, allows for fewer than 50 percent of these people to be able to receive treatment.

Further, the average waiting list for people to get into a treatment program runs anywhere from 8 months in large cities to 30 days in other cities. So although the notion arguably about providing treatment for people who in fact test positive is a good one, it only works if we are willing to add, to allow treatment on demand, $6.1 billion tonight.

If we add $6.1 billion, we will be able to provide treatment on demand so that the program the Senator from Wyoming says he wishes to be able to make available to people, which is to put people into treatment programs in order that their children continue to receive those benefits, is something that would be needed.

If you have to wait 8 months to get into a treatment program after having tested positive, as I understand the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming, you would in the meantime I assume be kicked off of the AFDC anyway. Who are we hurting when we do that? The 9 million children that we acknowledge make up part of the 10 million people with whom we are dealing.

Roughly, we are saying, for the sake of argument, 1 million people are adults and 9 million people are children. So a parent comes in and tests positive. In order to accept this amendment, you have to adopt the rationale that the reason to do it is because they are more likely to be abusers; and second, once you determine they are abusers, you will be able to provide them treatment immediately so they can get off their habit to help their children and society, and to get off their addiction to welfare as well, and further, that if they were faced with the prospect of this occurring, they would become productive citizens because by implication the only thing that keeps them on AFDC in the first place is their drug addiction.

Mr. President, I think it would be equally as reasonable to say that among the criminal element there are a lot of drug addicts. A significant portion of the criminal element either illegally goes out and buys guns or legally buys guns. It would make sense to insist there be a drug treatment program for anyone seeking a license to go fishing or hunting, a drug treatment program for the protection and the welfare of society. It would be equally as reasonable to come along, and I am not suggesting it, and say that some day in order to purchase a gun someone should have a drug treatment program.

I respectfully submit if we want to deal with the safety of society and the money society spends through taxes on things they could otherwise avoid spending, then maybe we should go back to the recommendation of the former Governor from Delaware, Governor du Pont, who said all students getting a driver's license should be drug tested.

Most of the people who commit accidents driving under the influence are not student age. They are older. So why not implement a program in the name of the welfare of America that everyone who seeks renewal of their driver's license has to be drug tested.

The rationale is in terms of cost to the public in reducing the number of police that are required to go to accidents, reducing the number of bills that come as a consequence of having to deal with everything from the tow truck to the hospital bill, and the insurance rates that go up, we will save society a lot more money by doing that. And unlike with AFDC, we have statistics showing the percentage of accidents that involve people under the influence of drugs.

So I would respectfully suggest that this is, unintentionally, incredibly discriminatory, and incapable, notwithstanding its discriminatory nature, of solving the problem it allegedly intends to solve, which is to cause people to raise themselves up by their bootstraps, because once they shed this drug dependency, which it is implied they have, if in fact they are going to seek welfare, they will have become productive citizens.

I respectfully suggest it does not comport with reality or with the facts. But I understand that it may sound appealing to some to suggest that.

For example, we do know the percentage of drug users among adolescents and college-age students. We know from statistics what they are. Should we not drug test every person who receives a student loan?

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

At some appropriate point, if the Senator does not withdraw the amendment, and he is perfectly entitled not to withdraw it—this side cannot accept the amendment—I will move at the appropriate time to table the amendment.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I just have a few comments to make about this amendment. I hope the distinguished Senator from Delaware will not do that, because this is a commonsense amendment. The taxpayers of this country are not opposed to helping those who are in need.

What they are opposed to is helping those who do not want to help themselves. That is where we get into trouble. We are helping too many people who will not do anything to help themselves, who cannot.

It is not too much to expect for a person receiving Federal benefits to be drug-free. It is not too much to expect they will be law abiding. Do not forget the use of drugs is, after all, illegal. That is what we are attacking here.

This amendment, as I understand it, would require persons applying for Federal benefits, such as AFDC or food stamps, to have a drug test. If the test is positive, then these persons can be enrolled in appropriate treatment programs. That is the bottom line. If it is positive, they are going to get the treatment they need.

It is not an excuse for cutting Federal benefits to those who are in need. It is a way of identifying users and getting them into the treatment programs. There are a lot of users who are on AFDC. I do not want them to lose their benefits. Mothers receiving AFDC may love their children, but they cannot be truly good parents if they do not get help to kick their drug or alcohol dependence problems. Their first priority is their next dose of crack, and their children often come second. We are not helping these families if we continue to send them checks and make no requirement that these individuals are identified and enrolled in treatment programs. That has to be the first step toward helping them get their lives together. Job training, education, and the other programs that might help these families receiving these benefits cannot be effective if the individual is still abusing drugs and alcohol.

So persons receiving public assistance cannot reclaim their self-esteem and get the welfare monkey off their backs if they first cannot throw out the gorilla that amounts to drug addiction or alcohol.

So, I think that the distinguished Senator from Wyoming is right. It is not an attempt to hurt these people. It is not an attempt to deprive them of benefits. It is an attempt to get them help.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator is as well-schooled in this as anyone I know. Does the Senator know if there is any evidence to indicate a recipient of AFDC is more likely to be a drug addict than someone who is not?

Mr. HATCH. I do not know of any particular study that would show one way or the other except we know it exists. We know the problems are there. We know many of these people are in many cases not as highly educated—they have been deprived of education and opportunities that others benefit from. The purpose of this amendment is to get them help. We know a number of the people in our society on some of these programs have these problems.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. BIDEN. Is it not true that you cannot be a truly good hunter or a truly good driver if you are on drugs?

Mr. HATCH. I think it is probably true that you cannot.

Mr. BIDEN. Is it not true that you cannot be a truly good anything if you are on drugs? I believe the Senator from Utah, one of the most capable debaters in this body, is engaged in a series of nonsequiturs that are quite fascinating. He says we want to get people off drugs because you cannot truly be a good mother. Obviously, you cannot. You cannot be a truly good driver. Why not test all drivers? You cannot be truly a good hunter. Why not test all hunters?

Mr. HATCH. Some may suggest that. On the other hand, here we have a group of people who cannot help themselves, where hunters and drivers can. Here we have a group of people who basically need this type of help, some of them.

This is a way of determining and finding it out. I personally have lots of difficulties in forcing anybody to take any kind of a test. Here is a situation where I believe a fairly substantial number of people would benefit from this amendment. But be that as it may, I understand the distinguished Senator's argument, and I think we ought to move ahead.

Mr. BIDEN. I am going to move to table at the appropriate time. I do not want to cut off the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP].

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I have no hope of trying to displace the Senator from Deleware, but let me suggest to him it is not the point whether fewer or more families with dependent children are drug addicted than other ones. One can site any number of statistics. One can quote from the Washington Post article last Saturday in which they stated the Washington infant mortality rate has soared because of mothers addicted to crack—low-income, and a large proportion of them on welfare. Mortality has increased 50 percent, comparable to Third World Nations.

I want to clear up a few of the things that my friend from Delaware said because he has a habit of creating a monster when there is a relatively simple point at hand.

I did not state, and would not state, that AFDC parents are more likely to break the law, but ask only that having been tested, they register for treatment if found positive. This is the same eligibility requirement, Mr. President, that we have now. They lose their benefits if they do not register for job training. They lose them, straight out.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WALLOP. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator think there are any programs available for treatment that they could get into? Is the Senator aware of the statistics that there are no programs?

Mr. WALLOP. The Senator is totally aware, and the Senator from Delaware once again makes this thing somehow or another they are going to lose their benefits if they are not in treatment. That is not the amendment. The amendment merely requires that they register. If it is not available, they do not lose it. But the same thing with job training as a matter of fact. There are some communities in America where job training is not available. But we have eligibility requirements for all other kinds of other professions—military, and I mentioned transportation. We are not suggesting that they ask for treatment on demand. I am also not suggesting to the Senator they would be kicked off but for the fact that a drug treatment program was available and they did not accept the treatment.

I say to my friend that this does not deny children of AFDC parents any benefit. It denies parents benefits; the children are still eligible as they are if they fail to register for job training. The children are taken care of under this. Current law treats parents who will not register for job training the same way. They lose their benefits.

I made no such implications, I say to my friend from Delaware, that these people seek welfare because they are drug dependent. But I would say this: The American taxpayer has no obligation to sustain a drug habit. The American taxpayer has every obligation to provide humane welfare programs and benefits to get people elevated out of the welfare trap. That was the whole purpose of the welfare reform.

Mr. President, I am not going to state any more about this tonight. I know the Senator from Delaware is going to move to table. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second on the motion to table? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 75, nays 24, as follows:

So, the motion to lay on the table the amendment (No. 912) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 963 TO AMENDMENT NO. 961

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to setting aside the amendment of the Senator from California?

Mr. HATCH. It is an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is in order.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], proposes an amendment numbered 963 to the Cranston amendment numbered 961.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following: Part A of title V of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa et seq.) as amended is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

SEC. 509H. COMMUNITY COALITIONS ON SUBSTANCE ABUSE.

The Director of the Office of Substance Abuse shall develop model programs for community prevention activities.

(b) The Director of the Office of Substance Abuse Prevention shall provide assistance to coalitions consisting of public and private organizations and agencies that represent law enforcement, schools, health and social service agencies, community-based organizations and substance abuse prevention specialists and including representatives from among the following: Clergy, academia, business, parents, youth, the media, civic and fraternal groups, or other nongovernmental interested parties in order to develop and implement comprehensive substance abuse programs.

(c) The Director shall establish a mechanism to evaluate the effectiveness of community coalitions established under subsection (b) in preventing substance abuse and to disseminate the results of such evaluations to community coalitions.

(d) The Director shall develop a substance abuse prevention training curriculum for community coalitions and shall provide technical assistance, and support for community training on substance abuse prevention.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this amendment is agreed to not only by the distinguished Senator from California but by this side and I believe the other side, as well. I ask that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I will accept the compromise proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH]. Although I have agreed to drop some of the specifications regarding the types of services and programs that the coalitions should provide, I believe that the amendment retains the core elements: Community coalitions to develop and implement comprehensive substance abuse prevention programs; evaluation of the programs' effectiveness; training in substance abuse prevention; and model curricula for community substance abuse prevention.

I thank the Senator from Utah for his cooperation and urge adoption of the amendment. I thank too, the Senator from Delaware for his helpfulness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah, Mr. HATCH.

The amendment (No. 963) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator STEVENS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would remind the Senator that the amendment just agreed to was a second-degree amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from California. Final consideration of that amendment has not taken place.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California, Mr. CRANSTON.

The amendment (No. 961) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NOS. 964 THROUGH 975

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment (No. 964) to the desk for and on behalf of Senator STEVENS; an amendment (No. 965) for and on behalf of myself; an amendment (No. 966) for and on behalf of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, Mr. BINGAMAN, and also Mr. BOND; an amendment (No. 967) for and on behalf of Senator D'AMATO; an amendment (No. 968) by Senator KOHL on TV drugs; an amendment by Senator KOHL on a study——

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate? There is important business being transacted here. Some of us cannot hear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Three amendments by Senator KOHL.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend.

The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send four amendments to the desk on behalf of Senator KOHL; two (Nos. 972 and 973) by Senator GRAHAM of Florida; one (No. 974) by Senator BIDEN; and another one (No. 969) by Senator SIMON. I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask that all of these amendments be agreed to en bloc. They have been accepted by both sides.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, we accept them, as well.

The amendments are as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 964

On page 1, line 8, strike "(21 U.S.C. 802(6))," and insert "(21 U.S.C. 802(3)) except when authorized under the Controlled Substances Act".

On page 1, line 10, strike "the second undesignated paragraph of subsection (h)" and insert "the first undesignated paragraph following subsection (i)".

AMENDMENT No. 965

(Purpose: To require the Secretary of Defense to educate senior officers of the Armed Forces of the United States on the policies, strategies and related purposes of the national drug control effort, with emphasis on the military interdiction activities of such military personnel)

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

MILITARY INTERDICTION EDUCATION PROGRAM

SEC. . (a) PROGRAM REQUIRED.—The Secretary of Defense or his designee, shall provide that instruction on the military role in drug interdiction will be established for all senior officer personnel in the Armed Forces of the United States at basic, intermediate and advanced military educational facilities, to be selected at the discretion of the Secretary of Defense.

(b) PROGRAM CONTENT.—Instruction at such facilities shall include, but shall not be limited to the following topics:

(1) The nature of the threat posed to the national security of the United States by drug trafficking.

(2) Posse comitatus and other legal and constitutional restrictions on the participation of military personnel in law enforcement activities.

(3) The national drug control strategy of the United States and the United States Government organizations mandated to implement it.

(4) The history of United States Armed Forces' participation in drug interdiction, to include the types of assistance and equipment generally employed by DOD for such purposes.

(5) Other instruction, as appropriate, tailored to the specific mission, roles, organization, and functions of the military service providing such instruction.

(6) The Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy is further directed to coordinate with the Secretaries of Defense, State, Commerce, Transportation and Treasury, and with the Attorney General in establishing at the National Defense University a program designed to foster interagency cooperation on drug interdiction matters, emphasizing joint and combined operations between and among the participating agencies and the military services.

(c) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary of Defense will submit to Congress not later than December 14, 1990, a report to the President on the value and status of such training, along with recommendations appropriate to the future value of interagency cooperation and education on drug interdiction activities involving the use of military assistance.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this amendment fills a gap in our drug control strategy—it establishes a program to educate military personnel on drug interdiction policy and strategy.

It is my understanding that the amendment has the support of the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Last year, the Defense Department provided over 28,000 hours surveillance support from the air, and over 2,000 ship-days of support to the Coast Guard. As we all know, the revisions to posse conmitatus doctrine allow for extensive military involvement. My amendment seeks to assure that military personnel assigned to interdiction duties clearly understand the President's policy, and, more importantly to me as a member of the Judiciary Committee, the constitutional and statutory restraints on their conduct when engaged in interdiction assistance to law enforcement officials. For example, military personnel cannot make arrests or seizures of traffickers—and there are very real limits on their use of force—all of which assures that innocent persons are not harmed in the midst of the authorized use of force or in arrest situations.

The amendment therefore directs the Secretary of Defense to take two basic actions:

First, prepare appropriate instructional materials on drug policy and strategy to be included in the curricula of military schools that provide training for the senior officers of our Armed Forces.

In addition, the Secretary of Defense will establish at the National Defense University, instruction that is oriented to interagency cooperation, especially between the military services and the Coast Guard, DEA, Customs, Justice, FBI, CIA, and others

I happen to know that this type of instruction is not currently provided. Yet, because of the level and scope of military involvement, we simply can't afford to do without it

The President, Secretary of Defense, and the National Security Adviser have all acknowledged that drug trafficking is a threat to our national security interests. This amendment asks Congress to endorse that commitment, while assuring that military persons engaged in interdiction understand exactly the purpose and importance of their mission.

AMENDMENT No. 966

Amendment No. 938, offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] and adopted on October 3, 1989, as an amendment to S. 1711, is hereby amended as follows:

Amend section 1212 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 as follows:

(1) In subsection (a), strike "of law," and insert in lieu thereof "of law, except as provided in subsection (c),"

(2) In subsection (a), strike "and has implemented" and insert in lieu thereof "a plan with a timetable to implement"

(3) Strike sections 1212(a) (2), (3), and (4) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) a policy that restricts distribution on campus of any promotional material that encourages consumption of alcoholic beverages by persons under the state's legal drinking age;

"(3) In the case of the financing, sponsoring, or supporting of any athletic, musical, cultural or social program, event, or competition of such institution by any alcoholic beverage company or industry, the acknowledgement of such financing, sponsorship, or support in promotional material shall be limited to statements of corporate identification;

"(4) a policy that encourages such institution's newspapers and other publications to reject advertisements promoting irresponsible or illegal consumption of alcoholic beverages;"

(4) Add a new subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(c) Upon application by an institution of higher education, the Secretary shall grant a waiver of the sanctions authorized by this section to any institution of higher education which demonstrates that it is in the process of developing and implementing a plan required by subsection (a), for up to one year from the date of enactment of this section."

AMENDMENT No. 967

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . STATEMENT OF CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) this Nation is engulfed in an epidemic of drug abuse that is threatening our country's productivity and, in particular, the minds and future of our youngest citizens;

(2) there is an urgent need to interrupt drug-related criminal activities and behavior of our youth through instilling discipline, self-respect, literacy, social and vocational skills, and a personal commitment to family values and the community;

(3) the proposals for addressing that need contained in a National Institute of Justice paper, entitled "About Face: Civil-Military Youth Leadership Program for the District of Columbia" needs to be evaluated by the Office of National Drug Control Policy; and

(4) said paper proposes applying the positive aspects of basic military training, which reinforces and encourages discipline, responsibility and teamwork. It also proposes a program to improve literacy and vocational skills of program participants in ways that lead to real career opportunities for participants returning to their community after their participation in the progam.

SEC. . STUDY ON THE FEASIBILITY OF A CIVIL-MILITARY YOUTH LEADERSHIP PROGRAM.

(a) REPORT TO THE CONGRESS.—Not later than February 1, 1990, the Director of National Drug Control Policy shall submit a report to the Congress containing:

(1) an evaluation of the Department of Justice, National Institute of Justice concept paper entitled "About Face: Civil-Military Youth Leadership Program for the District of Columbia" (hereinafter referred to as the "Program");

(2) the feasibility of implementing the Program; and

(3) the feasibility of implementing the Program as a five-city pilot project;

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to propose on behalf of myself, Senators DECONCINI, DOMENICI, and GRAHAM, an amendment to S. 1711, the bill to implement the President's 1989 national drug control strategy.

The National Institute of Justice has prepared a proposal entitled "About Face: Civil-Military Youth Leadership Program for the District of Columbia." The proposal grows out of concern at the Justice Department that there has been a great deal of interest in so-called boot camps or shock incarceration for drug offenders, but too few standards or guidelines for these programs.

The National Institute of Justice proposal contains a number of suggestions for those wishing to establish boot camp or shock incarceration programs that go beyond mere detention. It addresses the need for literacy and job skill training, as a means to reduce and prevent criminal activity by young people living in areas of high drug use and crime.

It calls for a program to instill in them discipline, self-respect, and a personal commitment to family values and the community.

It calls for a program that targets both those young people who are under the formal authortiy of the juvenile justice system and young people who, although not under the formal authority of the juvenile justice system, are considerably at-risk for drug involvement.

It suggests separate tracks for youth in different age groups—for example, 16 to 18, 18 to 22. It calls for separate programs for sentenced drug offenders and for at-risk youth who have committed no crimes.

For those in the juvenile justice system it suggests: discipline training, confidence training—for example, outward bound-type programs—and community aftercare.

For those with no criminal history it suggests: junior reserve officer training corps recruit training and community aftercare.

It emphasizes the need to help graduates improve their literacy and vocational skills to give them career opportunities after graduation.

It calls on all levels of government and society to participate in the program, and suggests possible ways for them to do so.

Mr. President, we need to find innovative ways to deal with the problem of drugs and crime among our youth. I believe that this program should be reviewed and, if it is favorably considered by the Director of National Drug Control Policy, it should be implemented.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the National Institute of Justice proposal be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the proposal was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"ABOUT FACE" CIVIL-MILITARY YOUTH LEADERSHIP PROGRAM FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Introduction: The Civil-Military Youth Leadership Program concept paper describes an approach for containing the costs associated with the achievement of major domestic policy goals. The paper focuses on the control of drug abuse and related criminal activity among youth in the District of Columbia and is based on the following premises: Existing civil-military resources at the Federal, state and local levels must be mobilized to meet National goals.

Cost containment: Concentration of effort will result in greater efficiency and cost-effectiveness and will reduce the demand for additional resources.

Purpose: To interrupt drug-related criminal activities and behavior of participating District of Columbia youth through instilling discipline, self-respect, literacy, social and vocational skills, and a personal commitment to social values and the community.

To provide an opportunity to test a cost containment strategy involving Federal, state, and local government agencies working together to control drugs and crime by marshalling existing civil-military resources.

Benefits: Executive leadership and model development.

Efficiency and cost savings: Trained staff, existing facilities, and quick start-up.

Reduces social cost of drugs and crime in the community.

Urban revitalization.

Environmental advocacy.

Replicability.

This concept paper introduces a framework for the development of a comprehensive domestic policy initiative to reduce drug abuse and interrupt drug-related criminal activity among the inner city youth in the District of Columbia. A pilot demonstration program is proposed, under the leadership and direction of the Attorney General, that is civil-military in nature and coordinates the resources of a broad range of Federal agencies. If successful, this program could be replicated in other jurisdictions nationwide.

A summary of the target population, eligibility/discharge criteria and processes, program elements, and potential agency involvement is displayed in matrix form in Exhibits A and B.

Program design criteria: The following factors were considered key to this initiative and incorporated into the conceptual design presented in this document.

The strategy should provide a key role for the Department of Defense to play in the "war on drugs" through use of the agency's existing resources and expertise in the provision of socialization programs.

The program design will be consistent with established military standards and practice for basic training. A by-product of this effort will be operational standards needed by correctional jurisdictions that have instituted or are planning "boot camp" type facilities. Currently, there are no guidelines for the operation of this type of program.

Any programming strategy for intervention in the District of Columbia's problem with drugs and crime must consider the profile of the District's inner-city youth population; discipline and incarceration alone do not provide the skills necessary for them to adopt an alternative lifestyle.

The strategy must recognize that for any programming to be successful it must ensure that the district's inner city, to which participants will return, has the resources to support returning program graduates and reflects an environment that is conducive to perpetuating a positive alternative lifestyle.

The program should be congruent in content with intensive substance abuse programming currently being provided in the pilot program for the proposed Correctional Treatment Facility by the D.C. Department of Corrections, i.e., voluntary, skill development intensive.

Program design should build on the positive aspects of basic military training; that reinforces and encourages internalization of discipline, responsibility and teamwork; and applies those traits to the improvement of literacy and vocational skills in ways that lead to legitimate career alternatives when participants return to their community.

An underlying philosophy: a theme and a message should characterize the program. This must include society's intolerance for crime and drug abuse. But it must also extend opportunities for meaningful employment, personal growth, and prosperity to residents of the community and program participants, including those who don't presently perceive American society as truly available to them, and those who have violated its laws; the proposed program provides this opportunity.

Purpose: To reduce recidivism by interrupting the drug-related criminal activities and behavior of participating District of Columbia youth through instilling discipline, self-respect, literacy, social, and vocational aptitude training that will provide them with the skills required to engage in a meaningful alternative lifestyle when the program is completed. This would include a commitment to accepted social values and their community. The program will provide the opportunity for the successful participant to either volunteer for the armed forces or to return to the community where a support system will facilitate his entry into community-based vocational training or apprenticeship programs, education, and meaningful work opportunities. It also includes the commitment of Federal and local resources to the inner-city community to which program graduates will return, to develop the support necessary to assist them in maintaining an alternative lifestyle as a contributing member of their community.

Target population: At-Risk Youth from the District of Columbia. Three categories of youth are identified who could benefit from the proposed program. They are divided into three tracks for the purpose of programming.

TRACK 1

Youth sentenced under the DC Youth Rehabilitation Act (YRA) between the ages of 18 and 22 years and serving indeterminant sentences. The following provisions of the YRA make these individuals promising candidates for the proposed program:

An extensive diagnostic evaluation has been conducted from which the judge determines YRA sentencing based on each individual's potential for rehabilitation.

Under the YRA, successful rehabilitation can result in the individual's record being expunged.

If the individual does not demonstrate progress in rehabilitative programming, he/she can be returned to the court for a "no benefit" determination, which results in resentencing as an adult.

Eligibility criteria: Sentenced, drug user or convicted of a drug-related charge, no history of mental illness, non-violent, not an escape risk, has received a formal orientation to the program, motivated, volunteers. The selection process is described under Phase I of the program (below).

Discharge Criteria: Positive: Program staff recommendation to the DC Board of Parole. Negative: Infraction of cardinal rules (drug use, sex, violence), finding of mental disorder, finding of "no benefit" as determined by the treatment team, participant request.

Discharge Process: The process for positive discharge from the residential phases of the program would require a report to the DC Board of Parole recommending parole release to the community aftercare phase of the program, with parole supervision. Discharge for other reasons would require formal program staff review and consideration prior to a determintion to return the individual to the custody of the DC Department of Corrections. For participants who are not progressing satisfactorily, discharge would entail a staged review through which expectations for progress would be defined to the individual to provide him/her with a minimum of at least three opportunities to meet expectations prior to discharge.

TRACK 2

Juvenile offenders pending commitment to custody of the DC Youth Services Administration (YSA). Between the ages of 16 and 18 years. The program would represent a commitment alternative to sentencing in a YSA facility.

Eligibility criteria: Unsentenced, drug user or convicted of a drug-related charge, no history of mental illness, non-violent, not an escape risk, has received a formal orientation to the program, motivated and, is offered the opportunity to volunteer for, and complete, the program in lieu of incarceration. The selection process is described in Phase I of the program below.

Discharge criteria: Positive: Program staff determination. Negative: Infraction of cardinal rules (drug use, sex, violence), finding of mental disorder, finding of "no benefit", as determined by the treatment team, and participant request.

Discharge process: The process for positive discharge from the residential phases of the program would require a report from program staff to the DC Superior Court Family Services, Juvenile Probation Division, of the individual's progress and pending discharge to the community aftercare phase of the program, with probation supervision. Discharges for other than successful completion may require that the individual be returned to family court for further disposition. Similar to Track 1 participants, formal staged review by program staff would be required for participants who are not progressing satisfactorily.

TRACK 3

Underprivileged youthful volunteers. Between the ages of 15 and 18 years. These youth are not under the formal authority of the juvenile justice system, but are considerably at-risk. They will have had a history of poor academic performance, truancy, and parental ability to control the individual is minimal.

Eligibility criteria: Has received a formal orientation to the program, is suspected to be a drug user or involved in drug sales, is a potential drop-out, and volunteers. The selection process is described under Phase I of the program (below).

Discharge criteria: Positive: Program staff determination. Negative: Infraction of cardinal rules (drug use, sex, violence), finding of mental disorder, finding of "no benefit" as determined by the treatment team, participant request.

Discharge Process: The discharge process for these participants would be similar to that for juveniles, except that they would be returned to the care of their family or other responsible sponsor in the community.

The Civil-Military Youth Leadership Program: The program is divided into two subprograms: the Correctional Youth Leaders Program and the Junior Leaders Program. Each consists of several phases, beginning with screening and selection of volunteer candidates. Selected participants progress through a rigorous regimen that is varied in length according to which program the individual is assigned, ending with the individual returning to the DC community where they will participate in a mandatory aftercare program. The aftercare phase of the program requires that graduates participate in mandatory community based aftercare activities in addition to participating in vocational training, work, school, or community service projects.

The Correctional Youth Leaders Program (CYLP). This program is designed to be conducted by civil jurisdictions. Successful Track 1 participants proceed through the program and are paroled to the community and the aftercare phase of the program upon completion of the residential phases.

The Junior Leaders Program (JLP). This program is designed to be conducted initially at military facilities with some military assistance. It is designed for juveniles who are not convicted felons and for juveniles who come from high risk areas. In the early phases of the program participants would progress through military self-discipline/self-confidence training prior to entry into the civilian corps phases that are the foundation of the Civil-Military Youth Leadership Program.

CORRECTIONAL YOUTH LEADERS PROGRAM

Phase I—Screening

Location: DC Department of Corrections Youth Center.

Objectives: Screening, Referral, and Selection.

Duration: Approximately 4 weeks.

YRA Candidates—Screened and referred to the program by DC Department of Corrections Youth Center staff. Interviewed and selected by program staff.

Phase II—Discipline Training

Location: DC Department of Corrections Youth Leaders Facility Objectives: Self-Discipline and Team Building.

Duration: Approximately 9 weeks.

Program Elements—Track 1:

Intensive medical, psychiatric, psychological, substance abuse, academic and vocational assessment.

Military discipline/physical training.

Academic education/intensive literacy training/English as a second language.

Substance abuse education and treatment.

Physical training and athletics.

Family counseling.

Religious services.

Phase III—Confidence Training

Location: Remote Non-Military Facility With Appropriate Training Facilities and Challenging Terrain.

Objectives: Self-Confidence, Team Building, Skill Training.

Duration: Approximately 7 weeks.

Program Elements—Track 1:

Continued acdemic education, intensive literacy training and English as a second language.

Continued substance abuse education and treatment.

Outward bound training: Leadership, confidence building, endurance, and team building.

Physical training and athletics.

Self-maintenance and life skills development.

Religious services.

Phase IV—Conservation Corps

Location: Controlled Rural or Urban Work Site.

Objectives: Civil Conservation Tasks.

Duration: Approximately 20 weeks.

Program Elements—Track 1:

Continued remedial education, intensive literacy training, English as a second language.

Continued substance abuse education and treatment.

Physical training and athletics.

Conservation and environmental education/training: Watershed protection and enhancement projects, rural and urban renewal projects.

Religious services.

Transition preparation planning (emphasis is placed on this aspect of programming throughout this phase).

Graduation.

Phase V—Community Aftercare

Location: District of Columbia Community.

Objective: Community Reintegration/Independent Living.

Duration: Approximately 1 year.

Program Elements—Track 1:

Work.

Apprenticeship program/trade school/community college programs (grants for tuition where required).

GED preparation/examination.

Continued substance abuse treatment (residential for those requiring it, aftercare follow-up, AA and NA).

Structured aftercare (this phase of the program would be developed by interested community groups in each Ward that are pro-active in community enhancement and social programs): Structured leisure time, family support services, team meetings, church group affiliation, and community service.

Parole supervision.

JUNIOR PROGRAM LEADERS

Phase I—Screening

Location: District of Columbia.

Objectives: Screening, Referral, and Selection.

Duration: Approximately 4 weeks.

Juvenile Candidates—Screened by DC juvenile probation office/Youth Services Administration, who recommend program to the District Family Court judge. Judge then refers the juvenile to the program. Interviewed and selected by program staff.

Underprivileged volunteers—Referred by a local community agency and/or school in consultation with the family, screened and referred to the program through an armed forces recruiting office. Interviewed and selected by program staff.

Phase II—Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps Recruit Training

Location: Military Basic Training Facility.

Objective: Self-Discipline and Team Building.

Duration: Approximately 9 weeks.

Program Elements—Tracks 2 and 3:

Intensive medical, psychiatric, psychological, substance abuse, academic and vocational assessment.

Military discipline/physical training.

Academic education/intensive literacy training/English as a second language.

Substance abuse education and treatment.

Physical training and athletics.

Family counseling.

Religious services.

Phase III—Adventure Training

Location: Remote Federal Facility With Appropriate Training Facilities and Challenging Terrain.

Objectives: Self-Confidence, Team building, Skill Training.

Duration: Approximately 7 weeks.

Program Elements—Tracks 2 and 3:

Continued academic education, intensive literacy training and English as a second language.

Continued substance abuse education and training.

Adventure training: Leadership, confidence building, endurance, and team building.

Physical training and athletics.

Self-maintenance and life skills development.

Religious services.

Community transition planning (Tracks 3 only).

Phase IV—Conservation Corps

Location: Controlled Rural or Urban Work Site (Could be the same location as Phase III).

Objectives: Civil/Military Conservation Tasks.

Duration: To be Determined.

Program Elements—Track 2, and 3 on a voluntary basis:

Continued remedial education, intensive literacy training, English as a second behavior and skills.

Continued substance abuse education and treatment.

Physical training and athletics.

Conservation and environmental education/training: Watershed protection and enhancement projects, rural and urban renewal projects.

Religious services.

Transition preparation planning (emphasis is placed on this aspect of programming throughout this phase).

Graduation.

Phase V—Community Aftercare

Location: District of Columbia Community.

Objective: Community Reintegration/Independent Living.

Duration: Approximately 1 year.

Program Elements—Tracks 2 and 3:

A. Military service for those qualified and wishing to volunteer.

B. Community Reintegration:

High School/Community College/GED program.

Apprenticeship program/trade school.

Continued substance abuse treatment (residential for those requiring it, aftercare follow-up, AA and NA).

Community service projects.

Aftercare participation activities: Structured leisure time, family counseling, team meetings, and church/social group affiliation.

Probation Supervision (Track 2 only).

Reintegration to the community and the need for revitalization of the inner city: Regardless of how well a program can change the attitudes and behavior of participants while they are separated from the negative influences of their community, it is well documented that the environment to which programmed youth will return has significant effect on their ability to iternalize newly acquired behavior and skills. Program graduates will return to their communities and will be expected to become successful and productive citizens. However, unless there are legitimate opportunities available to them for employment, personal growth, and prosperity, the probability of failure is greater than the probability for success. Therefore, consistent with the national goals articulated for uban development, the Youth Leadership Program proposes focus of these efforts in the DC inner city. This would require that priority be placed upon creating jobs, encouraging entrepreneurship, expanding home ownership and affordable housing opportunities, and empowering the inner city poor through resident management and homesteading.

In addition, to encourage graduates of the program to remain in their communities as they become successful citizens, incentives could be developed for which interested graduates and inner-city residents would be eligible. Examples of these incentives are:

Develop enterprise zone benefits.

Support rural conservation, community development, and urban revitalization projects.

Provide continued education and career development opportunities.

Develop business opportunities: Special youth/business tax benefits, utility hookups, zoning and building code considerations.

Program size: The optimal size of each pilot program is envisioned to be 200 slots. Once these participants move on to Phase III (Track 1) or Phase IV (Tracks 2 and 3), another program cycle would begin.

Location: Phase II of the Correctional Youth Leaders Program would be conducted at a new DC Department of Corrections facility at Lorton, Phases III and IV would be conducted at national or state park facilities that have the appropriate terrain and resource to support the program. Phase II of the Junior Leaders Program would be conducted at a military recruit facility, Phase III at a military facility that has appropriate terrain and resources to support the program, and Phase IV would be conducted at a national or state park facility.

Administrative responsibility: The National Institute of Justice, Department of Justice, would provide overall program planning, design, and evaluation; assume administrative responsibility for fiscal resources, and coordinate the efforts of other agencies providing resources in the form of facilities or direct services.

The designation of potential agency involvement and administrative responsibility to implement the various phases of the program and provide the resources required in the community is envisioned as follows:

Overall Responsibility: Department of Justice.

Lead Agency: National Institute of Justice.

Planning, Design, and Administration: Dept. of Justice/NIJ.

Phase I—Sponsoring Agency: District of Columbia; Support Agency: Dept. of Defense.

Phase II—Sponsoring Agency: Dept. of Defense/DC Department of Corrections; Support Agencies: Education, HHS, Justice, DC/YSA, NIDA.

Phase III—Sponsoring Agency: Dept. of Defense/Interior; Support Agencies: Education, HHS, Justice, Labor, EPA, DC/DOC, DC/YSA, NIDA.

Phase IV—Sponsoring Agency: Interior; Support Agencies: Defense, Education, HHS, Justice, Interior, Labor, EPA, USDA, DC/DOC, DC/YSA, NIDA, HUD.

Phase V—Sponsoring Agency: Labor/Labor Unions; Support Agencies: HUD, Defense, Education, HHS, Justice, Interior, EPA, USDA, DC/Board of Parole, DC/Probation Department.

Support for D.C. Inner City Community.

Monitoring and Evaluation: Department of Justice/NIJ.

Military support required: as these programs are based on a military style of operation, the involvement of the military is considered critical to the success of the program.

Correctional Youth Leaders Program

Phase I—None.

Phase II and III—Assistance in the development of training standards, programs, lesson plans, instruction, methods of evaluation, and training support.

Assistance in the design of training facilities.

Assistance in the training of trainers.

Phase IV—None.

Phase V—None.

Junior Leaders Program

Phase I—The development of a system of referral through a DC based military recruitment office.

Phase II—The use of military recruit training facilities and the design implementation of JROTC recruit training process.

Phase III—The use of military facilities.

Assistance with implementation of the program; the use of retired military personnel

Phase IV—The intent is to seek assistance from the military to use retired military personnel to act as troop leaders and program supervisor for the National Park Service.

Phase V—None.

Implementation: As the primary research arm of the Justice Department, the National Institute of Justice has a history of basic and applied research, program development, training, field tests, and demonstration activities. The institute is currently evaluating "shock incarceration" programs in a number of jurisdictions and has recently published "Shock Incarceration: An Overview of Existing Programs". In considering a locus for development of the Civil-Military Youth Leadership Training Initiative, the Institute would play a lead role, coordinating the efforts of all involved Federal agencies, the DC Department of Corrections, labor unions, private entrepreneurs, and DC community leaders.

Intended results: A comprehensive cabinet-level domestic policy initiative that concentrates the resources of a broad range of Federal agencies into a rigorous civil-military youth leadership program designed to assist inner-city youth in resisting substance abuse and crime. The program would be thoroughly evaluated to determine effectiveness and potential for replication in other jurisdictions nationwide.

AMENDMENT No. 968

Section 5111 of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 is amended by striking "application." and inserting in lieu thereof:

"Application; Provided, That not less than $3,000,000 shall be used for—

(1) providing or arranging for the provision of intervention services for female inmates, including—

(A) substance abuse and addiction treatment services, with priority given to discrete treatment units which provide detoxification if necessary, comprehensive substance abuse education, the development of individualized treatment plans, individual and group counseling, and ongoing access to self-help groups;

(B) support services (such as counseling to address family violence and sexual assault);

(C) life skills training (such as parenting and child development classes);

(D) education services (such as literacy and vocational training); and

(E) after care services; and

(2) providing or arranging for the provision of ancillary social services and such other assistance that will ensure that women can maintain contact with their children and their children will receive age appropriate substance abuse education and counseling.".

Mr. KOHL. I have worked with the leadership and they have accepted an amendment on behalf of myself and my esteemed colleague from Arizona, Senator DECONCINI, and Senators D'AMATO, KERRY, and GRAHAM.

Mr. President, my amendment would establish pilot programs at State and local prisons to provide comprehensive substance abuse treatment services for women. The need for such treatment is critical in my State of Wisconsin, in Arizona, and in other States across the Nation. And with addiction levels for cocaine soaring as high for women as for men in this country, this need will only continue to become more pressing.

Experts working with incarcerated women at Taycheedah—the maximum security prison for women in my State—tell me that patterns of substance abuse among women differ dramatically from those of men. These women are more likely to have been the victims of family violence and sexual assault. Their drug and alcohol abuse has revolved around male partners. And their need for life skills training, including parenting and child development classes, is critical. Right now, 85 percent of the women at Taycheedah need drug and alcohol treatment services.

Mr. President, my amendment would enable the Bureau of Justice Assistance to set up model projects to meet the special substance abuse treatment needs of female inmates. Such projects would include substance abuse treatment services, support services, training and education, and community based after care. These programs would also provide the services necessary to help women in prison maintain contact with their children and to provide their children with substance abuse education and counseling.

Mr. President, by providing women in prison with the substance abuse treatment designed to meet their special needs, we can promote rehabilitation, but down recidivism, and help break the tragic cycle of addiction for these women and their children. I thank my colleague from Arizona for all his assistance in drafting the amendment. And, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator BIDEN, for accepting it.

AMENDMENT NO. 969

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . FEDERAL PRISONER DRUG TESTING ACT OF 1989.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the "Federal Prisoner Drug Testing Act of 1989".

(b) CONDITIONS ON PAROLE.—Section 4209(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following: "In every case, the Commission shall also impose as a condition of parole that the parolee pass a drug test prior to paroled release and refrain from any unlawful use of a controlled substance and submit to at least 2 periodic drug tests (as determined by the Commission) for use of a controlled substance during the period of paroled release".

(c) This provision takes effect six months after enactment.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to provide for mandatory drug testing for Federal prisoners as a condition of parole.

Mr. President, in our Nation's Federal prison population, over 50 percent of those incarcerated are serving sentences for drug-related offenses. This comprises the fastest growing segment of Federal prisoners. Of those incarcerated, many were using illegal drugs to or during the commission of the crime for which they were imprisoned.

Illegal drug use and drug-related activity does not necessarily cease as a result of incarceration. Surprisingly, inmates have access to drugs and other contraband smuggled in by staff and visitors. Many prisoners continue well-organized criminal endeavors while in custody.

According to the Federal Bureau of Prisons [BOP], as of August 10, 1989, over 26,000 Federal prisoners are eligible to be released on parole. Currently, there is no requirement for drug testing to determine whether a soon-to-be released inmate is using one or more illegal substances. Nor is being drug-free a condition of release. Prisoners using drugs are therefore released and returned to our communities. This is obviously unacceptable.

One could predict that a prisoner using drugs would, upon release, continue illegal use, and the criminal activity necessary to support it. A cycle of crime, arrest, prosecution, and incarceration is perpetuated. This certainly contributes to a recidivism rate that, according to the Bureau of Prisons, is as high as 43 percent for Federal prisoners.

To break this most destructive cycle, we in Congress must act to ensure that inmates using illegal drugs are not eligible for release into our communities.

In furtherance of this goal, my amendment provides that any Federal inmate eligible for parole must pass one urinalysis test before and two tests after release from a Federal correctional facility.

If an individual is found in violation of these provisions, he or she will continue serving the imposed prison sentence until a random urinalysis test is passed. Those individuals on parole will be subject to revocation of such a sentence and return to prison if testing positive for use of an illegal substance. Such a test is relatively inexpensive, only about $7 per test. The savings to our communities and our criminal justice system are potentially great.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment, which can be a potent weapon in the war against illegal drugs.

AMENDMENT NO. 970

(Purpose: To exempt certain activities from provisions of the antitrust laws)

At the appropriate place insert the following:

SEC. . (a)(1) Actions specified in subsectin (b) shall be exempt from the antitrust laws of the United States.

(2) For purposes of this section—

(A) "antitrust laws" has the meaning given such term in the first section of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 12), and shall also include section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45);

(B) "person in the television industry" means a television network, any entity which produces programming for television distribution, including theatrical motion pictures, the National Cable Television Association, the Association of Independent Television Stations, Inc., the National Association of Broadcasters, the Motion Picture Association of America, and each of the networks' affiliate organizations, and shall include any individual acting on behalf of such person; and

(C) "telecast" means any program broadcast by a television broadcast station or transmitted by a cable television system.

(b) The antitrust laws shall not apply to any joint discussion, consideration, review, action, or agreement by or among persons in the television industry for the purpose of, and limited to, developing and disseminating voluntary guidelines designed to alleviate any negative impact of illegal drug use in telecast material.

(c)(1) The exemption provided in subsection (b) shall apply only to activities conducted within 36 months after the date of enactment of this section.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, Senator HEFLIN and I have an amendment at the desk. It would grant the television industry a limited antitrust exemption that would help it fight drug abuse. It passed the Senate overwhelmingly in May, as part of the Television Violence Act, and it has been cleared on both sides of the aisle.

First, I want to say what a pleasure it was to work with Senator HEFLIN in drafting this amendment, which we believe will help the television industry raise its powerful voice against illegal drugs. I also want to commend the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, Senator SIMON, for inspiring this approach.

For better or for worse, television is a major influence in our lives and our children's lives. More than 96 percent of American homes have at least one television set. The average youngster spends more time watching TV than in the classroom. Given the vast exposure of children to television, it's appropriate that we examine the consequences.

I applaud the television industry for its efforts in fighting the drug scourge. Many broadcasters have taken voluntary efforts to educate the public about the dangers of drugs. But I believe that television's occasional glamorization of drug use may send our children the wrong message—that you'll be more popular, or wittier, or more beautiful if you use illegal substances. Nothing, of course, could be further from the truth.

Broadcasters are justifiably reluctant to take joint action because of possible antitrust exposure. Moreover, any attempt by the Federal Government to restrict the content of television programing would raise serious first amendment concerns.

But while there is no easy answer, I believe that this provision would help broadcasters move toward their own solution. It would provide a narrowly drawn antitrust exemption to the television industry, which would permit the industry to discuss and develop guidelines on illegal drug use. The measure also includes a 3-year sunset provision.

Our amendment would simply place the responsibility for regulation where it ought to rest—on the shoulders of public-spirited broadcasters, cable operators, and producers. It would untie the broadcasting industry's hands so that it could help eliminate the harmful effects of illegal drug use on television.

AMENDMENT No. 971

(Purpose: To require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct a study of the child and youth social service programs administered or operated within the Office of Human Development Services and the family assistance programs administered or operated within the Family Support Administration)

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . STUDY OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE, CHILD WELFARE AND YOUTH SOCIAL SERVICE PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the National Academy of Sciences, shall conduct a study consisting of a comprehensive review and examination of the child welfare and youth social service programs administered or prepared within the Office of Human Development Services and the family assistance programs administered or operated within the Family Support Administration.

(b) CONTENTS OF STUDY.—The study shall include—

(1) an assessment of the current content and organization of programs and data collection activities, including the relationship of local, State, and Federal government efforts, to protect children and youth and support families;

(2) an identification of the gaps and deficiencies in the activities described in paragraph (1);

(3) a review of the available options for improving the structure and delivery of services and collection of data concerning the activities described in paragraph (1); and

(4) an examination—

(A) of the current array and alignment of programs that addresses the special needs of children with substance abusing parents, children with disabilities and chronic diseases, including HIV infection, and children without adequate housing; and

(B) of how related programs and activities, such as health care and juvenile justice programs, interact with social service and family assistance programs.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 6 months after the completion of the study required under subsection (a), the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall prepare and submit, to the appropriate Committees of Congress, a report concerning the results of such study, including a response by the Secretary to the report and and the recommendations of the Secretary.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $1,000,000.

Mr. KOHL. I thank the leadership for accepting this amendment on behalf of myself and Senators SIMON and KENNEDY.

Mr. President, this amendment calls upon the National Academy of Sciences to assist the Department of Health and Human Services by conducting a comprehensive review of the Child Welfare and Youth and Family Assistance Programs they administer.

Over the past decade, the pressing problems facing children and families have overwhelmed the child welfare system. Parental substance abuse, the spread of HIV infection to mothers and children, poverty, and homelessness have all reached epidemic proportions. Instead of being safe havens, far too many American families have become dysfunctional to the point of being dangerous for the children growing up in them.

In an effort to protect these children and assist families, the child welfare system has been strained to the breaking point. Reported cases of child abuse and neglect soared 74 percent between 1980 and 1986. Both foster and adoptive parents are in increasingly short supply. As a result, workers' caseloads in too many cities prevent them from being able to intervene effectively—leaving countless children at risk.

Mr. President, parental substance abuse is playing an increasingly dominant and dramatic role in jeopardizing the health and safety of children and families. Here in our Nation's Capital, 90 percent of all caretakers reported for child abuse last year had abused drugs or alcohol. As the tragic case of Lisa Steinberg should remind us, 73 percent of all child abuse fatalities in New York City in 1987 were related to parental drug abuse. In Milwaukee County in my own State, reports of child abuse and neglect skyrocketed from under 3,000 in 1983 to 8,000 this year due to cocaine addiction alone. And the terrible link between child maltreatment and drug use is seen in small towns and rural areas too. A review of the child welfare system should therefore be part of the omnibus drug legislation we are enacting today.

This review will include the current array of programs addressing the special needs of children with substance abusing parents, children with chronic diseases, including HIV infection, and children without adequate housing. In undertaking this study, the National Academy of Sciences will also examine how health care, juvenile justice, and other related programs interact with child welfare and family assistance programs.

In closing, Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the Judiciary Committee for accepting this review of the child welfare and family assistance system. Such a review will give us new options for improving local, State, and Federal efforts to protect children and youth and support families.

AMENDMENT No. 972

(Purpose: To direct the United States Sentencing Commission to establish penalties that constitute a meaningful deterrence to deported aggravated felons reentering the United States)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . DEPORTED AGGRAVATED FELONS REENTERING THE UNITED STATES.

Pursuant to its authority under section 994(p) of title 28, United States Code, and section 21 of the Sentencing Act of 1987, the United States Sentencing Commission shall promulgate guidelines, or shall amend existing guidelines, to provide that a defendant convicted of violating section 276(b)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1326) shall be assigned an offense level under chapter 2 of the sentencing guidelines that constitutes a meaningful deterrence to the commission of such offense.

AMENDMENT No. 973

(Purpose: To make technical amendments to the Immigration and Nationality Act regarding the treatment of aliens who have committed aggravated felonies)

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. . AMENDMENTS TO THE IMMIGRATION AND NATIONALITY ACT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise specifically provided in this section, whenever in this section an amendment is expressed as an amendment to a provision, the reference shall be deemed to be made to the Immigration and Nationality Act.

(b) DEFINITION OF GOOD MORAL CHARACTER.—Section 101(f) of the Immigration and Nationality Act is amended—

(1) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (8) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) one who has been convicted of an aggravated felony, as defined in subsection (a)(43).".

(c) BAR ON REENTRY OF ALIENS CONVICTED OF AGGRAVATED FELONIES.—Section 212(a)(17) (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(17)) is amended by striking out "or within ten years" and inserting in lieu thereof "or at anytime thereafter".

(d) CUSTODY PENDING DETERMINATION OF EXCLUDABILITY.—Section 236 (8 U.S.C. 1226) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Pending a determination of excludability, the Attorney General shall take into custody any alien convicted of an aggravated felony upon completion of the alien's sentence for such conviction. Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the Attorney General shall not release such felon from custody.".

(e) SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION PROHIBITED.—Section 244 (8 U.S.C. 1254) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) No alien convicted of an aggravated felony (as defined in section 101(a)(43)) shall be eligible for suspension of deportation under this section.".

(f) EFFECT OF FILING PETITION FOR REVIEW.—Section 106(a)(3) (8 U.S.C. 1105a(a)(3)) is amended—

(1) by striking the semicolon at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or" and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following: "unless the alien is convicted of an aggravated felony, in which case the Service shall not stay the deportation of the alien pending determination of the petition by the court, unless the court otherwise directs;".

(g) CUSTODY PENDING DETERMINATION OF DEPORTABILITY.—

Sec. 242(a)(2) (8 U.S.C. 1252) is amended, as follows:

* * * * *

AMENDMENT NO. 974

On page 1, strike lines 5 through 8.

AMENDMENT NO. 975

(Purpose: To amend Amendment No. 938 to S. 1711)

Amendment No. 938, offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] and adopted on October 3, 1989, as an amendment to S. 1711, is hereby amended as follows:

Amend section 1212 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 as follows:

(1) In subsection (a), strike "of law," and insert in lieu thereof "of law, except as provided in subsection (c),"

(2) In subsection (a), strike "and has implemented" and insert in lieu thereof "a plan with a timetable to implement"

(3) Strike sections 1212(a) (2), (3), and (4) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) a policy that restricts distribution on campus of any promotional material that encourages consumption of alcoholic beverages by persons under the state's legal drinking age;

"(3) In the case of the financing, sponsoring, or supporting of any athletic, musical, cultural or social program, event, or competition of such institution by any alcoholic beverage company or industry, the acknowledgement of such financing, sponsorship, or support in promotional material shall be limited to statements of corporate identification;

"(4) a policy that encourages such institution's newspapers and other publications to reject advertisements promoting irresponsible or illegal consumption of alcoholic beverages;"

(4) Add a new subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(c) Upon application by an institution of higher education, the Secretary shall grant a waiver of the sanctions authorized by this section to any institution of higher education which demonstrates that it is in the process of developing and implementing a plan required by subsection (a), for up to one year from the date of enactment of this section."

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, earlier this week Senator BINGAMAN offered an amendment to the drug bill which was designed to deal with the problem of alcohol abuse on college campuses. I was not aware that the amendment would be offered and did not have an opportunity to review it until after it was adopted. When I did, I found that I agreed with the goal of the amendment; I even agreed with many of the specific steps it advocates. But I was also deeply concerned about several provisions which, in my mind, raise profound constitutional issues as well as serious practical concerns.

Mr. President, the amendment which the managers of the bill accepted would prohibit the distribution "of any promotional material for alcoholic beverages" on college campuses; it would prohibit "the financing, sponsoring, or supporting of any athletic, musical, cultural or social program, event or competition * * * by any alcoholic beverage company or industry" on a campus; and it would restrict "alcoholic beverage advertisements—in college newspapers and other publications—to price and product identification."

I know that alcohol abuse on campus is a major problem. I had the chancellor of the University of Wisconsin at Madison in my office a few weeks ago and she told me that alcohol, rather than drugs, is the major problem on her campus. I think we need to deal with this problem. But I was concerned about the language of the amendment. It is very broad and does not focus on what I see as the real problem: illegal and irresponsible use of alcohol. After all, unless we want to go back to prohibition, we don't want to prevent drinking; we want to prevent excessive or irresponsible drinking. Despite the good intentions of the amendment, I was afraid that it was too broadly drafted and might even have the effect of preventing us from focusing on the issue of excessive and irresponsible drinking. For example, the language of the amendment might prevent a beer company from placing an ad encouraging responsible drinking in a college newspaper—and beer companies run a great many ads like that as a public service.

In any event, Mr. President, I discussed my concerns with the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, Mr. BINGAMAN. He was, as he always is, most cooperative. Working together, I believe we have crafted language which preserves his goals while addressing some of my concerns. While I still have some reservations about this language, I want to commend Senator BINGAMAN for his leadership on this issue; I want to thank him for his willingness to work with me; and I want to congratulate him on his modified amendment which may make a contribution to addressing a problem that we all recognize exists.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

If not, the question is on agreeing to amendments numbered 964 through 975, en bloc.

The amendments (Nos. 964 through 975) were agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to en bloc.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, for the interest of the Senate, we are now down to a maximum of six Senators who have amendments. Let me list them and suggest very rapidly that maybe good judgment will overcome our colleagues and they will not insist on them.

Senator KERRY of Massachusetts is negotiating as we speak for acceptance of up to three of his amendments. I would respectfully suggest that he do it quickly or we move to third reading.

Senator D'AMATO is about to propose an amendment, which I support, but which I strongly urge him not to offer because it is subject to a constitutional point of order of raising taxes on a Senate bill.

Senator HELMS has listed a spot for five amendments, none of which has been submitted to us. I assume he did not mean it.

Senator WILSON has two amendments, one on Mexican air interdiction and one on drug education for pregnant women, which the Senator from Delaware is prepared to accept, and I hope the Senator from Utah is prepared to accept.

Senator GRAMM, of Texas, we hear, may have one more amendment on minimum mandatory sentences beyond the one he introduced. I truly hope he will withhold it. If he would, we can, in fact, if all will be cooperative, go to third reading in the next 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH].

AMENDMENT NO. 976

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, while we are waiting for people to consider the recommendation of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the majority floor manager, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator THURMOND that has been cleared on both sides and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] for Mr. THURMOND, proposes an amendment numbered 976.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments submitted.")

Mr. THURMOND. This amendment makes several needed minor and technical criminal law amendments. These amendments have been requested by the Department of Justice and will greatly facilitate the Department's efforts in the war of drugs. Most of these amendments are to various parts of the "Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988" which Congress passed last year. Whenever such an effort as massive as last year's drug bill is undertaken, technical amendments are not uncommon. This amendment, although minor and technical in nature, will enhance prosecution efforts in the war on drugs.

For these reasons, I urge my colleagues to support this important amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an analysis of certain minor and technical amendments included as the last part of amendment No. 976 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR BIDEN'S SUPPLEMENTARY ANALYSIS OF AMENDMENT NO. 976

SUBTITLE F—MISCELLANEOUS

Minor and Technical Amendments Section 65 contains technical corrections necessary to correct errors in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988.

Section 66 resolves a minor inconsistency in the money laundering statute. That statute makes it an offense to launder the proceeds of any form of "specified unlawful activity". It is not required that the launderer know what form of unlawful activity was involved as long as he knows that it was some offense that would be a felony under "state or federal law."

The inconsistency is that while the "specified unlawful activity" could be an offense under foreign law, section 1956(c)(7)(B), the knowledge requirements relates only to "state or federal law". Thus a person who launders the proceeds of a foreign offense might not be prosecutable under the statute as currently drafted because the underlying offense would not be covered by the knowledge requirement. The amendment resolves this possible problem by expanding the knowledge requirement to include foreign offenses.

Section 67 contains two amendments to the drug trafficking penalties in 21 U.S.C. 841. The first amendment merely corrects a typographical error in section 6470(g) of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988.

The second amendment responds to an inequity discussed in several recent cases involving LSD. See, e.g., United States v. Bishop, 704 F. Supp. 910 (N.D. Iowa 1989). In these cases the courts determined that the weight of carriers such as sugar cubes, gelatin cubes and blotter paper used to transport and consume substances such as LSD should be counted in determining whether the weight of the "mixture or substance" was sufficient to trigger a mandatory minimum penalty.

The inequity in these decisions is apparent in the following example. A single dose of LSD weighs approximately .05 mg. The sugar cube on which the dose may be dropped for purposes of ingestion and transportation, however, weighs approximately 2 grams. Under 21 U.S.C. 841(b) a person distributing more than one gram of a "mixture or substance" containing LSD is punishable by a minimum sentence of 5 years, and a maximum sentence of 40 years. A person distributing less than a gram of LSD, however, is subject only to a maximum sentence of 20 years. Thus a person distributing a 1,000 doses of LSD in liquid form is subject to no minimum penalty, while a person handing another person a single dose on a sugar cube is subject to the mandatory five year penalty.

The amendment remedies this inequity by removing the weight of the carrier from the calculation of the weight of the mixture or substance.

Section 68 clarifies Section 841(b)(6) of title 21 which was added by section 6254 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. The intent of the 1988 amendment was to provide for a maximum five year penalty in cases where a drug distributor or manufacturer's activities resulted in the pollution of federal land.

Taken literally, the provision imposes this penalty on anyone who pollutes the federal land in the course of committing a violation of section 841(a), the general purpose drug trafficking statute. The penalty for a simple violation of section 841(a), however, is twenty years for most controlled substances, with higher and lower penalties provided depending on the nature and quantity of the substance, and the defendant's criminal history. Therefore, the new section may actually lower the maximum penalty from twenty years to five years for a trafficking offense that results in the polluting of federal land.

The amendment avoids this unintended result by eliminating a completed violation of section 841(a) as an element of the offense, and requiring instead only that the defendant have been using chemicals with the intent to commit a trafficking violation.

Section 69. Section 7303 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 amended 18 U.S.C. 3563 to make it a mandatory condition of probation, for all sentences imposed on or after January 1, 1989, that the defendant not possess any controlled substance. The same section of the 1988 Act amended 18 U.S.C. 3565 to require the automatic revocation of probation of any person found in violation of this condition, and the resentencing of such person to "one-third of the original sentence".

Because sentence for offenses committed after the effective date of the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984 (November 1, 1987) may not include suspended sentences, the phrase "one-third of the original sentence" has no meaning for such sentences. Therefore section 3565 is amended to provide only for resentencing to some term of imprisonment that might have been imposed at the time of the initial sentencing.

Section 70. The first amendment makes a minor substantive change in sentencing policy. Presently 18 U.S.C. 3553(e) provides that on the motion of the government, the court may sentence a defendant to less than the mandatory minimum sentence prescribed by statute if the defendant has assisted the government in the investigation for prosecution of another person. This provision is considered helpful to the government in that it makes it possible to obtain the cooperation of persons who would otherwise have no incentive to assist the government because of mandatory minimum sentences.

A number of criminal statutes, including some that have mandatory minimum sentences and some that do not, prohibit the court from imposing a probationary sentence. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. 3561(a)(1) (barring probation for any class A or B felony); 21 U.S.C. 845b(e) (barring probation for certain drug crimes involving children and pregnant women). These provisions affect cooperating witnesses in the same way as mandatory minimum sentences. That is, a defendant who might be induced to cooperate with the government in return for a probationary sentence has no incentive to do so if the court is barred from imposing such a sentence. The amendment would allow such a sentence in the same circumstances as a sentence below the mandatory minimum is allowed.

The second amendment is purely technical. Currrently, section 3553(e) makes reference to the sentencing guidelines "issued . . . pursuant to section 944 of title 28". Sentencing guidelines, however, may be issued pursuant to other statutory authority (e.g., section 21 of the Sentencing Act of 1987) and may be enacted directly by Congress. Therefore the reference to section 994 of title 28 is unintentionally limiting and inappropriate. Amendments removing similar references from other statutes was enacted in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. See Section 7103, Public Law 100-690.

Section 71 contains a series of technical amendments renumbering sections 844a, 845, 845a and 845b of title 21. The renumbering has no substantive effect but will avoid the confusion that occurs in citing, for example, sections 845 (a) and (b), 845a(b), and 845b(a).

Section 72. The penalty provisions of sections 845, 845a, and 845b are amended to clarify an ambiguity. All three statutes currently provide for imprisonment or a fine up to twice (or three times) that authorized by section 841, with a minimum term of imprisonment of at least one year. Unfortunately, the use of the phrase "or a fine, or both" implies that a judge could sentence a defendant only to a fine, which contradicts the notion of a mandatory prison sentence. Also the phrase "imprisonment . . . up to twice that authorized" leaves it unclear whether violators of these statutes are subject only to twice the maximum penalties authorized by section 841(b), or also to twice the minimum penalties set forth in that statute. Doubling the maximum penalty is all that was intended.

In each statute, therefore, the phrase "is punishable by a term of imprisonment, or fine, or both up to twice that authorized by section 841(b)" is to be replaced by "is subject to twice the maximum punishment authorized by section 841(b)".

Section 73. Section 1955 of title 18 prohibits illegal gambling. Subsection (d) of that section, enacted in 1970, provides for the forfeiture of property involved in the gambling violation. Since 1970, forfeiture laws applicable to drug and money laundering violations have been enacted that go into much greater detail regarding the types of property that may be forfeited and the procedures that must be followed.

The amendment simply makes forfeiture under the gambling statute the same as forfeiture for drugs and money laundering by cross-referencing the provisions of 21 U.S.C. 853. (A similar cross reference appears in the money laundering forfeiture statute, 18 U.S.C. 982). In so doing, the amendment resolves a split in the circuits as to what types of property are forfeitable.

Section 76. Federal criminal statutes are haphazard and inconsistent in their coverage of territories and possessions. Many laws, such as 18 U.S.C. 513 and 1961, define the term "State" to include territories and possessions, while other laws do not, although frequently the congressional purpose underlying the offense strongly argues for inclusion. In some cases, where the intent of Congress seems clear, the courts have construed "state" to include territories and possessions. See, e.g., United States v. Steele, 685 F.2d 793, 804-5 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 908 (1982) (holding that the Travel Act, 18 U.S.C. 1952, which proscribes certain offenses committed in violation of the laws of the locus State or of the United States covered crimes in violation of the laws of Puerto Rico as if Puerto Rico were a State). In other cases, the courts have adopted a strict reading of "State" and declined to extend its reach to territories and possessions. See, e.g., United States v. Bordallo, 857 F.2d 519, 523-4 (9th Cir. 1988), (holding that 18 U.S.C. 666, which proscribes bribery and theft by an agent of a State or local government, did not cover bribery by a former governor of Guam, because Guam is not a "State").

Recently, the Department of the Interior surveyed title 18, United States Code, with a view toward identifying those criminal statutes which could most benefit from an amendment either clarifying or extending their applicability to territories and possessions. In some instances, the recommendations involve arcane or seldom prosecuted statutes where, on review and reflection, the effort seems not worthwhile. Section 1512 makes amendments in those instances in which it is believed that the law could materially profit from the express extension to territories and possessions, by means of the insertion of an appropriate definition of the term "State".

Section 77 corrects an error that occurred inadvertently when the definition of burglary was deleted from the Armed Career Criminal statute in 1986. The amendment reenacts the original definition which was intended to be broader than common law burglary.

Section 78 clarifies that the mandatory penalty for carrying a firearm in a crime of violence is a penalty enhancement, not a separate crime. 18 U.S.C. 924(c). This codifies the consensus among the circuit courts on this issue. It also clarifies that the mandatory 20 year penalty for second offenders applies to offenses committed after a previous sentence under 924(c) has become final. This resolves an ambiguity discussed in United States v. Rawlings, 821 F.2d 1543 (11th Cir. 1987) and conforms to the penalty for subsequent offenders under the narcotics laws, 21 U.S.C. 841(b)(1)(A). Finally, the amendment designates portions of paragraph (1) as separate paragraphs for clarity. This provision has no substantive effect.

Section 79 reflects the substance of an amendment to the federal Rules of Criminal Procedure suggested by the American Bar Association. Currently, the rules provided that the government and the defense have the same number of peremptory challenges in selecting a jury in capital and in misdemeanor cases, but for an unequal number in felony cases. No reason for this discrepancy appears. The amendment provides for 8 peremptory challenges by each side in felony cases. Further, in the case of multiple defendant cases, the rule would permit the court to give the defense additional challenges, to give the government additional challenges to maintain a rough balance, but it would not require the government to be given a total equal to the total given to the defense.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, since the amendment was agreed upon by both sides, I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment (No. 976) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN].

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I am prepared to move to third reading.

Mr. DOLE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. I will.

Mr. DOLE. Whether or not we go to third reading depends on whether or not we get unanimous consent with reference to the transportation bill. I see the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

AMENDMENT NO. 977

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], for Mr. WILSON, proposes an amendment numbered 977.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, add the following:

SEC. . CRIMINAL FINES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Pursuant to its authority under section 994(p) of title 28, United States Code, and section 21 of the Sentencing Act of 1987, the United States Sentencing Commission shall consider promulgating guidelines, for inclusion in its next submission to the Congress, to provide that an individual convicted of violating provisions of the Controlled Substances Act relating to sales or possession shall, in addition to being sentenced to any authorized term of imprisonment or assessed costs, be sentenced to pay a fine that constitutes a percentage of such individual's income, from all sources, during the twelve months prior to the commission of the offense for which the individual was convicted.

(b) AFFECT OF OTHER LAWS.—Any guidelines issued after the consideration mandated by subsection (a) or any subsequent changes thereto shall not be subjected to the limits otherwise provided by section 3571 of title 18, United States Code.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this amendment has been agreed to by both sides. I recommend its approval.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment (No. 977) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion to lay on the table is agreed to.

The motion to lay on table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to lay on the table had been agreed to.

Are there further amendments?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO].

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I was going to offer an amendment which would permit Americans to make contributions to the special forfeiture fund to aid their war against drugs. I believe that, given the fact there are more than 80 million Americans who receive refunds, if given that opportunity we can raise substantial funds that will be dedicated to that specific area in our battle against drugs: For prevention, for education, for law enforcement.

This measure has received the approval of the drug czar, the IRS, and Treasury. Having said that, Mr. President, I discussed the matter with the chairman of the Finance Committee. This matter would be subject to a point of order. We have agreed that I will lay this aside and not offer it this evening and offer this amendment at the proper time when the revenue measure does come due so it will not be subject to that point of order so we will have an opportunity to vote on that.

I thank the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee for offering me that opportunity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN].

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I am concerned about the war on drugs, as is the Senator from New York. I am most appreciative of his efforts. I will have several more Gramm-Rudman measures that will be brought before the Members of the Senate, and that, from a jurisdictional standpoint, will be the appropriate place.

Mr. D'AMATO. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 978

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration. It has been approved by both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], proposed an amendment numbered 978.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At an appropriate place in the bill, insert the following new section:

SEC. . REPORTS ON DRUG-RELATED RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT.

(a) Not later than December 31, 1989, the Director of National Drug Control Policy shall submit to the Congress a detailed report on the Drug Control Research and Development Committee (referred to hereinafter as "the Committee").

(b) The report required by subsection (a) shall include:

(1) a list of the members of the Committee and a description of the Committee's structure;

(2) a description of the staffing of the Committee, including the number of full-time employees assigned to the staff and the relationship between the Committee's staff and the staff of the Office of National Drug Control Policy;

(3) an estimate of the funding requirements to support the Committee, including the Committee's staff;

(4) a detailed description of the responsibilities and authorities of the Committee, including the authority of the Committee to give direction to the agencies participating on the Committee and the extent to which the Committee will have responsibility for research and development related to countering terrorism; and

(5) an interim plan and schedule for the Committee's activities, including the identification of national requirements for drug-related research and development, the establishment of national priorities for drug-related research and development, and the review and coordination of Federal research and development, data-collection, and evaluation activities.

(c) Not later than December 31, 1989, the President shall submit to the Congress a detailed plan to establish within the Department of Justice or elsewhere in the executive branch an office to provide centralized management of counterterrorism- and drug enforcement-related research, development, test and evaluation activities conducted by the Federal Government and an assessment of the desirability of implementing such a plan.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, this amendment requires the Director of National Drug Control Policy to submit a detailed report to Congress on the structure and organization of the President's proposed Drug Control Research and Development Committee. It also requires the President to examine whether or not we should establish, in addition to the proposed policy coordination committee, an office that would have management and budgetary responsibilities for terrorism and drug enforcement research and development projects.

As many of my colleagues may know, the President's report on the National Drug Strategy indicates that the President intends to establish an interagency committee to perform the following functions:

First, to identify national research and development priorities for the drug czar's office;

Second, to review, monitor and coordinate Federal research, data collection, and evaluation activities;

Third, to eliminate gaps and duplication in data collection;

And finally, to assist different Government agencies in acquiring and using new technologies that may prove helpful in either interdiction or treatment.

Mr. President, I believe that we clearly have a need for an interagency group to perform these functions. At the present time, there is no high-level organizational focus within our Government to identify requirements, establish priorities, provide advocacy, or ensure coordination of Federal research and development projects pertaining to illegal narcotics. This is a problem that I have been concerned with since July, when I had a meeting with Dr. Robert Kupperman of the Center for Strategic and International Studies, and two scientists from the Los Alamos national laboratories.

During the course of our meeting, the scientists from Los Alamos expressed their frustration with the lack of interest and funding available for promising research and development projects related both to drug trafficking and terrorism. They advocated the establishment of an interagency committee to provide Federal coordination on these matters, as well as a separate office to implement policy and perform management and budgetary functions. What they clearly had in mind, in addition to an interagency policy committee, was a civilian counterpart to the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency [DARPA] for the civilian law enforcement community. Because this proposal strikes me as one that may have merit, this amendment requires the administration not only to clarify its intentions with regard to the President's proposed Drug Control Research Committee, but also to evaluate the desirability of establishing a separate organization to handle budgetary and management responsibilities associated with law enforcement R&D projects.

Some examples provided to me by the Los Alamos scientists of promising technologies waiting to be exploited include:

Plant pathogens that could inhibit the growth of poppies or render them useless as illegal narcotics.

Laser radar tracking devices that could detect organic emissions from drug processing sites or vehicles carrying illegal narcotics.

Devices to render dirt airstrips inoperable for lengthy periods of time in order to deny their use to drug dealers.

Devices that could degrade or neutralize explosives.

Devices that could disable vehicles, without causing permanent damage, in order to assist in the apprehension of drug traffickers by law enforcement personnel.

In addition to these technologies, there is the potential for medical treatments that may help addicts recover from their addiction and resume a normal role in society.

This is a very incomplete list, but one that serves to illustrate the point, namely that there are many areas where technology can make a contribution to stemming the flow of drugs into the United States and dealing with the violence and addition that the narcotics trade produces. Clearly, a mechanism to help identify requirements and provide advocacy and coordination will allow us to move forward more efficiently and effectively in the war on drugs.

The President's national drug strategy recognizes this fact, and I commend the administration for having come forward with a proposal to establish an interagency committee to perform these important functions. At the same time, I am not yet convinced that the arrangements for the proposed interagency committee are going to allow it to function effectively. I have not yet been able to determine, for example, whether this organization will have a dedicated staff, which seems to me to be essential if the committee is to perform its assigned role. I have questions regarding the size and expertise of the staff. I also have questions regarding the scope of the committee's jurisdiction. For example, there is considerable overlap between the issues of drug trafficking and terrorism. Should this committee have a jurisdiction that pertains only to drug trafficking, or should it also serve as a focal point for considering research and development proposals that have related but wider applications? Finally, I wonder whether or not, in addition to an effective interagency committee, we should also establish an office with budgetary and management responsibility for research and development projects for the law enforcement community. As many of my colleagues probably know, there are numerous, often uncoordinated efforts presently underway, involving the Coast Guard, Customs, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Drug Enforcement Agency, and other organizations.

In conclusion, Mr. President, the administration has already recognized a problem and is moving forward to implement a solution. It is not yet clear, however, whether that proposed solution is going to get the job done. This amendment will help us to evaluate the President's proposed research and development committee to determine whether further steps are necessary. It will also put the administration on notice that we are concerned about this issue and intend to follow the implementation of his proposal carefully. I would hope that my colleagues will support this amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. President, is the D'Amato amendment pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendment No. 978 is the pending business.

Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 978) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAMM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE].

AMENDMENT NO. 979

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] proposes an amendment numbered 979.

At the end of the bill add:

To amend section 1915(a)(1) of the Public Health Service Act add after programs: (including those for juvenile and adult substance abusers in state and local criminal justice systems).

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, today I am offering an amendment on behalf of myself, Senator BIDEN and Senator D'AMATO to provide funding for States through the alcohol, drug abuse, and mental health block grant for State prisons.

Over the past year, and particularly the past month, the Senate has avidly debated the drug problem. Yet, there is one issue that Congress has failed to address adequately—the availability of rehabilitation programs in prison.

Congress has been working to solve the prison overcrowding problem by increasing funds for prison construction. I agree that we need prison beds, and have been supportive of these efforts. Nonetheless, we must recognize that part of the prison overcrowding problem can be attributed to repeat offenders. Many are released from prison only to return again to patterns of criminal behavior—a phenomenon known as recidivism. One of the primary causes of recidivism is crime directly and indirectly caused by addiction to drugs. Thus, part of the solution lies in breaking this cycle of crime by providing comprehensive drug rehabilitation programs in State and Federal prisons.

Drug-related crimes have overwhelmed our criminal justice system. To illustrate my point, let me share some startling statistics:

In Washington, DC, in 1985, 25 out of 148 homicides were drug related. In 1988, 225 out of 372 homicides were drug related. That is a 43-percent increase.

In a 1980 study, on the average, heroin addicts committed crimes 178 days per year, primarily to support their habit.

At least 60 percent of prisoners nationwide had substance abuse problems before incarceration.

Of 2,000 arrestees tested for drug use in 12 cities, between 53 and 79 percent tested positive for illicit drugs in the 24-48 hours after their arrest.

Recidivism appears to be linked to drug abuse among many offenders. One study found that 62 percent of the approximately 100,000 inmates released in 11 States were arrested again within 3 years—41 percent returned to prison. Of those originally arrested on drug offenses, 50 percent were arrested again within 3 years of their release.

Several States have begun to implement drug rehabilitation programs in their correctional facilities. One program worth noting is the 13-year-old "Stay'n Out" program in New York which has been extremely successful in rehabilitating inmates and reducing the rate of recidivism. Independent studies have shown an 80-percent success rate—that means that 8 out of 10 inmates who complete the program are not rearrested, do not use drugs, and do not commit more crimes after being released.

This amendment will allow States to use the alcohol, drug abuse, and mental health block grant for developing programs in State prisons and juvenile facilities.

It is not our intention to replace existing funds in these programs. These funds are to be used to expand existing programs or to create new programs. I hope the conferees on this bill will concur in our intentions.

The criminal justice system currently does little to rehabilitate inmates—many just get out of jail, commit more crimes, and return to jail. Now, inmate rehabilitation by itself will not solve the prison overcrowding problem. However, programs that reduce the rate of recidivism must be an essential component of a cost-effective solution. Without drug rehabilitation programs in prisons we will continue to release hardened criminals into our communities to sell drugs to our children and rob our homes for money to buy drugs.

I thank Senator BIDEN and Senator D'AMATO for joining me in this effort to prevent transgressors from repeating crimes and overcrowding our prisons. In addition, I appreciate the efforts of Senator HATCH and BIDEN for cosponsoring this proposal.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, we accept this amendment on this side.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, we accept it on the majority side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 979) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I want to thank the managers on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The President pro tempore, Senator BYRD, is recognized.

PROVIDING AUTHORIZATIONS FOR ANTIDRUG ABUSE APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this is a request that has been cleared with the leadership on both sides.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the following bill S. 1735, which I send to the desk. The bill contains the provisions relating to antidrug abuse funding that was passed by the Senate as a portion of H.R. 3015, the fiscal year 1990 transportation appropriations bill on September 27, specifically amendments 137 through 144 printed on pages 89-140 of H.R. 3015 as passed by the Senate; and that the bill be considered as having been read three times, passed, and the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I object until I can ask a question of the chairman.

Will the chairman tell us what that is? Does that change any of the substance in the transportation bill, as amended by the drug amendment?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, Senators will recall that in connection with passage of the modified Byrd amendment on the fiscal year 1990 Transportation appropriation bill, H.R. 3015, an agreement was entered into by the bipartisan Drug Task Force that allowed certain legislative amendments that related to antidrug abuse programs to be included on the Transportation appropriation bill.

Those amendments, which are amendments 137 through 144, are printed on pages 89 through 140 of H.R. 3015 as passed by the Senate.

There was a commitment by the task force to support not only the drug funding levels included in H.R. 3015, but these legislative provisions as well, in conference with the House.

Mr. President, it has now become very clear that the House Appropriations Committee is not in a position to conference these legislative provisions. The Speaker and the chairman of the House authorizing committees with jurisdiction over these legislative amendments have met on several occasions over the last few days and these authorizing committees feel very strongly that they should have a right to consider these provisions in their committees, rather than allowing them to be conferenced in an appropriation bill.

Therefore, the bill at the desk includes all of the legislative provisions related to antidrug abuse that were adopted by the Senate in the Transportation appropriation bill. Upon passage by the Senate, this bill will enable these provisions to be considered by the appropriate House authorizing committees and will enable the Appropriations Committee to proceed with its conference on H.R. 3015.

Mr. DECONCINI. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

The request that the bill be considered to be read three times and passed and the motion to reconsider be laid on the table is agreed to.

The bill (S. 1735) was passed, as follows:

S. 1735

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a)(1) the Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration or his designee, shall use amounts made available under paragraph (4) to make a grant to an institution of the type described in paragraph (2) for the establishment of a National Resource and Information Center for Perinatal Addiction.

(2) The grant under paragraph (1) shall be awarded, after a competitive search, to a private nonprofit institution that has an extensive background and experience in performing research on maternal substance abuse and in disseminating such information to professionals, policymakers, the general public and the media, as well as experience in providing educational services to maternal substance abusers and their exposed infants.

(3) The Center established under paragraph (1) shall—

(A) coordinate and disseminate research on maternal substance abuse, treatment options for such women and infants of such women, and prevention strategies;

(B) develop and distribute training and educational information and materials concerning maternal substance abuse;

(C) act as a clearinghouse for information on treatment programs for pregnant women who are addicted to illegal substances;

(D) develop and manage a national toll free hotline to provide information and referrals;

(E) provide policy analysis and program evaluation to the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and

(F) provide any other services designed to carry out the purposes of this subsection.

(4) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this paragraph, $2,500,000 for fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1991.

(b) Part A of title V of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 509H. GRANTS FOR SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT FOR PREGNANT AND POSTPARTUM WOMEN.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration or his designee, shall make grants to entities to provide assistance to outpatient and residential substance abuse treatment programs relating to pregnant and postpartum women and their infants, that meet the requirements of subsection (b).

"(b) REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) DISTRIBUTION.—In making grants under subsection (a), the Administrator shall ensure that grants are reasonably distributed among projects that provide outpatient and residential treatment.

"(2) SERVICES.—An entity shall not be eligible for a grant under subsection (a) unless such entity provides the Administrator with an assurance that such entity will use assistance provided under such grant to provide, arrange for the provision of, or refer individuals to, services that shall include—

"(A) intervention services for pregnant and post-partum women, including—

"(i) substance abuse and addiction treatment services;

"(ii) support services (such as child care and transportation services);

"(iii) education and skill building services (such as parenting and job seeking skill services);

"(iv) integration and coordination of substance abuse treatment services with prenatal or post-partum health care services;

"(v) innovative methods of outreach to identify and recruit target populations for services early in the pregnancy of individuals of such populations;

"(vi) medical screening procedures of pregnant women for past and present substance use and abuse; and

"(vii) after care services;

"(B) interventions where infants are at risk, including—

"(i) direct intervention, treatment, or rehabilitation of infants, which may include other siblings, to reduce or prevent the impact of maternal substance abuse on such children; and

"(ii) supportive services for biologic or foster parents of infants affected by maternal substance abuse;

"(C) service delivery strategies that may include—

"(i) strategies for the coordination, for purposes of identification or service delivery, of family violence and homeless shelter programs, programs under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, and section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, crisis pregnancy centers programs, public housing programs, and prison programs, with other likely points of access for high risk women;

"(ii) strategies concerning the involvement of significant others (such as male partners of pregnant women) as direct intervention targets or strategies to aid in the outreach and service delivery processes for women;

"(iii) strategies for co-locating multiple facilities to facilitate the delivery of services; and

"(iv) innovative strategies (such as case management) to ensure the coordinated utilization of generally unrelated service systems; and

"(D) other services necessary to improve pregnancy outcomes, reduce substance abuse among women of childbearing age, and increase the stability of the family home environment.

"(c) APPLICATION.—The Administrator shall not make a grant under subsection (a) unless—

"(1) an application for the grant is submitted to the Secretary;

"(2) with respect to carrying out the purpose for which the grant is to be made, the application provides assurances of compliance satisfactory to the Secretary;

"(3) the application otherwise is in such form, is made in such manner, and contains such agreements, assurances, and information as the Administrator determines to be necessary to carry out this section; and

"(4) the application contains an assurance that the applicant will provide funds, other than Federal funds, in an amount that is not less than 10 percent of the amount of the grant under subsection (a).

"(d) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit the Secretary to discriminate in the awarding of grants under subsection (a) against applicants that propose or provide residential or outpatient rehabilitation services under applicable requirements of State law, including applicants that provide services to substance abusing pregnant and post-partum women that receive treatment by order of a court or other appropriate public agency, so long as all such applications include measures that encourage substance abusing pregnant and post-partum women to seek prenatal care and rehabilitation.

"(f) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $50,000,000 in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal year 1991.".

SEC. 2. (a) The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101) is amended by adding after section 8 the following new subsection:

"SEC. 8A. EMERGENCY PROTECTIVE CHILD SERVICES GRANTS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish a grant program to make grants to eligible entities to enable such entities to provide services to children whose parents are substance abusers.

"(b) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—Entities eligible to receive a grant under this section shall be State or local agencies that are responsible for administering protective child services or child abuse intervention services. Such agencies shall include those agencies responsible for administering foster care, child welfare, child protective services, and child abuse intervention programs.

"(c) APPLICATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an entity shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may by regulation require.

"(2) ASSURANCE OF USE.—An application submitted under paragraph (1) shall—

"(A) contain an assurance that the applicant operates in a geographic area where substance abuse has placed substantial strains on social service and law enforcement agencies and has resulted in substantial increases in the need for services that cannot be met without funds available under this section;

"(B) identify the responsible agency or agencies that will be involved in the use of funds provided under this section;

"(C) contain a description of the emergency situation with regard to children of substance abusers who need services of the type described in this section;

"(D) contain a plan for improving the delivery of such services to such children;

"(E) contain assurances that such services will be provided in a comprehensive multidisciplinary and coordinated manner; and

"(F) contain any additional information as the Secretary may reasonably require.

"(d) USE OF FUNDS.—Funds received by an entity under this section part shall be used to improve the delivery of services to children whose parents are substance abusers. Such services may include—

"(1) the hiring of additional personnel by the entity to reduce caseloads;

"(2) the provision of additional training for personnel to improve their ability to provide emergency child protective services related to substance abuse by the parents of such children;

"(3) the provision of expanded services to deal with family crises created by substance abuse;

"(4) the recruitment of additional foster care families;

"(5) the recruitment of additional adoptive families; and

"(6) the establishment or improvement of coordination between the agency administering the grant and—

"(A) child protection and welfare organizations;

"(B) hospitals and health care providers;

"(C) public health and mental health professionals;

"(D) judicial and law enforcement officers;

"(E) child advocates;

"(F) public educational institutions;

"(G) community-based organizations that serve substance abusing parents, including pregnant and post-partum females and their infants;

"(H) public housing officials;

"(I) providers of shelter to abused and homeless females and families; and

"(J) parents and representatives of parent groups.

"(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this section, $40,000,000 in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary in each subsequent fiscal year.".

(b)(1) Section 402(A) of the Joint Resolution entitled "A Joint Resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes", (approved October 12, 1984, Public Law 98-473, 98 Stat. 2198, 42 U.S.C. 5116d) is amended—

(A) by inserting after paragraph (3), the following new paragraph:

"(4) parental substance abuse places children at great risk of abuse and neglect;"; and

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (4), (5), (6), and (7) as paragraphs (5), (6), (7), and (8) respectively.

(2) Section 405(4)(A) of such Act (98 Stat. 2198, 42 U.S.C. 5116c) is amended by inserting "services to substance abusing parents, including pregnant and post-partum women," after "perinatal bonding,".

SEC. 3. Title V of such Act is amended by inserting after section 508 (42 U.S.C. 290aa-6) the following new section:

"SEC. 508B. GRANTS FOR TRAINING OF DRUG TREATMENT PROFESSIONALS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish a grant program to make grants to eligible institutions to enable such institutions to provide training services to increase the supply of drug treatment professionals.

"(b) ELIGIBLE INSTITUTIONS.—Institutions eligible to receive a grant under this section shall include medical schools, schools of osteopathy, school of nursing, schools of public health, school of chiropractic services, schools of social work, and other appropriate educational institutions that submit an application in accordance with subsection (c).

"(c) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an eligible institution shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may by regulation require.

"(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION.—

"(1) FISCAL YEAR 1990.—The Secretary shall use amounts appropriated under section 508 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, to carry out this section in fiscal year 1990.

"(2) SUBSEQUENT FISCAL YEARS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this section in each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992, such sums as may be necessary.".

SEC. 4. DRUG-FREE SCHOOLS AND CAMPUSES.—(a)(1) Title XII of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section 1212 to read as follows:

"DRUG AND ALCOHOL ABUSE PREVENTION

"SEC. 1212. (a) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, no institution of higher education shall be eligible to receive funds or any other form of financial assistance under any Federal program, including participation in any federally funded or guaranteed student loan program, unless it certifies to the Secretary that it has adopted and has implemented a program to prevent the use of illicit drugs and the abuse of alcohol by students and employees that, at a minimum, includes—

"(1) the annual distribution to each student and employee of—

"(A) standards of conduct that clearly prohibit, at a minimum, the unlawful possession, use, or distribution of illicit drugs and alcohol by students and employees on its property or as part of any of its activities;

"(B) a description of the applicable legal sanctions under local, State, or Federal law for the unlawful possession or distribution of illicit drugs and alcohol;

"(C) a description of the health risks associated with the use of illicit drugs and the abuse of alcohol;

"(D) a description of any drug or alcohol counseling, treatment, or rehabilitation programs that are available to employees or students; and

"(E) a clear statement that the institution will impose sanctions on students and employees (consistent with local, State, and Federal law), and a description of those sanctions, up to and including expulsion or termination of employment and referral for prosecution, for violations of the standards of conduct required by paragraph (1)(A); and

"(2) a biennial review by the institution of its program to—

"(A) determine its effectiveness and implement changes to the program if they are needed; and

"(B) ensure that the sanctions required by paragraph (1)(E) are consistently enforced.

"(b) Each institution of higher education that provides the certification required by subsection (a) shall, upon request, make available to the Secretary and to the public a copy of each item required by subsection (a)(1) as well as the results of the biennial review required by subsection (a)(2).

"(c)(1) The Secretary shall publish regulations to implement and enforce the provisions of this section, including regulations that provide for—

"(A) the periodic review of a representative sample of programs required by subsection (a); and

"(B) sanctions, up to and including the termination of any form of financial assistance, for institutions of higher education that fail to implement their programs or to consistently enforce their sanctions.

"(2) The sanctions required by subsection (a)(1)(E) may include the completion of an appropriate rehabilitation program.".

(2) The provisions of paragraph (1) shall take effect on October 1, 1990.

(b)(1) Part D of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 (20 U.S.C. 3171 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section 5145 to read as follows:

"CERTIFICATION OF DRUG AND ALCOHOL ABUSE PREVENTION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 5145. (a) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, no local educational agency shall be eligible to receive funds or any other form of financial assistance under any Federal program unless it certifies to the State educational agency that it has adopted and has implemented a program to prevent the use of illicit drugs and alcohol by students or employees that, at a minimum, includes—

"(1) mandatory, age-appropriate, developmentally based drug and alcohol education and prevention programs (which address the legal, social, and health consequences of drug and alcohol use and which provide information about effective techniques for resisting peer pressure to use illicit drugs or alcohol) for students in all grades of the schools operated or served by the applicant, from early childhood level through grade 12;

"(2) conveying to students that the use of illicit drugs and alcohol is wrong and harmful;

"(3) standards of conduct that are applicable to students and employees in all the applicant's schools and that clearly prohibit, at a minimum, the possession, use, or distribution of illicit drugs and alcohol by students and employees on school premises or as part of any of its activities;

"(4) a clear statement that sanctions (consistent with local, State, and Federal law), up to and including expulsion or termination of employment and referral for prosecution, will be imposed on students and employees who violate the standards of conduct required by paragraph (3) and a description of those sanctions;

"(5) information about any available drug and alcohol counseling and rehabilitation programs that are available to students and employees;

"(6) a requirement that parents, students, and employees be given a copy of the standards of conduct required by paragraph (3) and the statement of sanctions required by paragraph (4);

"(7) notifying parents, students, and employees that compliance with the standards of conduct required by paragraph (3) is mandatory; and

"(8) a biennial review by the applicant of its program to—

"(I) determine its effectiveness and implement changes to the program if they are needed; and

"(II) ensure that the sanctions required by paragraph (4) are consistently enforced.

"(b) Each local educational agency that provides the certification required by subsection (a) shall, upon request, make available to the Secretary, the State educational agency, and to the public full information about the elements of its program required by subsection (a), including the results of its biennial review.

"(c) Each State educational agency shall certify to the Secretary that it has adopted and has implemented a program to prevent the use of illicit drugs and the abuse of alcohol by its students and employees that is consistent with the program required by subsection (a) of this section. The State educational agency shall, upon request, make available to the Secretary and to the public full information about the elements of its program.

"(d)(1) The Secretary shall publish regulations to implement and enforce the provisions of this section, including regulations that provide for—

"(A) the periodic review by State educational agencies of a representative sample of programs required by subsection (a); and

"(B) sanctions, up to and including the termination of any form of financial assistance, for local educational agencies that fail to implement their programs or to consistently enforce their sanctions.

"(2) The sanctions required by subsection (a)(1)(4) may include the completion of an appropriate rehabilitation program.".

(2) The Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 is further amended in section 5126(c)(2) by—

(A) striking out subparagraphs (E), (F), and (G); and

(B) redesignating subparagraphs (H) through (M) as subparagraphs (E) through (J), respectively.

(3) The provisions of paragraphs (1) and (2) shall take effect on October 1, 1990.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, this section shall not take effect until enactment of a law containing the following provisions:

"SECTION 1. (a) This section may be cited as the 'Transportation Employee Testing Act of 1989'.

"(b) The Congress finds that—

"(1) alcohol abuse and illegal drug use pose significant dangers to the safety and welfare of the Nation;

"(2) millions of the Nation's citizens utilize transportation by aircraft, railroads, trucks, and buses, and depend on the operators of aircraft, railroads, trucks, and buses to perform in a safe and responsible manner;

"(3) the greatest efforts must be expended to eliminate the abuse of alcohol and use of illegal drugs, whether on duty or off duty, by those individuals who are involved in the operation of aircraft, railroads, trucks, and buses;

"(4) the use of alcohol and illegal drugs has been demonstrated to affect significantly the performance of individuals, and has been proven to have been a critical factor in transportation accidents;

"(5) the testing of uniformed personnel of the Armed Forces has shown that the most effective deterrent to abuse of alcohol and use of illegal drugs is increased testing, including random testing;

"(6) adequate safeguards can be implemented to ensure that testing for abuse of alcohol or use of illegal drugs is performed in a manner which protects an individual's right of privacy, ensures that no individual is harassed by being treated differently from other individuals, and ensures that no individual's reputation or career development is unduly threatened or harmed; and

"(7) rehabilitation is a critical component of any testing program for abuse of alcohol or use of illegal drugs, and should be made available to individuals, as appropriate.

"(c)(1) Title VI of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 App. U.S.C. 1421 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"'ALCOHOL AND CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES TESTING TESTING PROGRAM

"'SEC. 613. (a)(1) The Administrator shall, in the interest of aviation safety, prescribe regulations within twelve months after the date of enactment of this section. Such regulations shall establish a program which requires air carriers and foreign air carriers to conduct preemployment, reasonable suspicion, random, and post-accident testing of airmen, crewmembers, airport security screening contract personnel, and other air carrier employees responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Administrator) for use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance. The Administrator may also prescribe regulations, as the Administrator considers appropriate in the interest of safety, for the conduct of periodic recurring testing of such employees for such use in violation of law or Federal regulation.

"'(2) The Administrator shall establish a program applicable to employees of the Federal Aviation Administration whose duties include responsibility for safety-sensitive functions. Such program shall provide for preemployment, reasonable suspicion, random, and post-accident testing for use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance. The Administrator may also prescribe regulations, as the Administrator considers appropriate in the interest of safety, for the conduct of periodic recurring testing of such employees for such use in violation of law or Federal regulation.

"'(3) In prescribing regulations under the programs required by this subsection, the Administrator shall require, as the Administrator considers appropriate, the suspension or revocation of any certificate issued to such an individual, or the disqualification or dismissal of any such individual, in accordance with the provisions of this section, in any instance where a test conducted and confirmed under this section indicates that such individual has used, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance.

"'PROHIBITION ON SERVICE

"'(b)(1) No person may use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance after the date of enactment of this section and serve as an airman, crewmember, airport security screening contract personnel, air carrier employee responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Administrator), or employee of the Federal Aviation Administration with responsibility for safety-sensitive functions.

"'(2) No individual who is determined to have used, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance after the date of enactment of this section shall serve as an airman, crewmember, airport security screening contract personnel, air carrier employee responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Administrator), or employee of the Federal Aviation Administration with responsibility for safety-sensitive functions unless such individual has completed a program of rehabilitation described in subsection (c) of this section.

"'(3) Any such individual determined by the Administrator to have used, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance after the date of enactment of this section who—

"'(A) engaged in such use while on duty;

"'(B) prior to such use had undertaken or completed a rehabilitation program described in subsection (c) of this section;

"'(C) following such determination refuses to undertake such a rehabilitation program; or

"'(D) following such determination fails to complete such a rehabilitation program, shall not be permitted to perform the duties relating to air transportation which such individual performed prior to the date of such determination.

"'PROGRAM FOR REHABILITATION

"'(c)(1) The Administrator shall prescribe regulations setting forth requirements for rehabilitation programs which at a minimum provide for the identification and opportunity for treatment of employees referred to in subsection (a)(1) of this section in need of assistance in resolving problems with the use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or controlled substances. Each air carrier and foreign air carrier is encouraged to make such a program available to all of its employees in addition to those employees referred to in subsection (a)(1) of this section. The Administrator shall determine the circumstances under which such employees shall be required to participate in such a program. Nothing in this subsection shall preclude any air carrier or foreign air carrier from establishing a program under this subsection in cooperation with any other air carrier or foreign air carrier.

"'(2) The Administrator shall establish and maintain a rehabilitation program which at a minimum provides for the identification and opportunity for treatment of those employees of the Federal Aviation Administration whose duties include responsibility for safety-sensitive functions who are in need of assistance in resolving problems with the use of alcohol or controlled substances.

"'PROCEDURES

"'(d) In establishing the program required under subsection (a) of this section, the Administrator shall develop requirements which shall—

"'(1) promote, to the maximum extent practicable, individual privacy in the collection of specimen samples;

"'(2) with respect to laboratories and testing procedures for controlled substances, incorporate the Department of Health and Human Services scientific and technical guidelines dated April 11, 1988, and any subsequent amendments thereto, including mandatory guidelines which—

"'(A) establish comprehensive standards for all aspects of laboratory controlled substances testing and laboratory procedures to be applied in carrying out this section, including standards which require the use of the best available technology for ensuring the full reliability and accuracy of controlled substances tests and strict procedures governing the chain of custody of specimen samples collected for controlled substances testing;

"'(B) establish the minimum list of controlled substances for which individuals may be tested; and

"'(C) establish appropriate standards and procedures for periodic review of laboratories and criteria for certification and renovation of certification of laboratories to perform controlled substances testing in carrying out this section;

"'(3) require that all laboratories involved in the controlled substances testing of any individual under this section shall have the capability and facility, at such laboratory, of performing screening and confirmation tests;

"'(4) provide that all tests which indicate the use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance by any individual shall be confirmed by a scientifically recognized method of testing capable of providing quantitative data regarding alcohol or a controlled substance;

"'(5) provide that each specimen sample be subdivided, secured, and labelled in the presence of the tested individual and that a portion thereof be retained in a secure manner to prevent the possibility of tampering, so that in the event the individuals' confirmation test results are positive the individual has an opportunity to have the retained portion assayed by a confirmation test done independently at a second certified laboratory if the individual requests the independent test within 3 days after being advised of the results of the confirmation test;

"'(6) ensure appropriate safeguards for testing to detect and quantify alcohol in breath and body fluid samples, including urine and blood, through the development of regulations as may be necessary and in consultation with the Department of Health and Human Services;

"'(7) provide for the confidentiality of test results and medical information (other than information relating to alcohol or a controlled substance) of employees, except that the provisions of this paragraph shall not preclude the use of test results for the orderly imposition of appropriate sanctions under this section; and

"'(8) ensure that employees are selected for tests by nondiscriminatory and impartial methods, so that no employee is harassed by being treated differently from other employees in similar circumstances.

"'EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS AND REGULATIONS

"'(e)(1) No State or local government shall adopt or have in effect any law, rule, regulation, ordinance, standard, or order that is inconsistent with the regulations promulgated under this section, except that the regulations promulgated under this section shall not be construed to preempt provisions of State criminal law which impose sanctions for reckless conduct leading to actual loss of life, injury or damage to property, whether the provisions apply specifically to employees of an air carrier or foreign air carrier, or to the general public.

"'(2) Nothing in this section shall be construed to restrict the discretion of the Administrator to continue in force, amend, or further supplement any regulations issued before the date of enactment of this section that govern the use of alcohol and controlled substances by airmen, crewmembers, airport security screening contract personnel, air carrier employees responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Administrator), or employees of the Federal Aviation Administration with responsibility for safety-sensitive functions.

"'(3) In prescribing regulations under this section, the Administrator shall only establish requirements applicable to foreign air carriers that are consistent with the international obligations of the United States, and the Administrator shall take into consideration any applicable laws and regulations of foreign countries. The Secretary of State and the Secretary of Transportation, jointly, shall call on the member countries of the International Civil Aviation Organization to strengthen and enforce existing standards to prohibit the use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance by crew members in international civil aviation.

"'DEFINITION

"(d) Section 202 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"'(r)(1) In the interest of safety, the Secretary shall, within twelve months after the date of enactment of this subsection, issue rules, regulations, standards, and orders relating to alcohol and drug use in railroad operations. Such regulations shall establish a program which—

"'(A) requires railroads to conduct preemployment, reasonable suspicion, random, and post-accident testing of all railroad employees responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Secretary) for use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance;

"'(B) requires, as the Secretary considers approprate, disqualification for an established period of time or dismissal of any employee determined to have used or to have been impaired by alcohol while on duty; and

"'(C) requires, as the Secretary considers appropriate, disqualification for an established period of time or dismissal of any employee determined to have used a controlled substance, whether on duty or not on duty, except as permitted for medical purposes by law and any rules, regulations, standards, or orders issued under this title.

The Secretary may also issue rules, regulations, standards, and orders, as the Secretary considers appropriate in the interest of safety, requiring railroads to conduct periodic recurring testing of railroad employees responsible for such safety sensitive functions, for use of alcohol or a controlled substance in violation of law or Federal regulation. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to restrict the discretion of the Secretary to continue in force, amend, or further supplement any rules, regulations, standards, and orders governing the use of alcohol and controlled substances in railroad operations issued before the date of enactment of this subsection.

"'(2) In carrying out the provisions of this subsection, the Secretary shall develop requirements which shall—

"'(A) promote, to the maximum extent practicable, individual privacy in the collection of specimen samples;

"'(B) with respect to laboratories and testing procedures for controlled substances, incorporate the Department of Health and Human Services scientific and technical guidelines dated April 11, 1988, and any subsequent amendments thereto, including mandatory guidelines which—

"'(i) establish comprehensive standards for all aspects of laboratory controlled substances testing and laboratory procedures to be applied in carrying out this subsection, including standards which require the use of the best available technology for ensuring the full reliability and accuracy of controlled substances tests and strict procedures governing the chain of custody of specimen samples collected for controlled substances testing;

"'(iii) establish appropriate standards and procedures for periodic review of laboratories and criteria for certification and revocation of certification of laboratories to perform controlled substances testing in carrying out this subsection;

"'(C) require that all laboratories involved in the controlled substances testing of any employee under this subsection shall have the capability and facility, at such laboratory, of performing screening and confirmation tests;

"'(D) provide that all tests which indicate the use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance by any employee shall be confirmed by a scientifically recognized method of testing capable of providing quantitative data regarding alcohol or a controlled substance;

"'(E) provide that each specimen sample be subdivided, secured, and labelled in the presence of the tested individual and that a portion thereof be retained in a secure manner to prevent the possibility of tampering, so that in the event the individual's confirmation test results are positive the individual has an opportunity to have the retained portion assayed by a confirmation test done independently at a second certified laboratory if the individual requests the independent test within 3 days after being advised of the results of the confirmation test;

"'(F) ensure appropriate safeguards for testing to detect and quantify alcohol in breath and body fluid samples, including urine and blood, through the development of regulations as may be necessary and in consultation with the Department of Health and Human Services;

"'(G) provide for the confidentiality of test results and medical information (other than information relating to alcohol or a controlled substance) of employees, except that the provisions of this subparagraph shall not preclude the use of test results for the orderly imposition of appropriate sanctions under this subsection; and

"'(H) ensure that employees are selected for tests by nondiscriminatory and impartial methods, so that no employee is harassed by being treated differently from other employees in similar circumstances.

"'(3) The Secretary shall issue rules, regulations, standards, or orders setting forth requirements for rehabilitation programs which at a minimum provide for the identification and opportunity for treatment of railroad employees responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Secretary) in need of assistance in resolving problems with the use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance. Each railroad is encouraged to make such a program available to all of its employees in addition to those employees responsible for safety sensitive functions. The Secretary shall determine the circumstances under which such employees shall be required to participate in such program. Nothing in this paragraph shall preclude a railroad from establishing a program under this paragraph in cooperation with any other railroad.

"'(4) In carrying out the provisions of this subsection, the Secretary shall only establish requirements that are consistent with the international obligations of the United States, and the Secretary shall take into consideration any applicable laws and regulations of foreign countries.

"'(5) For the purposes of this subsection, the term "controlled substance" means any substance under section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)) specified by the Secretary.'.

"(e)(1) The Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1986 (49 App. U.S.C. 2701 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"'SEC. 12020. ALCOHOL AND CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES TESTING.

"'(a) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall, in the interest of commercial motor vehicle safety, issue regulations within twelve months after the date of enactment of this section. Such regulations shall establish a program which requires motor carriers to conduct preemployment, reasonable suspicion, random, and post-accident testing of the operators of commercial motor vehicles for use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance. The Secretary may also issue regulations, as the Secretary considers appropriate in the interest of safety, for the conduct of periodic recurring testing of such operators for such use in violation of law or Federal regulation.

"'(b) TESTING.—

"'(1) POST-ACCIDENT TESTING.—In issuing such regulations, the Secretary shall require that post-accident testing of the operator of a commercial motor vehicle be conducted in the case of any accident involving a commercial motor vehicle in which occurs loss of human life, or, as determined by the Secretary, other serious accidents involving bodily injury or significant property damage.

"'(2) TESTING AS PART OF MEDICAL EXAMINATION.—Nothing in subsection (a) of this section shall preclude the Secretary from providing in such regulations that such testing be conducted as part of the medical examination required by subpart E of part 391 of title 49, Code of Federal Regulations, with respect to those operators of commercial motor vehicles to whom such part is applicable.

"'(c) PROGRAM FOR REHABILITATION.—The Secretary shall issue regulations setting forth requirements for rehabilitation programs which provide for the identification and opportunity for treatment of operators of commercial motor vehicles who are determined to have used, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance. The Secretary shall determine the circumstances under which such operators shall be required to participate in such program. Nothing in this subsection shall preclude a motor carrier from establishing a program under this subsection in cooperation with any other motor carrier.

"'(d) PROCEDURES FOR TESTING.—In establishing the program required under subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary shall develop requirements which shall—

"'(1) promote, to the maximum extent practicable, individual privacy in the collection of specimen samples;

"'(2) with respect to laboratories and testing procedures for controlled substances, incorporate the Department of Health and Human Services scientific and technical guidelines dated April 11, 1988, and any subsequent amendments thereto, including mandatory guidelines which—

"'(A) establish comprehensive standards for all aspects of laboratory controlled substances testing and laboratory procedures to be applied in carrying out this section, including standards which require the use of the best available technology for ensuring the full reliability and accuracy of controlled substances tests and strict procedures governing the chain of custody of specimen samples collected for controlled substances testing;

"'(B) establish the minimum list of controlled substances for which individuals may be tested; and

"'(C) establish appropriate standards and procedures for periodic review of laboratories and criteria for certification and revocation of certification of laboratories to perform controlled substances testing in carrying out this section;

"'(3) require that all laboratories involved in the testing of any individual under this section shall have the capability and facility, at such laboratory, of performing screening and confirmation tests;

"'(4) provide that all tests which indicate the use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance by any individual shall be confirmed by a scientifically recognized method of testing capable of providing quantitative data regarding alcohol or a controlled substance;

"'(5) provide that each specimen sample be subdivided, secured, and labelled in the presence of the tested individual and that a portion thereof be retained in a secure manner to prevent the possibility of tampering, so that in the event the individual's confirmation test results are positive the individual has an opportunity to have the retained portion assayed by a confirmation test done independently at a second certified laboratory if the individual requests the independent test within 3 days after being advised of the results of the confirmation test;

"'(6) ensure appropriate safeguards for testing to detect and quantify alcohol in breath and body fluid samples, including urine and blood, through the development of regulations as may be necessary and in consultation with the Department of Health and Human Services;

"'(7) provide for the confidentiality of test results and medical information (other than information relating to alcohol or a controlled substance) of employees, except that the provisions of this paragraph shall not preclude the use of test results for the orderly imposition of appropriate sanctions under this section; and

"'(8) ensure that employees are selected for tests by nondiscriminatory and impartial methods, so that no employee is harassed by being treated differently from other employees in similar circumstances.

"'(e) EFFECTIVE ON OTHER LAWS AND REGULATIONS.—

"'(1) STATE AND LOCAL LAW AND REGULATIONS.—No State or local government shall adopt or have in effect any law, rule, regulation, ordinance, standard, or order that is inconsistent with the regulations issued under this section, except that the regulations issued under this section shall not be construed to preempt provisions of State criminal law which impose sanctions for reckless conduct leading to actual loss of life, injury, or damage to property, whether the provisions apply specifically to commercial motor vehicle employees, or to the general public.

"'(2) OTHER REGULATIONS ISSUED BY SECRETARY.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to restrict the discretion of the Secretary to continue in force, amend, or further supplement any regulations governing the use of alcohol or controlled substances by commercial motor vehicle employees issued before the date of enactment of this section.

"'(3) INTERNATIONAL OBLIGATIONS.—In issuing regulations under this section, the Secretary shall only establish requirements that are consistent with the international obligations of the United States, and the Secretary shall take into consideration any applicable laws and regulations of foreign countries.

"'(f) APPLICATION OF PENALTIES.—

"'(1) EFFECT ON OTHER PENALTIES.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to supersede any penalty applicable to the operator of a commercial motor vehicle under this title or any other provision of law.

"'(2) DETERMINATION OF SANCTIONS.—The Secretary shall determine appropriate sanctions for commercial motor vehicle operators who are determined, as a result of tests conducted and confirmed under this section, to have used, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance but are not under the influence of alcohol or a controlled substance, as provided in this title.

"'(g) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section, the term "controlled substance" means any substance under section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)) specified by the Secretary.'.

"(2) The table of contents of the Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-570; 100 Stat. 5223) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"'Sec. 12020. Alcohol and controlled substances testing.'.

"(f)(1) The Secretary shall design within nine months after the date of enactment of this subsection, and implement within fifteen months after the date of enactment of this subsection, a pilot test program for the purpose of testing the operators of commercial motor vehicles on a random basis to determine whether an operator has used, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance. The pilot test program shall be administered as part of the Motor Carrier Safety Assistance Program.

"(2) The Secretary shall solicit the participation of States which are interested in participating in such program and shall select four States to participate in the program.

"(3) The Secretary shall ensure that the States selected pursuant to this section are representative of varying geographical and population characteristics of the Nation and that the selection takes into consideration the historical geographical incidence of commercial motor vehicle accidents involving loss of human life.

"(4) The pilot program authorized by this section shall continue for a period of one year. The Secretary shall consider alternative methodologies for implementing a system of random testing of operators of commercial motor vehicles.

"(5) Not later than thirty months after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to the Congress a comprehensive report setting forth the results of the pilot program conducted under this subsection. Such report shall include any recommendations of the Secretary concerning the desirability and implementation of a system for the random testing of operators of commercial motor vehicles.

"(6) For purposes of carrying out this subsection, there shall be available to the Secretary $5,000,000 from funds made available to carry out section 404 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 (49 App. U.S.C. 2304) for fiscal year 1990.

"(7) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'commercial motor vehicle' shall have the meaning given to such term in section 12019(6) of the Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1986 (49 App. U.S.C. 2716(6)).".

SEC. 5. No local educational agency shall use any of the funds which are released by this section unless funds are made available for each fiscal year to the chief executive officer of a State which may be used with existing power for random drug testing programs for students voluntarily participating in extracurricular activities and using existing power such testing is done only in schools which voluntarily choose to participate in such a program.

SEC. 6. AMENDMENT RELATING TO THE SPECIAL FORFEITURE FUND.—(a) ASSETS FORFEITURE FUND AMENDMENT.—Section 524(c)(9) of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(9) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as necessary for the purposes described in subparagraphs (A)(ii), (B), (C), (F), and (G) of paragraph (1). For each of fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993, the Attorney General shall transfer not to exceed $150,000,000 in unobligated amounts available in the Fund to the Special Forfeiture Fund: Provided, That such amounts will be transferred on a quarterly basis: Provided further, That an amount not to exceed $15,000,000 or, if determined by the Attorney General to be necessary to meet asset specific expenses, an amount equal to one-tenth of the previous year's obligations, may be retained in the Fund and remain available for appropriation.".

(b) SPECIAL FORFEITURE FUND AMENDMENT.—Section 6073(b) of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-690) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) DEPOSITS.—In each of fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993, there shall be transferred to and deposited in the Fund, from the Department of Justice Assets Forfeiture Fund pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 524(c)(9), not to exceed $150,000,000: Provided, That amounts specified in the second proviso of said section may be retained in the Assets Forfeiture Fund and remain available for appropriation.".

(1) striking subparagraph (B);

(2) striking the dash and "(A)"; and

(3) striking "; and" and inserting a period.

(b) Section 6077 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 is amended by striking subsection (c).

(c) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective with respect to fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1990: Provided, That, none of the funds made available under this Act for the Office of National Drug Control Policy from the special forfeiture fund may be used by the Director of National Drug Control Policy after February 1, 1990, if the Director has not by that date designated high-intensity drug trafficking areas pursuant to section 1005(c) of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-690).

SEC. 8. (a) Title XIX of the Public Health Service Act is amended by inserting after section 1916A (42 U.S.C. 300x-4a) the following new section:

"SEC. 1916B. STATEWIDE DRUG TREATMENT PLAN.

"(a) NATURE OF PLAN.—To receive the drug abuse portion of its allotment for a fiscal year under section 1912A, a State shall develop, implement and submit, as part of the application required by section 1916(a), an approved statewide Drug Treatment Plan, prepared according to regulations promulgated by the Secretary, that shall contain—

"(1) a single, designated State agency for formulating and implementing the Statewide Drug Treatment Plan;

"(2) a description of the mechanism that shall be used to assess the needs for drug treatment in localities throughout the State including the presentation of relevant data;

"(3) a description of a statewide plan that shall be implemented to expand treatment capacity and overcome obstacles that restrict the expansion of treatment capacity (such as zoning ordinances), or an explanation of why such a plan is unnecessary;

"(4) a description of performance-based criteria that shall be used to assist in the allocating of funds to drug treatment facilities receiving assistance under this subpart;

"(5) a description of the drug-free patient and workplace programs, that must include some form of drug testing, to be utilized in drug treatment facilities and programs;

"(6) a description of the mechanism that shall be used to make funding allocations under this subpart;

"(7) a description of the actions that shall be taken to improve the referral of drug users to treatment facilities that offer the most appropriate treatment modality;

"(8) a description of the program of training that shall be implemented for employees of treatment facilities receiving Federal funds, designed to permit such employees to stay abreast of the latest and most effective treatment techniques;

"(9) a description of the plan that shall be implemented to coordinate drug treatment facilities with other social, health, correctional and vocational services in order to assist or properly refer those patients in need of such additional services; and

"(10) a description of the plan that will be implemented to expand and improve efforts to contact and treat expectant women who use drugs and to provide appropriate follow-up care to their affected newborns.

"(b) SUBMISSION OF PLAN.—The plan required by subsection (a) shall be submitted to the Secretary annually for review and approval. The Secretary shall have the authority to review and approve or disapprove such State plans, and to propose changes to such plans.

"(c) SUBMISSION OF PROGRESS REPORTS.—Each State shall submit reports, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary may, from time to time, require, and shall comply with such additional provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to verify the accuracy of such reports and not overly burdensome on the State.

"(d) WAIVER OF PLAN REQUIREMENT.—At the discretion of the Secretary, the Secretary may waive any or all of the requirements of this section on the written request of a State, except that such waiver shall not be granted unless the State implements an alternative treatment plan that fulfills the objectives of this section.

"(e) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term 'drug abuse portion' means the amount of a State's allotment under section 1912A that is required by this subpart, or by any other provision of law, to be used for programs or activities relating to drug abuse.".

(b)(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall promulgate regulations necessary to carry out section 1916B of the Public Health Service Act (as added by subsection (a)) not later than 6 months following the date of enactment of this section.

(2)(A) Sections 1916B (a)(4) and (a)(5) of such Act (as added by subsection (a)) shall become effective on October 1, of the second fiscal year beginning after the date that final regulations under paragraph (1) are published in the Federal Register.

(B) The remaining provision of such section 1916B shall become effective beginning on October 1, of the first fiscal year beginning after the date final regulations under paragraph (1) are published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 9. WAIVER AUTHORITY FOR INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS.—Funds appropriated to carry out the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended, or the Arms Export Control Act may be made available for any narcotics-related activities in Colombia, Bolivia, and Peru to carry out any provisions of such Acts notwithstanding the provisions of—

(1) section 620(q) or section 660 of the Foreign Assistance Act; or

(2) section 518 of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Appropriations Act, 1989, or any other provision that similarly restricts the furnishing of assistance to countries in default on payment to the United States of principal or interest on any loan.

SEC. 10. Of amounts made available under this Act, $462,584,000 shall be used for the block grant program under part B of title XIX of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x et seq.) to make grants to carry out substance abuse programs, except that such amount shall not be used to calculate amounts to be used for programs and activities relating to substance abuse as required by section 1916(c)(7)(B) of such Act.

SEC. 11. Section 101 of the Abandoned Infants Assistance Act of 1988 (42 U.S.C. 670 note) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2), by inserting "and those infants who are victims of parental substance abuse" before the semicolon;

"(A) $8,000,000; and

"(B) an amount equal to 105 percent of the sum of—

"(i) the amount the State received under section 1913 for fiscal year 1988 (as such section was in effect for such fiscal year); and

"(ii) the amount the State received under part C for fiscal year 1988.

"(2) In subsequent fiscal years, each State shall receive a minimum allotment under this subpart that is equal to the amount that such State received in fiscal year 1989 under paragraph (1) for the minimum amount that such State was entitled to under such paragraph plus an amount equal to such minimum multiplied by the percentage increase in the amount appropriated under section 1911(a) in such subsequent fiscal year above the amount appropriated for the immediately preceding fiscal year."; and

(6) in subsection (f), to read as follows:

"(f) For purposes of subsection (e), the applicable amount for each fiscal year is $330,000,000.".

SEC. 13. (a) Section 5111(a) of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 (20 U.S.C. 3171 et seq.) is amended by striking "$350,000,000" and inserting "$375,000,000".

(b) Section 5122 of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (a) and (b) as subsections (b) and (c), respectively;

(2) by inserting the following new subsection (a) after the section designation:

"(a) EMERGENCY GRANTS TO SCHOOLS IN URBAN AND RURAL AREAS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—From the amount available to carry out this section pursuant to section 5121(a), 33.3 percent of such amount shall be used by the chief executive officer in consultation with the State educational agency or the chief State school officer of a State, to make contracts with, and emergency grants to, local educational agencies serving urban and rural communities with severe drug problems.

"(2) REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) INITIAL GRANTS.—In awarding grants under this subsection the chief executive shall first award grants to local educational agencies serving the largest city in the State to develop and implement comprehensive approaches to eliminating the serious drug problem that affects schools and students within the boundries of the local educational agency. Such grant shall be of sufficient size, scope, and quality to be of value and effective.

"(B) LOCAL AGENCIES.—After satisfying the requirements of subparagraph (A), the chief executive officer of a State receiving a grant under this section shall make grants to urban and rural local educational agencies with severe drug problems as determined by the incidence of drug abuse in relation to the size of the school age population. Such grants shall be of sufficient size, scope, and quality to be of value and effective. Such grants to the local educational agency shall be used for the development and implementation of comprehensive approaches to eliminating the serious drug problems that affects schools and students within the boundries of the local educational agency.

"(3) WAIVER.—The Secretary may waive the provisions of this subsection for States in which there is no concentration of drug problems."; and

(3) in subsection (b) (as amended in paragraph (1)) by striking out "IN GENERAL.—Not" and inserting in lieu thereof "REMAINDER.—From the remainder available to carry out this section, not".

Mr. BYRD. I thank the leadership on both sides.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PRESIDENT'S 1989 NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

AMENDMENTS NUMBERED 980 AND 981

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send two amendments to the desk on behalf of Senator WILSON and ask for their immediate consideration en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], for Mr. WILSON, proposes amendments numbered 980 and 981.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 980

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate regarding education to prevent the use of drugs and beverage alcohol during pregnancy)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . (a)(1) DRUG EDUCATION TO PREVENT THE USE OF DRUGS AND BEVERAGE ALCOHOL DURING PREGNANCY.

(A) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(i) the use of drugs or the excessive use of beverage alcohol during pregnancy poses risks and serious injury or impairment to mother and child;

(ii) 375,000 infants are born to mothers who engage in substance abuse during pregnancy and that number appears to grow exponentially each year;

(iii) the initial cost of providing care to infants born exposed to maternal substance abuse during pregnancy is over $13,000,000,000 annually;

(iv) the human cost in suffering and loss to society in terms of wasted human potential of both the abusing mother and especially the abused and innocent child is both incalculable and avoidable;

(v) drug and beverage alcohol abuse during pregnancy produces severe and lasting or even irreversible physical, mental, and emotional damage to the child, including low birthweight, prematurity, congenital deformities, risk of child abuse and death;

(vi) it is essential to reduce the incidence of substance abuse by pregnant women and the birth of infants addicted or otherwise injured or impaired by such abuse, both for the sake of the mother and especially in order to reduce the avoidable cruel suffering of and damage to infants so afflicted, and to reduce the unaffordable costs in tax dollars that will be required as the necessary alternative to successful preventive measures;

(vii) preventive drug abuse resistance education, including instruction by medical staff and experts in the field of maternal substance abuse during pregnancy, is needed to reduce the incidence of infants born exposed to maternal drug abuse during pregnancy;

(viii) preventive drug abuse resistance education is especially needed to reduce the exploding incidence of cocaine use which has resulted in unprecedented infant mortality rates in many cities across the United States;

(ix) preventive drug abuse resistance education programs Drug Abuse Resistance Education and Substance Abuse and Narcotics Education, have proven successful in reversing the destructive use of drugs during pregnancy.

(2) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that preventive drug abuse resistance education programs which seek to reduce the incidence of maternal substance abuse during pregnancy are essential to our efforts to win the war on drugs.

(b) Part B of the Drug Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 is amended as follows:

"SEC. 5122(a)(6) is amended by striking the period and inserting the following: "and education regarding the risks of drug and beverage alcohol abuse during pregnancy."

AMENDMENT NO. 981

(Purpose: To provide for a study of infants born drug-exposed due to maternal substance abuse during pregnancy)

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . (a) STUDY BY THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES AND THE NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF CHILD HEALTH AND HUMAN DEVELOPMENT.

(a) SCOPE OF UNDERTAKING.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, shall arrange to have a study conducted to—

(1) provide an analysis of the historical development of the problem of infants born drug-exposed due to maternal substance abuse during pregnancy;

(2) determine the number of infants born drug-exposed due to maternal substance abuse during pregnancy annually;

(3) determine the impact of maternal substance abuse during pregnancy on infant mortality;

(4) assess other costs, including but not limited to, the medical, educational, developmental, social, and fiscal costs associated with the care of infants born drug-exposed due to maternal substance abuse during pregnancy;

(5) quantify the costs identified in paragraph (4) to Federal, state, and local government;

(6) assess the costs associated with providing inpatient residential drug treatment to drug abusing pregnant and postpartum women and their infants, including but not limited to, prenatal and postnatal medical services, drug abuse treatment and education services, crisis counseling services, support group services, parent training services, and child developmental services, such as the Winnie Mandela House in Oakland, California;

(7) project the number of infants expected to be born exposed to maternal substance abuse during pregnancy through the year 1995; and

(8) project the costs, as defined under paragraph (4), of providing care for infants, as described in paragraph (7).

(b) ARRANGEMENTS.—

(1) REQUEST.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall request the National Academy of Sciences and the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development to conduct the study required by subsection (a) under an arrangement whereby the actual expenses incurred by such Academy and Institute in conducting such study shall be paid by the Secretary.

(2) UNWILLINGNESS TO ENTER INTO.—If either the National Academy of Sciences or the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, but not both, decline to participate in the conduct of the study under an arrangement under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall enter into an arrangement similar to that required under such paragraph solely with the Academy or Institute that is willing to conduct such study.

(3) NONPROFIT PRIVATE GROUPS.—If both the National Academy of Sciences or the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development decline to participate in the conduct of the study under an arrangement under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall enter into an arrangement similar to that required under such paragraph with other nonprofit private groups or associations under which such groups or associations shall conduct such study and prepare and submit the report required under subsection (c);

(4) CONSULTATION.—The entity that conducts the study under subsection (a) shall consult with the Director of the National Institutes of Health.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall prepare and submit to Congress, a report concerning the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $2,000,000.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, both amendments have been approved by both sides, and I urge their adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

If not, the question is on agreeing to amendments numbered 980 and 981, en bloc.

The amendments (Nos. 980 and 981) were agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it is my understanding that we have only one other amendment to which we will agree on both sides, and that is the amendment by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY]. We have a number of other amendments that others have threatened to bring to the floor. We will be able to keep them off the bill if this is the last amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. BIDEN. I have a slight correction. There are two that have been agreed to, both being physically typed. One I see made it to the floor, and the other is 30 seconds behind. We have agreed to them on both sides. One is the Wilson amendment and one is the Kerry amendment. As long as either agrees to not speak at all on either amendment, we will agree to them.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 982 AND 983

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send two amendments to the desk, en bloc, in behalf of Senators WILSON and KOHL, and ask for their immediate consideration. These were inadvertently left out of the last package.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be considered en bloc.

Mr. HATCH. May I have the amendments read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], for Mr. WILSON, proposes an amendment numbered 982, and for Mr. KOHL, (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY and Mr. SIMON) proposes an amendment numbered 983.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 982

SEC. . UNITED STATES-MEXICO JOINT AGREEMENT ON THE INTERDICTION OF AIRBORNE NARCOTICS SMUGGLERS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the governments of the United States and Mexico, pursuant to Sec. 4407 of P.L. 100-690, have a Letter of Agreement committing Mexico to reduce drug production, drug consumption, and drug trafficking within its own territory," and "increase cooperation with United States drug enforcement officials;"

(2) between 30 and 33 percent of all marijuana, heroin, and cocaine entering the United States moves through or originates in Mexico;

(3) the Drug Enforcement Administration reports that nearly 60 percent of its illegal cocaine seizures in the Southwest Border area of the United States are air-related;

(4) the Drug Enforcement Administration knows of at least 11 major landing strip locations in Mexico which serve as launching points for airborne cocaine smugglers to fly to the United States and the U.S. Customs Service estimates that such illicit traffickers have approximately 2,000 clandestine runways at their disposal on the American side of the border;

(5) Section 2013 of P.L. 99-570 empowers Congress to evaluate the required annual reports of the President on whether narcotics-producing nations have "cooperated fully with the United States to prevent the cultivation, sale, and traffic of illegal drugs.

(b) POLICY.—The Senate declares that—

(1) the President of the United States should initiate discussions with the Government of Mexico to develop and implement a bilateral agreement to monitor, pursue, and capture airborne smugglers of illicit narcotics. Such an agreement should include provisions for reciprocal overflight and hot pursuit authority as well as arrangements for the joint crewing of United States and Mexican drug enforcement aircraft.

(2) the President should report on the status of negotiations concerning this agreement in the annual International Narcotics Control Strategy Report on Mexico.

(3) if the President certifies in this report that the United States and Mexico have made significant progress toward the conclusion of the agreement, to include provisions for reciprocal overflight and hot pursuit authority as well as arrangements for the joint crewing of United States and Mexican drug enforcement aircraft, described in subsection (1), the Senate would consider such a declaration as a credible sign of the Government of Mexico's desire to "cooperate fully" with the United States on illegal drug interdiction programs pursuant to section 2013 of P.L. 99-570.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise to introduce an amendment for the purpose of trying to defuse what has become an agonizing annual struggle among the administration, Congress, and the Government of Mexico.

I refer to the certification process for narcotic-producing nations mandated by the Anti-Drug Abuse Acts of 1986 and 1988. As a result of the prerogative of Congress to pass resolutions decertifying the yearly Presidential reports on whether a foreign government has fully cooperated with the United States, to curb the flow of drugs entering the United States, the Senate has endured two bruising battles with regard to the interdiction record of the Mexican Government.

During these debates, I was once on the losing side and once on the winning side. In 1987, the Senate refused to adopt a resolution of decertification on Mexico, while in 1988 we approved one by nearly a two-thirds margin. But I have witnessed few debates in this body that have left so much misunderstanding and bitterness on both sides concerning the role of Congress in the process of judging another country's efforts to fight the international drug cartels.

Perhaps the central question that gave rise to all of the anger and accusations was the somewhat ambiguous definition of the term full cooperation as it appears in the law. Many of my colleagues legitimately asked what full cooperation meant and how a distant legislative chamber could measure it and then evaluate its merits or shortcomings. The Mexican Government argued that while Congress ignored its achievements in confronting the drug menace, it seized on minor and unavoidable flaws in performance or imposed unclear conditions impossible to fulfill.

The Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986, Mr. President, began to remedy some of the shortfalls in the certification process that we learned from our prior debates on the matter. To give more definition to the term of full cooperation, it required the United States Government to negotiate a letter of agreement with Mexico that would outline specific bilateral steps to curb the production and traffic of illicit narcotics.

As negotiated and signed on February 23, 1988, however, this agreement simply restates both nation's commitment to undertaking joint drug interdiction programs. It does not, Mr. President, spell out any new initiatives and it was cobbled together as a pro forma compliance with the law.

My resolution attempts to move the Congress and the administration away from such pro forma rhetoric that has caused so much consternation on this floor since 1987 and toward a specific benchmark or milestone of cooperation on which both nations can work as we approach the next certification period in March 1990.

The smuggling of narcotics by air, Mr. President, clearly presents the most difficult trafficking problem between the United States and Mexico. More than 60 percent of the cocaine that seeps into our land from locations south of the border come by clandestine aircraft. The American Southwest is dotted with some 2,000 makeshift landing strips on which the airborne trafficker can drop his supply. But without wings and propellors, the South American drug cartels would shrivel—losing their speed and evasiveness in the skies, they would have to rely on mules, riverboats, cars, and millions of willing feet. Indeed, the success of the United States-Bahamas task force in combatting the seaborne traffic of drugs has only forced the kingpins to rely even more on the clouds and the air.

This resolution, Mr. President, declares that the President should initiate discussions with the Government of Mexico to conclude a bilateral agreement to monitor, pursue, and capture airborne smugglers of illicit narcotics. It further states that if the administration certifies that both sides have made significant progress on the conclusion of such an agreement, including hot pursuit, joint crewing, and overflight arrangements, the Senate would consider this development as a credible sign of the Mexican Government's desire to cooperate fully with the United States in illegal drug interdiction programs.

Since the Congress created the certification process, Mr. President, we have an obligation to identify the results that we anticipate from it. By targeting one of the largest fundamental problems in the United States-Mexican narcotics control program, this resolution certifies our own commitment to helping devise an international drug interdiction strategy instead of annually bemoaning its absense.

AMENDMENT NO. 983

(Purpose: To require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct a study of the child and youth social service programs administered or operated within the Office of Human Development Services and the family assistance programs administered or operated within the Family Support Administration.)

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . STUDY OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE, CHILD WELFARE AND YOUTH SOCIAL SERVICE PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the National Academy of Sciences, shall conduct a study consisting of a comprehensive review and examination of the child welfare and youth social service programs administered or operated within the Office of Human Development Services and the family assistance programs administered or operated within the Family Support Administration.

(b) CONTENTS OF STUDY.—The study shall include—

(1) an assessment of the current content and organization of programs and data collection activities, including the relationship of local, State, and Federal government efforts, to protect children and youth and support families;

(2) an identification of the gaps and deficiencies in the activities described in paragraph (1);

(3) a review of the available options for improving the structure and delivery of services and collection of data concerning the activities described in paragraph (1); and

(4) an examination—

(A) of the current array and alignment of programs that addresses the special needs of children with substance abusing parents, children with disabilities and chronic diseases, including HIV infection, and children without adequate housing; and

(B) of how related programs and activities, such as health care and juvenile justice programs, interact with social service and family assistance programs.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 6 months after the completion of the study required under subsection (a), the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall prepare and submit, to the appropriate Committees of Congress, a report concerning the results of such study, including a response by the Secretary to the report and the recommendations of the Secretary.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $1,000,000.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I urge adoption of the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to amendments 982 and 983.

The amendments (Nos. 982 and 983) were agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 984

(Purpose: To improve the ability of States and localities impacted by narcotics related crime to monitor, track, and prosecute major narcotics offenders, money launderers, and youth gangs involved in narcotics activity by improving intelligence regarding narcotics trafficking and money laundering operations)

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and others, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY], for himself, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. SANFORD, Mr. HARKIN, and Mr. MURKOWSKI, proposes an amendment numbered 984.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, add the following new sections:

SEC. . Section 501b of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 USC 3711 et seq) as amended by the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 is amended by adding paragraphs 21 and 22 as follows:

"21. Developing better interstate and intrastate narcotics intelligence networks and systems, including the acquisition of appropriate electronics and computer technologies for the purpose of detecting and monitoring narcotics trafficking and money laundering activities;

"22. Organizing, educating and training special drug intelligence units to combat narcotics trafficking and money laundering enterprises.".

At an appropriate place add the following new subsection:

"States shall give priority to allocations under paragraphs (21) and (22) that reflect the most complex and serious drug intelligence problems confronting units of local government, with particular emphasis on urban populations.".

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Senator LEVIN, Senator D'AMATO, Senator SANFORD, Senator HARKIN, and Senator MURKOWSKI, I send to the desk an amendment designed to help States and localities fight the war against drugs by providing them with assistance for drug intelligence.

In the original version of this bill, which I will move in the future, we would have authorized $120 million in new funds to help States and localities impacted by narcotics-related crime to improve their drug intelligence operations, including direct formal grants to cities of over 100,000 in population.

We were not able tonight to achieve an agreement with the administration that would have been necessary to secure both passage and the assurance of funding for that legislation. Accordingly, I am instead tonight moving a compromise, which should provide some help to localities as they seek to improve their ability to fight drugs, but not nearly that which is urgently needed.

It is clear to me that today we have a serious gap in drug law enforcement: Specifically, law enforcement at the street level cannot compete with the drug dealers themselves in getting adequate intelligence as to what is going on, on the street.

Today the crime problem in the United States is the drug problem. In those cities where cocaine usage has gone up the most, violent crime has gone up the most, too. The result is that local law enforcement are swamped. They are making more arrests—putting more people in prison—but the price of cocaine continues to go down as supplies increase.

It is clear we must improve the quality of our arrests and prosecution. We can do that best by focusing our resources on improved narcotics intelligence, aimed at making the best cases against the biggest drug and money laundering enterprises—and the youth gangs they are using as some of their principal distribution networks.

The appropriate way to do that best would be by providing cities over 100,000 with direct grants, and by providing the States with additional funds to create drug intelligence and information networks for smaller urban, suburban and rural areas, an approach developed in the original amendment I had intended to offer, the Drug Intelligence Assistance Act of 1989.

In its final form, following negotiations with representatives of the Justice Department, the amendment that I am instead proposing tonight focuses on this problem by adding additional purposes to the current authorized purposes of Federal justice assistance funds. Specifically, it directs that the States may use justice assistance grants to develop better narcotics intelligence networks and systems, and to organize and train special drug intelligence units to combat narcotics trafficking and money laundering criminal enterprises.

The current pool available for these purposes, along with the other purposes authorized by justice assistance will be about $450 million, which I hope will begin to make a significant difference to our States and localities as they try to combat the narcotics menace.

This amendment also directs, however, that in making allocations for drug intelligence, that the States give priority to the "most complex and serious drug intelligence problems confronting units of local government, with particular emphasis on urban populations." That means that the cities, which have been having the hardest time keeping up with the new burdens imposed on them by drug related crimes, should receive the most assistance for drug intelligence under these provisions.

This amendment is the first step in what I intend to be a series of steps designed to leverage a discrete amount of Federal support into significant improvements in the ability of States and localities to locate, track, arrest, and prosecute major narcotics enterprises. Too often today localities do not possess the technical means to combat the enormous enterprises that now control the drug trade.

Over the summer, I chaired a series of field hearings in Massachusetts as head of the Subcommittee on Terrorism and Narcotics of the Foreign Relations Committee, to ask local law enforcement officials what they most needed to fight a drug war. The answer was clear: They don't have adequate resources in place for drug intelligence, and to get it, they need Federal assistance.

And I would like to quote just a few of the comments I received at that time:

From Kim Jajuga, Essex County Drug Task Force, in Massachusetts:

The people in Lawrence and Lynn do not see the international drug trafficker. They do not see Fabio Ochoa in downtown Lawrence. But they cannot live in Lawrence and Lynn in some of these streets. They cannot go outside their houses. They are fearful for their lives.

Mr. Jajuga told me then that there was something he hated to bring up, because it was so basic:

We do not have currently a statewide criminal intelligence network similar to the NADDIS system that is run by the DEA where myself or any one of the other local police chiefs or detectives sitting at this table can access that computer for criminal intelligence. In 1989, Senator, we still have to rely on the old word of mouth and the telephone, and only on personal contact will we get the information necessary.

What kind of equipment do the law enforcement officers on the street have to fight major drug enterprises? According to Mr. Jajuga:

We do not have any sophisticated equipment. There are no pools of sophisticated equipment that are readily available to us.

Lynn has a growing heroin problem—

Mr. Jajuga testified—

Lynn's problem is directly related to New York. Yet there are no formal communications, no formal centralized computer system, no formal anything other than just that one-on-one contact that I have with the New York City Police or the New York City Drug Task Force. It is ludicrous in 1989 that we are still working on this type of system.

Ludicrous, yes. And today, the Federal Government isn't doing anything about it.

When I was a State prosecutor in the mid-1970's, the Federal Government was spending $875 million in 1975 dollars in State and local law enforcement assistance. Last year, that figure was only $150 million total, and even now at $350 million, we have no program for helping the States and cities with drug intelligence.

To quote Plymouth County District Attorney Ron Pina,

Most of the information dealing with crimes and drugs come from the local offices. * * * And that information gets into an office, and then does not get out appropriately to DEA or to the State police * * *. There is no central location.

District Attorney Pina said that if there were a central drug intelligence data base for the sharing of information, it would have a significant impact in his ability to determine the size and location of major narcotics organizations and thereby increase the likelihood of an effective prosecution to shut them down.

There has to be a system by which we share this information and it has got to be on an organized basis, not on a hit-and-miss, case-by-case basis.

And this amendment would make it possible for States and localities to begin the creation of precisely such an organized network.

As Kevin Burke, district attorney, Lawrence, MA, testified before me:

If there is a message that we would like to have you bring back to Washington regarding this new strategy that seems to be emerging, it is that we on the battlefields want a real war on drugs. There has never been one conducted in the 11 years that I have been district attorney. If rhetoric and words are ammunition, then there has been a considerable amount of ammunition fired in the direction of drug dealers, but unfortunately, we found out that the drug dealers are simply not reading the press releases.

We are talking about an investment of billions of dollars that has to be committed on a long-term basis.

All we are doing on the streets is fighting a holding action.

In the words of James O'Neil, attorney general of the State of Rhode Island:

We operate within a criminal justice system that is essentially bankrupt; we operate on shoe-string budgets. We have clear thinkers, but we do not have the resources that allow you to gain the leadership that is necessary.

Attorney General O'Neil testified that drug assistance such as contained in this amendment is the "most glaring need we in the State and local level have."

In the words of Massachusetts Attorney General Jim Shannon:

Priority must be given to those who are out on the frontlines of this war. That means before we fund any studies or plans or Ph.D.'s to tell us we have a problem, let us instead bolster our troops. That means more investigators * * * it means better surveillance equipment.

It's the same story around the rest of the United States, and our cities have the biggest problems of all. We all have heard about what has been happening in Washington, DC, because we're all here, at least during the week.

But the trouble spreads across our land, Mr. President. Major cities across the country experienced significant increases in homicides last year, violent crime is up, serious crime is up, and all the while, Federal assistance has remained at a fraction of the level we provided in the 1970's.

As the U.S. Conference of Mayors and police chiefs found this year, when they developed and adopted a comprehensive national antidrug strategy:

A direct Federal-city relationship must be instituted in the Federal antidrug grant programs to make sure that the funds will be used quickly and effectively in the areas where they are needed most.

In the months to come, I intend to return to this body to request direct aid to cities for law enforcement assistance, as would have been provided under the original version of this legislation. I believe that it is in the interests of the Nation that the Federal Government do its share to help States and cities fight drugs, and that it can best do so by providing not just grants to the States, but to the cities directly.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment of my colleague from Massachusetts and commend him for his efforts. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this legislation when it was introduced as a free-standing bill.

As we all know, the drug epidemic ultimately manifests itself in the form of crimes in our cities and towns. Accordingly, most of the burden of dealing with it falls upon our local law enforcement agencies and officers—sheriffs, the police, and prosecutors.

In a recent trip to North Carolina, I met with several law enforcement officials in our rural areas. I learned that the scourge of drugs has reached even our small towns and farming communities. Crack factories are sprouting up in isolated areas.

Our police are doing the best they can to fight this overwhelming problem, but their resources are limited and the problem is huge. They need our help—and we owe it to them.

This amendment would provide just that help. It would provide badly needed funds to our State and local governments to improve their intelligence gathering capabilities, thus resulting in more arrests, prosecutions, and convictions. Furthermore, this assistance would be made available to cities, where street violence is soaring, and to rural areas to combat their own special problems.

The drug war must be fought on all levels, and this amendment helps achieve that goal.

I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to amendment No. 984.

The amendment (No. 984) was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include a statement explaining my amendment on civil enforcement of the crack house statute at the appropriate place in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUBTITLE D—CIVIL ENFORCEMENT

Use of civil statutes to close crack houses. Section 416 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 856) makes it a crime to operate a place for the purpose of manufacturing, distributing or using a controlled substances. This covers places such as "shooting galleries" and "crack houses." Presently this provision is enforceable only as a criminal offense which carries a maximum term of 20 years or a fine of up to $500,000.

Section of the bill amends this provision to provide for civil enforcement. Under the amendment, the Attorney General could shut down a crack house by seeking a civil injunction or eviction and could seek a civil penalty of up to $100,000. The maximum civil penalty is set substantially lower than the maximum criminal fine to make clear that this is a civil regulatory action, not a substitute for charging and proving a criminal offense.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to enter into a short colloquy with my friend Senator BOND.

Yesterday he offered an amendment to S. 1711 amendment (No. 918), in which I joined, to transform the bill's State and local testing requirement into a demonstration project within the Federal criminal justice system. I would like to clear up a possible misunderstanding regarding the scientific and technical standards to be incorporated into that program.

Mr. BOND. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. The amendment states that the program "shall be based in part on scientific and technical standards determined by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to ensure reliability and accuracy of drug test results." Do I understand correctly that the Secretary of Health and Human Services is to render scientific and technical advice to the Attorney General in designing the program, but that this does not mean that the Secretary of Health and Human Services has approval over the program elements?

Mr. BOND. Yes, that is correct. While the Attorney General will want to draw upon the expertise of the Department of Health and Human Services in purely technical matters, he is not expected, for example, necessarily to follow existing DHHS guidelines for other Federal programs. Indeed, he is peculiarly aware of the special circumstances of the Federal criminal justice system, and we expect him to adapt the program to reflect those realities.

Mr. HATCH. That is my understanding also, and I thank the Senator for that clarification before we proceed to final action on the bill.

LOSING THE EDUCATION AND TREATMENT BATTLE IN THE DRUG WAR

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, while I applaud his efforts, the drug war that President Bush outlined in his address to the Nation on September 5, is not a total war and it does not mobilize our resources adequately to win that war. If we are going to declare war on drugs, I am in favor of an all out war. I am in favor of waging a war on both the supply and the demand sides of the drug abuse problem that is thriving in America.

The administration's proposal fails by assuming that by emphasizing law enforcement and increasing prison space, as if this would eradicate the problem of drugs. However the drug abuse problem in America is all encompassing and needs to be addressed fully on all fronts: decreasing supply through interdiction and law enforcement, as well as decreasing demand through prevention, education, and treatment.

Make no mistake about it. I favor increased strict enforcement of drug laws and increased eradication and interdiction programs. I favor helping Colombia fight their terrorist drug lords. I favor enforcement and heavy sentences for drug dealers, pushers, and users. I favor seizing drug dealers' profits and property. I favor punishing even the most casual drug user.

But none of that will win the war if we are not willing to decrease the demand for drugs through education and rehabilitation, and dispelling the reasons many Americans turn to drugs.

Every time a youth turns to drugs either from ignorance or despair or poverty, we pay the price. We pay increased taxes for jails and the confinement of more and more inmates. We pay increased medical bills because the violence of the drug trade has jammed our hospitals and emergency rooms with wounded drug dealers, gangsters, bystanders, overdosed users, and crack addicted infants. And soon, we will be paying the prices of a generation lost to the emotional, physical, and social tyranny of drugs.

If one tries to find a place for cure and treatment, the lack of sufficient facilities becomes obvious. Even though it makes economic and moral sense, we are doing very little to discourage users and almost nothing to rehabilitate and cure them.

Mr. President, on Monday, September 25, I visited with high school students in Fayetteville, NC. I spoke to them about the hazards of drug abuse and listened to their fears and reactions to the drug abuse problems they witness among their peers. When I asked them if they knew where they could take a friend for drug treatment, only three students raised their hands. I was amazed that out of the entire high school, only three knew of facilities that were available to help with drug treatment and rehabilitation.

This experience has impressed upon me the extreme need for us to focus a significant part of our efforts in this drug war on education, treatment, and rehabilitation. For this reason I supported the compromise drug package that was put together by Members on both sides of the aisle. This package added to the strength of the Bush proposal by fully funding the President's anticrime and antidrug budget requests. But it went further to add $800 million for prevention, education, and treatment. We can watch to determine whether this will be adequate.

The bill before us today, S. 1711, embodies the Bush-Bennett drug plan by requiring States and local governments to implement drug testing programs before they can receive any Federal funding. Mr. President, I believe the adminstration's focus must be adjusted. The drug plan must help our States implement drug rehabilitation and treatment, not make it more difficult for the States to receive drug assistance. This drug-testing mandate will increase the financial burden upon the States, and once the drug tests are performed the plan offers little assistance to help those individuals who have tested positively. I believe it is imperative for us to turn our efforts away from mandating States to perform drug-testing, and turn to increasing our efforts in assisting States in their implementation of drug rehabilitation and treatment programs. Testing can come after we have enough rehabilitation facilities, if at all.

I urge a continuation of efforts to further respond to the growing needs for prevention, education, and treatment programs. If we expect to win this war against drugs we must focus our resources not only on continuing the drug problem through interdiction, eradication, and law enforcement efforts. We must go to the beginning of the drug problem and provide resources for those programs which will help reduce the demand for drugs among the American people and rebuild their self-esteem and their desire to achieve.

Still, we have a long way to go. I would like to see every American, but especially minors and pregnant mothers have available and receive treatment on demand. Moreover, I would like to place emphasis on drug education programs so that every student, from rural North Carolina to Los Angeles, CA, knows where to seek treatment and help for themselves and their friends.

Until we devote enough resources to education and treatment in the drug war, we may be fighting a losing battle. We will be fighting a war with shotguns filled with rock salt. We may sting the drug lords and sellers, but only temporarily. If we do not stop the users, producers and manufacturers will continue to have an arena where they can peddle their harmful goods.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President I rise today in support of President Bush's drug control strategy. I also support the democratic initiative which was made a part of this strategy. The passage of this legislation represents the final part of the first step in what we hope will be a coordinated effort to pursue the fight against illegal drugs. We started this process last year with the passage of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 which created the Office of National Drug Control Policy. The provisions contained in that legislation as well as the funding provided in the President's drug control strategy should give drug agencies the necessary tools to make some significant gains in the war on drugs.

No one expects an easy victory in this fight. It will be a long drawn-out battle. We must not lose our will to win. All Americans must become involved and be willing to make sacrifices and do their part if we are to be successful.

This summer I held drug hearings in my State. Almost every witness who testified at these hearings was of the opinion that education is the key to success in this fight. I, too, believe that education is the answer. I did not think that the President's strategy as originally proposed did enough in the area of education and treatment. The Byrd/Democratic initiative does much to correct that deficiency. I think that any well conceived drug strategy must seek a balance between enforcement and education/treatment.

As the funds from this drug legislation are expended we in the Congress must be alert to those programs which are found to be successful. We must provide adequate funding for them and deny funding for those which do not work. In this time of deficit spending we must ensure that we are getting the most for our money even in the war on drugs.

This legislation represents a total package of $9.4 billion. The American people will consider it well spent if we are able to show some progress in our fight to remove the scourge of illegal drugs from our midst.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, the drug epidemic in America has left no corner of our Nation untouched, including America's heartland.

President Bush and Drug Control Policy Director William Bennett have formulated a national drug control strategy as a first step toward mobilizing the Nation to respond to this very pressing problem.

The strategy provides a balanced plan of attack by all levels of Government, by the private sector, and by individual Americans against the common energy of drugs.

It may be true that there is nothing radically new in the strategy. It is modest in that it calls for a little more of everything.

But it is radical in its tone, candor, and moral seriousness.

The strategy invokes our society's dependence upon individuals to act within traditional bounds of civility and responsibility—a code of conduct based on traditional values of family, home, and community.

Our society, based on these traditional values, has a right to expect us to conduct ourselves as individuals who are a part of a larger body. It has a right to expect individuals to respect its traditions. But it also has a right to expect us to be ultimately responsible for the consequences of our own actions.

The use of drugs represents the ultimate act of individual selfishness that rejects any responsibility for oneself, for one's actions, or for one's place in the larger society.

The use of drugs is a part of a culture that places blame for any negative conditions upon the whole society. Drugs represent a "do-your-own-thing" mentality that grew out of the 1960's, which saw our culture suffer from a massive and collective nervous breakdown.

The ultimate goal of the strategy is to reduce the number of Americans who choose to use drugs. This can only be accomplished if individuals who use drugs—whoever they are—are made accountable and responsible for the consequences of their actions.

The roots of our drug crisis are not in the jungles of Bolivia, Colombia, or Peru. They are in the streets of Washington, DC, Des Moines, IA, and other cities. And the drug problem must be solved at the door-step of the over 14 million American drug users—both casual and hardened addict—by curbing their appetite for drugs.

If there are no customers for drugs, there will be no demand. If there is no demand, the supply will rot and wither naturally.

Those who are involved with drugs—either as sellers or buyers—are at war with our society.

The drug problem is not a foreign policy problem—although interdiction and erradication in source countries is an important key to end the use of drugs in the United States; it is not a public health emergency; it is not an addiction crisis; nor can the drug problem be blamed on the chemical or biological effects of drugs.

These just mask the real culprit—we have met the problem and it is us.

Consequently, the drug epidemic is really a cultural—not a political—problem.

Do we coddle the user? Do we provide excuses for him or her? Do we give them clean needles? Do we subsidize their habit? Do we assist him or her on the best mechanics of drug-taking? No.

This is the same thinking that gives us calls for legalization. And like legalization, it is surrender of a different form, but surrender nonetheless.

Families—the most cost-effective social program ever invented, and actually, the first department of health, education, and welfare—along with churches, schools, and police, must all be involved.

The Government is relatively powerless against cultural problems. But it can delegitimize a particular societal want through the force of law. The Government has done so with some success with alcohol and tobacco.

The strategy is a strong affirmation through its effort to stigmatize the use of drugs, that we are going to attempt to do the same with cocaine.

The strategy embodies several other principles.

First, ever mindful of the responsibility to reduce the still-present Federal budget deficit, the war against drugs requires a reordering of our Nation's spending priorities—by all governmental entities.

There are those who believe that the answer to our drug problem is the expenditure of increased Federal funds. This solution will only achieve increasing the already insatiable appetite of the Congress to spend money.

We all know that spending money is the crack-cocaine habit of the Congress. We must remember that increased Federal spending will not win the war on drugs any more than increased Federal welfare spending won the war on poverty in the 1960's.

And we all need to remember that this is not solely a Federal problem.

Second, the criminal justice system must be reinvigorated to restore order and civility to neighborhoods that are now controlled by drug traffickers and their associated gangsters and thugs.

Some claim that the strategy places too much emphasis on law enforcement as the solution to the demand for drugs. Some may even say that the strategy lacks compassion.

These folks contend that in order to eliminate the demand for drugs, the Government—meaning the Federal Government—must institute programs that will employ the unemployed, feed the hungry, and shelter the homeless. In other words, we need to get at the root causes of our drug problem.

We can spend more funds for programs that make us feel good if we like. But an uzi-toting, drug pushing gang member won't be persuaded by compassion. That person already thinks he's got all the answers anyway.

While a great deal of law enforcement is aimed at the supply of drugs in the country through a coordinated program of domestic and foreign interdiction and erradication, vigorous law enforcement also has an effect on demand.

Most individuals who don't use drugs or who have stopped using drugs, do so either because their internal moral compass tells them it is wrong, or because its use is against society's written law.

Law enforcement is used not only to apprehend those who break the law, but also to deter individuals from breaking the law in the first place.

Why else do we enforce any law—from preventing speeding to preventing drug use? We enforce laws not only to apprehend wrongdoers; we enforce laws to deter wrongdoers.

Therefore, the stricter law enforcement tools contained in the strategy will reduce demand for drugs, as well as the supply of drugs.

The strategy supports putting more police in the streets; more presecutors and judges in the courtroom building, more prisons—both State and Federal; and stiffer jail terms for hardened addicts and establishing shock incarceration or boot camps for some who can be brought into the mainstream before they become habitual criminals.

We cannot excuse criminal activity as a product of drug taking. Drug use is not a crutch to be used to excuse all sorts of antisocial behavior. Drug users must be held accountable for all of their actions—even their illegal activity.

We cannot give up on users—but when they break society's rules, users should suffer the consequences.

Swift, sure, and certain punishment for those who do not respect the rights of others must never go out of style in our arsenal of weapons against any criminal element—but especially against drug sellers and buyers.

Third, our local communities must be mobilized to create an atmosphere in which drug use will not be tolerated.

The strategy does not place the burden of the fight against drugs onto the States—even though 96 percent of all drug cases are prosecuted in State courts.

The strategy does—however—place expectations on the States, including increases in State funding for State programs, to perform their fair share of the burden of the fight against drugs.

The strategy encourages the States to pass legislation to:

Establish mandatory minimum sentences for serious drug crimes such as drug trafficking, possession of large amounts of drugs, selling drugs to children, and using children to sell drugs; establish alternative sentencing statutes for first-time nonviolent drug offenders; establish asset forfeiture laws to seize real and personal property derived from illegal drug transactions involving both casual users and drug traffickers; establish schoolyard laws to create drug-free zones around locations frequented by minors and which penalize with stiff minimum and mandatory sentences anyone caught distributing drugs to minors in these zones; establish tough user accountability laws such as suspension of drivers' licenses for a period of years; suspension of State benefits—such as loans, grants, and contracts—for a period of years; and criminalization of offers, attempts, and solicitations to sell or buy drugs; establish drug-free workplace statutes, for not only State employees and contractors, but also those professions that are licensed by State licensing agencies.

Only with a comprehensive, coordinated plan of action. Federal, State, local, individual—do we have a chance at winning this war.

Fourth, where appropriate, testing should be instituted of prison inmates at various points of their incarceration and of individuals in certain occupations that affect the public health and safety.

Finally, we need to improve on the quality and accountability of education, treatment, and rehabilitation programs.

Mr. President, S. 1711 is the Senate's first legislative response to the drug control strategy and I support it.

There are many of its provisions that I strongly support. They go a long way to implementing the goals of the strategy.

There are, however, some provisions of the bill I may not wholeheartedly agree with. But, as the strategy will change annually to meet new challenges and priorities—because we trust its goals are met—we will have an opportunity to make necessary modifications.

I look forward as we have further opportunities to revisit this very important issue.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, today I rise to praise not only the managers of the bill, the Senators from Delaware and Utah, and the chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, Senator KENNEDY, but to praise President George Bush. It was President Bush's leadership that led to this day. It is his strategy that we are implementing. He has pulled the Nation together to fight the common enemy of drugs.

Last week, on the transportation appropriations bill we appropriated an additional $3.2 billion to fight drug abuse. This is on top of the $7.1 billion in the President's budget. Of this amount, nearly $2 billion will go toward education and prevention. And over $5 billion will go toward law enforcement, including $1 billion for prison construction. The additional expenditures will come from an across-the-board cut .43 percent cut of expenditures. Although the cut includes defense spending, it does not affect entitlements like Social Security.

Mr. President, the problem of drug abuse cannot be solved by the Government alone. We will not overcome this scourge until the society as a whole changes its attitude toward drugs. We know education and prevention programs have begun to make a difference on individual attitudes toward the dangers of drugs and have led to a decline in the number of casual users of drugs in this country. That is why I applaud the leaders of the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, the Senators from Massachusetts and Utah. They have developed a package of amendments that is not only bipartisan, but addresses real education and treatment needs for those who abuse drugs.

Included in the leadership package are several amendments of mine. One amendment requires the House of Representatives and Senate establish Employee Assistance Plans [EAP]. EAP's provide those who are having personal problems, especially drug abuse, a program of treatment, rehabilitation, and after care. My amendment will make EAP's available to all congressional members, officers, staff, and family members. It also builds upon the amendment I offered to the 1986 drug bill that required EAP's be made available to all Federal employees. Ideally, these will become a model for private industry throughout the country.

Also included in the leadership package is my proposal to allow the Secretary of Health and Human Services make grants to increase the supply of drug treatment professionals. As we continue to learn about what works and what does not in preventing drug abuse, comprehensive community prevention has proven to be a shining light at the end of the tunnel. Yet no where in the current 28 programs that deal with the war on drugs is there money available to train professionals in community prevention services. My amendment will change this. For the first time, Federal funds can be used to train community prevention professionals.

In addition, I worked with the leaders in drafting an amendment to require treatment facilities to provide a program of posttreatment or "after care" to address the long-term needs of substance abusers. This is a very important aspect of recovery. Statistics show that we are making progress on the easy cases, but are failing when dealing with the hard cases of chronic and hardcore substance abusers. This begins with early targeting and intervention and continues with a solid program of posttreatment or after care. The amendment that the managers and I worked out will help States develop these long-term treatment and support programs.

I also commend the committee leaders and the managers of the bill for recognizing the importance of preventing the use of so-called gateway drugs. The use of gateway drugs like alcohol and tobacco often lead to more dangerous drug use. Of the high school seniors using cocaine, 60 percent began drinking beer, and 56 percent began smoking cigarettes before the age of 13. There is a clear linkage between the use of gateway drugs at an early age and the later use of illicit drugs. If we are to stop our children from using illegal drugs we need to start early and educate children about the dangers of not only illegal drugs, but also the dangers and future implications of legal, gateway drugs as well.

Finally, Mr. President, I am pleased to see that the managers understand that State and local communities have differing needs. The Committee on Labor and Human Resources recently heard testimony about the critical need for adolescent treatment beds in Mississippi. In the whole State of Mississippi there are only 26 adolescent treatment beds. By contrast, Minnesota does not have a shortage of treatment facilities. In fact, in Minnesota you can find 26 adolescent treatment beds in just one of many treatment facilities in the State. Thus, Minnesota does not need adolescent treatment funding like many other States and that is to her credit. Instead what Minnesota needs is money to address the long-term needs of the hard-to-serve chronic substance abusers. The point here, Mr. President, is that different States have different needs in their battle against drugs.

To conclude, the bill we are passing today is the culmination of the President's leadership and the Congress' willingness to follow his lead into a battle we must win. And this bill equips all facets with the essential resources to do so. We will build more prisons, have more judges and better equipped police to catch, sentence, and hold criminals. We will have more treatment facilities to handle those who wish to surrender themselves to a better, more productive drug-free life. And, we will increase the measures already taking place to inoculate the future generation from the attraction and addiction of drugs. These are important steps, that I think are in the right direction to win the battle that has cost all of us so much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, Senators who are interested in the catastrophic bill should be aware that following this vote, which will be the last rollcall vote this evening, the distinguished Republican leader and I will be here and will be seeking to obtain unanimous consent to an agreement governing the disposition of the catastrophic bill tomorrow. We have discussed it with, I believe, all of the individual Senators who have amendments. Senators should be aware of that. It is my expectation that we will go on to the catastrophic bill as soon as the Republican Senators complete their caucus in the morning, and that means at about 10:30. I will discuss that further with the distinguished Republican leader.

So if anyone wants to participate with respect to the catastrophic bill, we are going to seek the agreement this evening. We will be on that at 10:30 tomorrow. I hope to get an agreement to limit the number of amendments and the time so we can dispose of that in an orderly fashion tomorrow. We will be on that bill at or about 10:30 tomorrow morning.

I thank my colleagues. I very much thank the managers for their diligence in handling this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 100, nays 0, as follows:

So the bill (S. 1711), as amended, was passed.

S. 1711

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—RURAL DRUG ENFORCEMENT ACT

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Rural Drug Enforcement Act".

SEC. 102. LEADERSHIP ON RURAL DRUG POLICY.

(a) DESIGNATION OF OFFICIAL.—The Director of National Drug Control Policy (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Director") shall designate an official in the Office of National Drug Control Policy to act as the Rural Drug Policy Coordinator.

(b) DUTIES OF OFFICIAL.—The Rural Drug Policy Coordinator shall—

(1) examine the special needs of rural areas in drug interdiction;

(2) recommend to the Director policy options for the enhancement of drug interdiction in rural areas;

(3) coordinate the drug interdiction efforts of Federal agencies (including the Drug Enforcement Administration, Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the National Forest Service) in rural areas; and

(4) make available to law enforcement agencies in rural areas materials pertinent to drug interdiction in rural areas.

SEC. 103. RURAL DRUG ENFORCEMENT ASSISTANCE.

(a) Part E of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 is amended by adding a new section 509 as follows:

"RURAL DRUG ENFORCEMENT ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 509. (a) There is authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992.

"(b) Of the total amount appropriated for this section in any fiscal year:

"(1) 50 per centum shall be allocated to and shared equally among rural States as described in subsection (c); and

"(2) 50 per centum shall be allocated to the remaining States for use in non-metropolitan areas within those States, as follows:

"(A) $100,000 to each nonrural State; and

"(B) of the total funds remaining after the allocation in clause (A), there shall be allocated to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of remaining funds described as the population of such State bears to the population of all States.

"(c) For the purpose of subsections (b) and (c), the term 'rural State' means a State that has a population density of fifty-two or fewer persons per square mile or a State in which the largest county has fewer than one hundred and fifty thousand people.".

(b) Section 503(a) of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3753(a)) is amended by—

(1) at the end of paragraph (10) strike the "." and insert in lieu thereof "; and";

(2) inserting a new paragraph (11) as follows:

"(11) A separate and detailed request for a grant under section 509 of this subpart, including how the funds provided by a grant under section 506 shall be coordinated with funds provided by a grant under section 509.".

SEC. 104. FEDERAL DRUG ENFORCEMENT ASSISTANCE.

(a) In order to provide adequate Federal drug enforcement assistance to each of the several States, and to encourage Federal, State and local drug enforcement cooperation, the Attorney General shall attempt to assign not less than ten Drug Enforcement Administration special agents to each of the several States.

(b) In order to provide adequate Federal drug enforcement assistance to rural States for any rural State that is currently assigned less than ten Drug Enforcement Administration special agents, the Attorney General shall attempt to assign not less than four additional Drug Enforcement Administration special agents to each rural State as defined in section 103 of this Act.

SEC. 105. TRAINING FOR RURAL LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury, acting through the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, shall develop a drug training program for law enforcement officers in rural areas.

(b) TRAINING.—By not later than September 30, 1991, the Secretary of the Treasury shall double the number of law enforcement officers from rural jurisdictions in each of the several States that receive drug enforcement training.

(c) AUTHORIZATION.—There is authorized to be appropriated $1,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992 to carry out the purposes of this title.

SEC. 106. BASE ALLOCATION FOR DRUG ENFORCEMENT GRANTS.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—Paragraph (5) of section 1001(a) of part J of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 is amended to read as follows:

"(5) There are authorized to be appropriated $600,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992 to carry out the programs under parts D and E of this title.".

(b) BASE ALLOCATION.—Section 506(a) of part D of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act (42 U.S.C. 3756(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Of the total amount appropriated for this part in any fiscal year, the amount remaining after setting aside the amount to be reserved to carry out section 511 of this title shall be set aside for section 502 and allocated to States as follows:

"(1) 0.40 per centum shall be allocated to each of the participating States; and

"(2) of the total funds remaining after the allocation under paragraph (1), there shall be allocated to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of remaining funds described in this paragraph as the population of such State bears to the population of all the States.".

(c) MATCHING REQUIREMENTS.—Section 504(a) of part D of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3754(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) A grant made under this subpart may not be expended for more than 75 per centum of the cost of identified uses for which such grant is received to carry out any purpose specified in section 502, except that in the case of funds distributed to an Indian tribe which performs law enforcement functions (as determined by the Secretary of the Interior) for any such program or project, the amount of such grant shall be equal to 100 per centum of such cost. The non-Federal portion of the expenditures for such uses shall be paid in cash.".

SEC. 107. SHORT TITLE.

(a) This section may be cited as the "Department of Justice Community Substance Abuse Prevention Act of 1989".

(b)(1) COMMUNITY PARTNERSHIPS.—Part E of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3711 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Subpart 4—Community Coalitions on Substance Abuse

"GRANTS TO COMBAT SUBSTANCE ABUSE

"SEC. 531. (a) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term 'eligible coalition' means an association, consisting of at least seven organizations, agencies, and individuals that are concerned about preventing substance abuse, that shall include—

"(1) public and private organizations and agencies that represent law enforcement, schools, health and social service agencies, and community-based organizations; and

"(2) representatives of three of the following groups: the clergy, academia, business, parents, youth, the media, civic and fraternal groups, or other nongovernmental interested parties.

"(b) GRANT PROGRAM.—The Attorney General, acting through the Director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance, shall make grants to eligible coalitions in order to—

"(1) plan and implement comprehensive long-term strategies for substance abuse prevention;

"(2) develop a detailed assessment of existing substance abuse prevention programs and activities to determine community resources and to identify major gaps and barriers in such programs and activities;

"(3) identify and solicit funding sources to enable such programs and activities to become self-sustaining;

"(4) develop a consensus regarding the priorities of a community concerning substance abuse;

"(5) develop a plan to implement such priorities; and

"(6) coordinate substance abuse services and activities, including prevention activities in the schools or communities and substance abuse treatment programs.

"(c) COMMUNITY PARTICIPATION.—In developing and implementing a substance abuse prevention program, a coalition receiving funds under subsection (b) shall—

"(1) emphasize and encourage substantial voluntary participation in the community, especially among individuals involved with youth such as teachers, coaches, parents, and clergy; and

"(2) emphasize and encourage the involvement of businesses, civic groups, and other community organizations and members.

"(d) APPLICATION.—An eligible coalition shall submit an application to the Attorney General in order to receive a grant under this section. Such application shall—

"(1) describe and, to the extent possible, document the nature and extent of the substance abuse problem, emphasizing who is at risk and specifying which groups of individuals should be targeted for prevention and intervention;

"(2) describe the activities needing financial assistance;

"(3) identify participating agencies, organizations, and individuals;

"(4) identify the agency, organization, or individual that has responsibility for leading the coalition, and provide assurances that such agency, organization or individual has previous substance abuse prevention experience;

"(5) describe a mechanism to evaluate the success of the coalition in developing and carrying out the substance abuse prevention plan referred to in subsection (b)(5) and to report on such plan to the Attorney General on an annual basis; and

"(6) contain such additional information and assurances as the Attorney General may prescribe.

"(e) PRIORITY.—In awarding grants under this section, the Attorney General shall give priority to a community that—

"(1) provides evidence of significant substance abuse;

"(2) proposes a comprehensive and multifaceted approach to eliminating substance abuse;

"(3) encourages the involvement of businesses and community leaders in substance abuse prevention activities;

"(4) demonstrates a commitment and a high priority for preventing substance abuse; and

"(5) demonstrates support from the community and State and local agencies for efforts to eliminate substance abuse.

"(f) REVIEW.—Each coalition receiving money pursuant to the provisions of this section shall submit an annual report to the Attorney General evaluating the effectiveness of the plan described in subsection (b)(5) and containing such additional information as the Attorney General may prescribe. The Attorney General, in conjunction with the Director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance, shall submit an annual review to the Committees on the Judiciary of the United States Senate and United States House of Representatives. Such review shall—

"(1) evaluate the grant program established in this section to determine its effectiveness;

"(2) implement necessary changes to the program that can be done by the Attorney General; and

"(3) recommend any statutory changes that are necessary.

"(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this section, $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $25,000,000 for fiscal year 1992.".

(2) The table of sections of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3711 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"SUBPART 4—COMMUNITY COALITION ON SUBSTANCE ABUSE

"Sec. 531. Grants to combat substance abuse.".

TITLE II—JUSTICE ASSISTANCE AND DRUG TESTING

SEC. 201. AMENDMENT RELATING TO JUSTICE ASSISTANCE AND DRUG TESTING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3711 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end of part E (42 U.S.C. 3750–3766b) the following:

"DRUG TESTING DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

"SEC. 523. (a) DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.—The Attorney General shall establish a Federal drug testing demonstration program under this section, which shall be based in part on scientific and technical standards determined by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to ensure reliability and accuracy of drug test results. In addition to specifying acceptable methods and procedures for carrying out drug testing, the program may include guidelines or specifications concerning—

"(1) the classes of persons to be targeted for testing;

"(2) the drugs to be tested for;

"(3) the frequency and duration of testing; and

"(4) the effect of test results in decisions concerning the sentence, the conditions to be imposed on release before or after conviction, and the granting, continuation, or termination of such release.

"(b) There is authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 in fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 to carry out the section.

"(c) STATE IMPACT STUDY.—Of funds appropriated to the National Institute of Justice for fiscal year 1990, not to exceed $400,000 shall be made available to the National Criminal Justice Association to carry out a study of the fiscal and other impacts in States of implementing drug testing programs for targeted classes of arrestees, individuals in jails, prisons, and other correctional facilities, and persons on conditional or supervised release before or after conviction, including probationers, parolees, and persons released on bail. Six months following enactment of this section, the association shall report on its preliminary study findings. The final report on the study shall be completed one year after enactment of this section.

"(d) In issuing regulations pursuant to subsection (b) of this Act, the Attorney General shall also take into account any limitations on the ability of a State to meet the requirements of this Act due to the schedule of its regular legislative sessions and its procedural time requirements for adopting legislation and regulations.".

(b) AMENDMENT TO TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3711 et seq.) is amended by inserting at the end of the item relating to part E the following:

"Sec. 523. Drug testing program.".

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS

(1) striking "The judicial officer" and inserting:

"(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the judicial officer"; and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(2) The judicial officer shall order that a person who has been found guilty of an offense in a case described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of subsection (f)(1) of section 3142 and is awaiting imposition or execution of sentence be detained unless—

"(A)(i) the judicial officer finds there is a substantial likelihood that a motion for acquittal or new trial will be granted; or

"(ii) an attorney for the Government has recommended that no sentence of imprisonment be imposed on the person; and

"(B) the judicial officer finds by clear and convincing evidence that the person is not likely to flee or pose a danger to any other person or the community.".

(b) PENDING APPEAL.—Subsection (b) of section 3143 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) striking "The judicial officer" and inserting:

"(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the judicial officer";

(2) redesignating subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), and (D) of paragraph (2) as clauses (i), (ii), (iii), and (iv), respectively;

(3) redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B); and

(4) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(2) The judicial officer shall order that a person who has been found guilty of an offense in a case described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of subsection (f)(1) of section 3142 and sentenced to a term of imprisonment, and who has filed an appeal or a petition for a writ of certiorari, be detained.".

(c) EXCEPTIONAL CASES.—Subsection (c) of section 3145 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following: "Upon an appeal of the Government, a person who has been detained by the judicial officer pursuant to section 3143 (a)(2) or (b)(2), and who meets the conditions of release set forth in section 3143 (a)(1) or (b)(1), may be ordered released, under appropriate conditions, by a court of appeals or a judge thereof, if it is clearly shown that there are exceptional reasons why such person's detention would not be appropriate.".

SEC. 303. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.

(a) CORRECTION OF MISSPELLED WORD.—Subsection (a)(1) of section 3143 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "waiting" and inserting "awaiting".

(b) CORRECTION OF REFERENCE TO REPEALED PROVISION.—Subsections (e) and (f) of section 3142 of title 18, United States Code, are each amended by striking "section 1 of the Act of September 15, 1980 (21 U.S.C. 955a)" and inserting "the Maritime Drug Law Enforcement Act (46 U.S.C. App. 1901 et seq.)".

PART 2—TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

SEC. 311. MINIMUM PENALTY RELATING TO SHORT-BARRELED SHOTGUNS AND OTHER FIREARMS.

Section 924(c) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting "and if the firearm is a short-barreled rifle, short-barreled shotgun, or a destructive device, to imprisonment for ten years," after "sentenced to imprisonment for five years,".

TITLE IV—PUBLIC CORRUPTION

SEC. 401. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Anti-Corruption Act of 1989".

SEC. 402. OFFENSE.

Chapter 11 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 225. Public corruption

"(a) Whoever, in a circumstance described in subsection (d), deprives or defrauds, or endeavors to deprive or to defraud, by any scheme or artifice, the inhabitants of a State or political subdivision of a State of the honest services of an official or employee of such State, political subdivision, or Indian tribal government shall be fined under this title, or imprisoned for not more than ten years, or both.

"(b) Whoever, in a circumstance described in subsection (d), deprives or defrauds, or endeavors to deprive or to defraud, by any scheme or artifice, the inhabitants of a State or political subdivision of a State of a fair and impartially conducted election process in any primary, run-off, special, or general election—

"(1) through the procurement, casting, or tabulation of ballots that are materially false, fictitious, or fraudulent or that are invalid, under the laws of the State in which the election is held;

"(2) through paying or offering to pay any person for voting;

"(3) through the procurement or submission of voter registrations that contain false material information, or omit material information; or

"(4) through the filing of any report required to be filed under State law regarding an election campaign that contains false material information or omits material information, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned for not more than ten years, or both.

"(c) Whoever, being a public official or an official or employee of a State, political subdivision of a State, or Indian tribal government in a circumstance described in subsection (d), deprives or defrauds, or endeavors to deprive or to defraud, by any scheme or artifice, the inhabitants of a State or political subdivision of a State of the right to have the affairs of the State, political subdivision, or Indian tribal government conducted on the basis of complete, true, and accurate material information, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned for not more than ten years, or both.

"(d) The circumstances referred to in subsections (a), (b), and (c) are that—

"(1) for the purpose of executing or concealing such scheme or artifice or attempting to do so, the person so doing—

"(A) places in any post office or authorized depository for mail matter, any matter or thing whatever to be sent or delivered by the Postal Service, or takes or receives therefrom, any such matter or thing, or knowingly causes to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon, or at the place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, any such matter or thing;

"(B) transmits or causes to be transmitted by means of wire, radio, or television communication in interstate or foreign commerce any writings, signs, signals, pictures, or sounds;

"(C) transports or causes to be transported any person or thing, or induces any person to travel in or to be transported in, interstate or foreign commerce; or

"(D) uses or causes the use of any facility of interstate or foreign commerce;

"(2) the scheme or artifice affects or constitutes an attempt to affect in any manner or degree, or would if executed or concealed so affect, interstate or foreign commerce; or

"(3) as applied to an offense under subsection (b), an objective of the scheme or artifice is to secure the election of an official who, if elected, would have some authority over the administration of funds derived from an Act of Congress totaling $10,000 or more during the twelve-month period immediately preceding or following the election or date of the offense.

"(e) Whoever deprives or defrauds, or endeavors to deprive or to defraud, by any scheme or artifice, the inhabitants of the United States of the honest services of a public official or person who has been selected to be a public official shall be fined under this title or imprisoned for not more than ten years, or both.

"(f) Whoever being an official, or public official, or person who has been selected to be a public official, directly or indirectly, discharges, demotes, suspends, threatens, harasses, or, in any manner, discriminates against any employee or official of the United States or any State or political subdivision of such State, or endeavors to do so, in order to carry out or to conceal any scheme or artifice described in this section, shall be fined under this title or subject to imprisonment of up to five years or both.

"(g)(1) Any employee or official of the United States or any State or political subdivision of such State who is discharged, demoted, suspended, threatened, harassed, or in any other manner discriminated against because of lawful acts done by the employee as a result of a violation of subsection (e) or because of actions by the employee on behalf of himself or others in furtherance of a prosecution under this section (including investigation for, initiation of, testimony for, or assistance in such a prosecution) may in a civil action, obtain all relief necessary to make such individual whole. Such relief shall include reinstatement with the same seniority status such individual would have had but for the discrimination, three times the amount of back pay, interest on the back pay, and compensation for any special damages sustained as a result of the discrimination, including reasonable litigation costs and reasonable attorney's fees.

"(2) An individual is not eligible for such relief if that individual participated in the violation of this section with respect to which such relief would be awarded.

"(3) A civil action or proceeding authorized by this subsection shall be stayed by a court upon the certification of an attorney for the Government, stating that such action or proceeding may adversely affect the interests of the Government in an ongoing criminal investigation or proceeding. The attorney for the Government shall promptly notify the court when the stay may be lifted without such adverse effects.

"(h) For purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'State' means a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and any other commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States;

"(2) the terms 'public official' and 'person who has been selected to be a public official' have the meaning set forth in section 201 of this title; the terms 'public official', and 'person who has been selected to be a public official' shall also include any person acting or pretending to act under color of official authority;

"(3) the term 'official' includes—

"(A) any person employed by, exercising any authority derived from, or holding any position in an Indian tribal government or the government of a State or any subdivision of the executive, legislative, judicial, or other branch of government thereof, including a department, independent establishment, commission, administration, authority, board, and bureau, and a corporation or other legal entity established and subject to control by a government or governments for the execution of a governmental or intergovernmental program;

"(B) any person acting or pretending to act under color of official authority; and

"(C) includes any person who has been nominated, appointed or selected to be an official or who has been officially informed that he or she will be so nominated, appointed or selected;

"(4) the term 'under color of official authority' includes any person who represents what he or she controls, is an agent of, or otherwise acts on behalf of an official, public official, and person who has been selected to be a public official; and

"(5) the term 'uses any facility of interstate or foreign commerce' includes the intrastate use of any facility that may also be used in interstate or foreign commerce.".

"SUBCHAPTER A—DEFINITIONS AND GENERAL PROVISIONS

"§ 3001. Definitions

"As used in this chapter—

"(a) 'claim' means amounts owing on account of direct loans or loans insured or guaranteed by the United States and all other amounts due the United States from or on account of fees, duties, leases, rents, services, sales of real or personal property, overpayments, fines, assessments, penalties, restitution, damages, interest, taxes, bail bond forfeitures, reimbursements and recovery of costs incurred and other sources of indebtedness. This definition includes amounts due the United States for the benefit of an Indian tribe or individual Indian.

"(b) 'Counsel for the United States' shall include for the purposes of this chapter, a United States attorney, an assistant United States attorney designated to act on behalf of the United States attorney, an attorney with the United States Department of Justice or other Federal agency having litigation authority and any private attorney authorized by contract to conduct litigation for collection of debts on behalf of the United States.

"(c) 'Court' means any court created by the Congress of the United States exclusive of the United States Tax Court.

"(d) 'Debt' means liability to the United States on a claim.

"(e) 'Debtor' means a person who is liable to the United States on a claim.

"(f) 'Debt collection personnel' means personnel employed by any agency of the Federal Government whose primary duties are the collection of the debts owed to the United States.

"(g) 'Disposable earnings' means that part of the earnings remaining after all deductions required by law have been withheld and 'nonexempt disposable earnings' means 25 per centum of disposable earnings.

"(h) 'Earnings' means compensation paid or payable for personal services, whether denominated as wages, salary, commission, bonus or otherwise, and includes periodic payments pursuant to a pension or retirement program.

"(i) 'Garnishee' means a person other than the debtor who has, or is thought to have, possession, custody or control of any property of the debtor, including obligations owed to the debtor whether such obligations are past due or have yet to become due, against whom a garnishment has been issued by the clerk of the court.

"(j) 'Judgment' means a judgment, order or decree entered in favor of the United States in any court whether arising from a civil or criminal proceeding regarding a claim.

"(k) 'Judgment creditor' means the United States in situations in which the United States has judgments in its favor, whenever referred to in this chapter.

"(l) 'Judgment debtor' means a person against whom the United States holds a judgment on a debt.

"(m) 'Person' includes a natural person, including individual Indians, a corporation, a partnership, an unincorporated association, a trust or an estate or other entity, public or private, including local governments and Indian tribes.

"(n) 'Prejudgment remedy' means the remedies of attachment, garnishment, replevin, receivership, sequestration, injunction or a combination of any of the foregoing that are sought prior to judgment.

"(o) 'Property' includes any present or future interest in real, personal (including, but not limited to, earnings, goods and choses in action), or mixed property, whether legal or equitable, tangible or intangible, vested or contingent, and wherever located and however held, whether held as a tenancy in common, joint tenancy, tenancy by the entirety, community property, in partnership, or in trust (including spendthrift and pension trusts), and excludes any property held in trust by the United States for the benefit of any Indian tribe or individual Indian or any Indian lands subject to restrictions against alienation imposed by the United States.

"(p) 'Service' under the provisions of this chapter shall be in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(q) 'State' includes the several states, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealths of Puerto Rico and the Northern Marianas and any of the territories and possessions of the United States.

"(r) 'United States' includes an officer or agency thereof, a Federal corporation, Federal instrumentality, department, commission, board or other Federal entity.

"(s) 'United States marshal' means the United States marshal, his designee or contractor.

"§ 3002. Rules of construction

"In this title—

"(a) 'includes' and 'including' are not limiting;

"(b) 'or' is not exclusive;

"(c) the singular includes the plural;

"(d) the provisions are general and intended as a unified coverage of the subject matter;

"(e) if any provision or amendment made by this chapter or application thereof to any person is held invalid, the provisions of every other part and their application shall not be affected thereby;

"(f) the cases arising under the provisions herein shall not affect cases arising under admiralty jurisdiction;

"(g) the provisions of this chapter do not and should not be construed to curtail or limit any rights the United States has to collect taxes under any other provision of Federal law;

"(h) the provisions of this chapter do not, and should not be construed to, curtail or limit any rights the United States has under any other provision of Federal law to collect any fine, penalty, assessment, restitution, or forfeiture arising in a criminal case; and

"(i) the provisions of this chapter do not, and should not be construed to, curtail or limit the rights the United States has under any other provision of Federal law to appoint receivers.

"§ 3003. Nationwide enforcement

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any writ, order, judgment, or other process, including a summons and complaint, filed under this chapter may be served in any State and may be enforced by the court issuing the writ, order, or process, regardless of where the person is served with the writ, order, or process.

"§ 3004. Priority of claims of the United States

"The priorities established by the various provisions of this chapter shall be superseded by the provisions of section 3713 of title 31, United States Code, when the debtor or, if deceased, his estate is insolvent as determined under that section and the priority of the United States shall be in accordance therewith.

"§ 3005. Claims of the United States not barred by State statute of limitations

"The United States shall not be barred by the statute of limitations of any State in the enforcement of any of its claims.

"§ 3006. Right of set-off or recoupment

"Except as specifically provided for in this chapter, nothing in this chapter shall be construed to affect the common law or statutory rights to set-off or recoupment.

"§ 3007. Discovery

"(a) The United States may have discovery from any person including the debtor regarding the financial condition of the debtor in any case in which the United States seeks to enforce a claim. Such discovery may be before judgment or after judgment is entered in the case and in the manner in which discovery is provided for in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(b) After judgment, the United States may also subpoena the judgment debtor or a third party to appear before the court at a location consistent with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure with all records, books and other documents and to answer under oath questions regarding the debtor's financial condition and ability to satisfy the judgment.

"(c) The court shall impose appropriate sanctions as provided by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or the court's contempt power, including arrest of the offending person or debtor, for failure to comply with these discovery procedures.

"§ 3008. Affidavit requirements

"Any affidavit required of the United States by this chapter may be made upon information and belief, where reliable and reasonably necessary, establishing with particularity, to the court's satisfaction, facts supporting the claim of the United States.

"§ 3009. Perishable property

"At any time during any proceedings, other than those under section 3103(a), the court may determine on its own initiative or upon motion of any party, that any seized or detained property, or any portion thereof, is likely to perish, waste, or be destroyed, or otherwise depreciate in value during the pendency of the proceedings. The court shall order the sale of the property or portion thereof and require the proceeds to be deposited with the clerk of the court. For purposes of liability on the part of the United States, the price paid at any such sale shall be conclusively presumed to be the fair market value.

"§ 3010. Immunity

"Counsel for the United States, but excluding any private attorneys authorized by contract to conduct litigation for collection of debts on behalf of the United States, and non-attorney debt collection personnel shall have absolute immunity in their individual and official capacities from any liability arising from errors, omissions or negligence in performance of their official debt collection duties.

"§ 3011. Proceedings before United States magistrates

"A district court of the United States may assign its duties in proceedings under this chapter to a United States magistrate to the extent not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States. A district court may adopt appropriate rules to carry out any such assignment.

"§ 3012. United States marshals' authority to designate keeper

"Whenever the United States marshal is authorized to seize property pursuant to the provisions of this chapter, the United States marshal shall be authorized to designate another person or Federal agency to hold for safekeeping such property seized.

"§ 3013. Co-owned property

"The remedies available to the United States under this chapter shall be enforced against property which is co-owned by a debtor and others to the extent allowed by the law of the State where the property is located.

"For the purposes of this section, 'property' does not include the rights or interest of an individual other than the debtor in a retirement system for Federal military or civilian personnel established by the United States or any agency thereof. A 'retirement system for Federal military or civilian personnel' means a pension or annuity system for Federal military or civilian personnel of more than one agency, or for some or all of such personnel of a single agency, established by statute or regulation pursuant to statutory authority.

"§ 3014. Assessment of charges on a claim

"The United States may assess on a claim a charge of 10 per centum of the amount of the claim to cover the cost of processing and handling the litigation and judicial enforcement of the claim.

"§ 3015. Funding

"It is hereby authorized that such sums be appropriated as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter. Appropriations authorized under this section shall remain available for obligations necessary to implement this chapter for one year.

"§ 3016. Investigative authority

"When the United States has reason to believe that an activity in violation of legal standards threatens to deprive it of a claim, the appropriate United States Attorney may commence a proceeding against named or unknown parties for the purpose of determining whether a claim for relief should be asserted under applicable law, and all discovery proceedings available under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedures shall be available in such proceeding.

"§ 3017. Subrogation

"When the United States asserts a claim against a debtor for sums alleged to be due the United States, the United States may name as an additional defendant then or by way of amendment of its complaint, any party reasonably believed to owe sums to the debtor arising out of the transaction or occurrence giving rise to the obligation to the United States, including but not limited to obligations on account of requirements to provide goods or services pursuant to a loan or loan guarantee extended pursuant to Federal law. If such party pays or is found liable, any amounts paid to the United States shall be credited to the account of the debtor.

"§ 3018. Effective date

"This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect one hundred and eighty days after the date of enactment and shall apply to all claims and debts owed to the United States and judgments in favor of the United States.

"SUBCHAPTER B—PREJUDGMENT REMEDIES

"SUBCHAPTER B—PREJUDGMENT REMEDIES

"§ 3101. Prejudgment remedies with prior notice

"(a) APPLICATION.—(1) The United States may in conjunction with the complaint or at any time after the filing of a civil action, make application, under oath, to the court to issue any prejudgment remedy allowed by law.

"(2) Such application shall be filed with the court and shall set forth the factual and legal basis for each prejudgment remedy sought.

"(3) Such application shall state that the party against whom any prejudgment remedy is sought shall be afforded an opportunity for a hearing.

"(b) GROUNDS.—Any prejudgment remedy may be issued in favor of the United States by any court of the United States on application before judgment when—

"(1) the application sets forth with particularity, that all statutory requirements for the issuance of such prejudgment remedy sought under this chapter have been complied with by the United States; and

"(2) the court finds that the United States has shown the probable success of its claim.

"(c) NOTICE; FORM OF NOTICE.—Upon the filing of an application, the clerk of the court shall issue a notice directed to any person against whom any prejudgment remedy would operate, substantially in the following form—

"NOTICE

"You are hereby notified that your [property] may be taken away from you by the United States, which says that you owe the United States a debt of $[amount]. The United States wants to take your property so that it can be sure you will pay if the court decides that you owe this money.

"If you do not want to have your property taken away, you may ask for a hearing before this court. You may ask for the hearing anytime within 20 days from the date that this notice was mailed as indicated below. The hearing, if you so demand, will take place within five working days after you notify the court, or as soon thereafter as is practicable. You may ask for the hearing by checking the box at the bottom of this notice and filing it with the court at the following address: [address of court]. You must also send a copy to counsel for the United States at [address], so that the United States knows that you want the hearing.

"At the hearing, the court will decide whether the claim against you is probably valid and whether other legal requirements have been met. In addition, there are certain exemptions under Federal law which you may be entitled to claim with respect to the property.

"If you do not check the box requesting a date for a hearing and take this notice to the court within twenty days, the court will automatically assume you do not want a hearing and you will lose your right to a hearing before the United States may take your property with the court's permission.

"If you have any questions concerning your rights or this procedure, you should consult an attorney.

"DATE OF MAILING:

"(d) SERVICE OF NOTICE AND APPLICATION.—(1) A copy of the notice and a copy of the application for issuance of any prejudgment remedy shall be served by counsel for the United States by first class mail on each party against whom any remedy is sought. If such service is not possible, then service may be made under rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, as appropriate.

"(2) Proof of service by mail may be made by affidavit or certification of mailing and shall set forth the actual date of mailing.

"(e) TIME TO REQUEST HEARING DATE; FORM OF REQUEST.—(1) Each person served with a copy of the notice set forth above and the application for any prejudgment remedy may request a date be set for the hearing on such application by filing with the clerk of the court within twenty days after service of the notice a written request for hearing date. The request for hearing shall be made by using the form provided or in some other writing. A copy of the request for hearing date shall be mailed by the person requesting the hearing to counsel for the United States.

"(2) The clerk of the court shall apprise counsel for the United States and the person requesting the hearing of the date of hearing.

"(f) WAIVER OF HEARING.—(1) If no request for hearing date is filed within the required time, counsel for the United States shall file an affidavit of default setting forth that service was made, that no request for hearing date was filed and that the party against whom any prejudgment remedy is sought has apparently waived any hearing. Counsel for the United States shall also file a proposed form of the written order requested. Upon filing of such affidavit, the clerk shall enter the order of waiver of record and any party so defaulted loses his right to a hearing prior to the issuance of the prejudgment remedy sought.

"(2) Upon entry of the order of waiver, the clerk shall immediately deliver the court file to the judge to whom the matter is assigned.

"(g) JUDICIAL REVIEW APPLICATION; ISSUANCE OF PREJUDGMENT REMEDIES WITH NOTICE.—(1) The court shall, within five days after hearing or the entry of the order of waiver, or as soon thereafter as is practical, review and examine all pleadings, evidence, affidavits and documents filed in the action to determine the following:

"(A) that evidence of service has been filed together with the original of the application and copy of notice;

"(B) where an order of waiver has been entered, that the affidavit of default has been filed and the order entered by the clerk;

"(C) that the claim or claims of the United States are based on facts established by the evidence or stated in the affidavit are sufficient to show that such claim or claims are probably valid; and

"(D) that any statutory requirement of this chapter for the issuance of any prejudgment remedy has been shown.

"(2) Upon the court's determination that the requirements of subsection (g)(1) have been met, the court shall issue all process sufficient to put into effect the prejudgment remedy sought.

"§ 3102. Prejudgment remedies without prior notice

"(a) GROUNDS.—Any prejudgment remedy may be issued by any court without prior notice to the person against whom it will operate when the United States has a reasonable cause to believe that—

"(1) the person against whom the prejudgment remedy is sought is about to leave the jurisdiction of the United States with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud the United States and has refused to secure that debt, or is a fugitive from justice;

"(2) such person has secreted or is about to secrete property;

"(3) such person has or is about to assign, dispose, remove, or secrete property, wholly or in part, or that such person is about to assign or dispose of property with the effect of hindering, delaying, or defrauding creditors;

"(4) the United States is the owner, lessor or otherwise is lawfully entitled to the immediate possession of the property claimed and is seeking a prejudgment remedy in the nature of replevin, receivership or sequestration;

"(5) a prejudgment remedy is required to obtain jurisdiction within the United States;

"(6) a constructive or resulting trust should be impressed on the property in favor of the United States if such person is likely to put the property beyond the reach of the United States;

"(7) the person against whom the prejudgment remedy is sought is converting, is about to convert or has converted his property of whatever kind, or some part thereof, into money, securities, or evidence of debt in a manner prejudicial to creditors;

"(8) the person against whom the prejudgment remedy is sought has evaded service of process by concealing himself or has temporarily withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the United States; or

"(9) the debt is due for property obtained illegally or by fraud.

"(b) APPLICATION; AFFIDAVIT; BOND; ISSUANCE OF WRIT.—(1) Contemporaneously with or at any time after the filing of a civil action, the United States shall file an application supported by an affidavit made upon information and belief, where reliable and reasonably necessary, establishing with particularity to the court's satisfaction facts supporting the probable validity of the claim and the right of the United States to recover what is demanded in the application. The application shall state the amount of the debt owed the United States, including principal, interest, and costs, if any, and one or more of the grounds set forth in section 3102(a) and the specific requirements of the specific remedy sought.

"(2) No bond is required of the United States.

"(3) Upon the court's determination that the requirements of subsection (b)(1) have been met, the court shall issue all process sufficient to put into effect the prejudgment remedy sought.

"(c) NOTICE AND HEARING; WAIVER OF HEARING.—(1) Upon filing of an application as provided in this section, the clerk shall issue notice in substantially the following form to the counsel for the United States for service upon the party against whom any prejudgment remedy is sought in accordance with subsection (3) of this section—

"NOTICE

"You are hereby notified that your [property] is being taken away from you by the United States, who says that you owe it a debt of $[amount]. The United States is taking your property because it says

[Insert one or more of the specific grounds set forth in section 3102(a).]

"In addition, you are hereby notified that there are certain exemptions under Federal law which you may be entitled to claim with respect to your property.

"If you disagree and think you do not owe the United States, or that you have not done what is stated above, then you can ask this court to hear your side of the story and give your property back to you. If you want such a hearing, it will be given to you within five working days if you so demand after you notify the court that you want one. To do so, check the box at the bottom of this notice or prepare your request in writing and mail it or take it to the clerk of the court at the following address: [address]. You must also send a copy to counsel for the United States at [address], so that the United States will know you want a hearing.

"If you do not request a hearing within thirty days from [date of issue] your property may be disposed of without further notice.

"You should consult a lawyer if you have any questions about your rights about this procedure.

"(2) When a prejudgment remedy is issued under this section, the person against whom it is sought may immediately move to quash such order and the court shall on the request of the debtor hear such motion within five days from the date the request was filed. The issues at such hearing shall be limited to—

"(A) the probable validity of the claim or claims of the United States and any defenses and claims of exemptions of the party against whom such prejudgment remedy will operate; and

"(B) the existence of any statutory requirement for the issuance of any prejudgment remedy sought, plus the existence of any ground set forth in section 3102(a) of this chapter.

"(3) Counsel for the United States shall, at the time of the seizure, attachment or garnishment, or within three days thereafter, exercise reasonable diligence to serve the person against whom a prejudgment remedy is sought with an application, order and prescribed notice of the seizure, impoundment or such other act ordered by the court and of said person's right to an immediate hearing contesting the same.

"(4) If no request for a hearing is filed with the clerk within thirty days after the notice of seizure is issued by the clerk, the United States may dispose of the property as provided for in this subchapter.

"§ 3103. Attachment

"(a) PROPERTY SUBJECT TO ATTACHMENT.—(1) All property of the debtor or garnishee, except earnings and property exempt under the provisions of this chapter, may be attached pursuant to a writ of attachment in any action in which a debt or damages are recoverable and may be held as security to satisfy such judgment and costs as the United States may recover.

"(2) The amount to be secured by an attachment shall be determined as follows—

"(A) the amount of the debt owed to the United States by the defendant; and

"(B) the estimated amount of interest and costs likely to be taxed by the court.

"(3) In any action or suit for an amount which is liquidated or ascertainable by calculation, no attachment shall be made for a larger sum than the amount of the debt and such additional amount as is reasonably necessary to provide for interest thereon and costs likely to be taxed in the action.

"(b) AVAILABILITY OF ATTACHMENT.—The United States after complying with the provisions of section 3101 or 3102 may, in the following cases, have the property of the defendant attached as security for satisfaction of any judgment which may be recovered by the United States—

"(1) in an action upon a contract, express or implied, for payment of money which is not fully secured by real or personal property, or, if originally so secured, the value of such security may, without any act of the United States or the person to whom the security was given, be substantially diminished below the amount of the debt;

"(2) when an action is pending for damages in tort and the defendant is about to dispose of or remove his property beyond the jurisdiction of the United States;

"(3) in an action for damages or upon contract, express or implied, against a defendant not residing within the jurisdiction of the United States; or

"(4) in an action to recover fines, penalties, or taxes.

"(c) ISSUANCE OF WRIT; CONTENTS.—(1) A writ of attachment shall be issued by the court directing the United States marshal of the district where the property is located to attach so much of the defendant's property as will be sufficient or is available to satisfy the debt of the United States.

"(2) Several writs of attachment may, at the option of the United States, be issued at the same time, or in succession, and sent to different districts until sufficient property is attached to satisfy the debt.

"(3) The writ of attachment shall contain—

"(A) the date of the issuance of the writ;

"(B) the court title and the docket number and name of the cause of action;

"(C) the name and last known address of the defendant;

"(D) the amount to be secured by the attachment; and

"(E) a reasonable description of the property to the extent available.

"(d) LEVY OF ATTACHMENT.—(1) The United States marshal receiving the writ shall proceed without delay to levy upon the property of the defendant found within his district, unless otherwise directed by counsel for the United States. The marshal shall not sell property unless ordered by the court.

"(2) In performing the levy, the United States marshal may enter onto the lands and into the residence or other buildings owned, occupied or controlled by the defendant. In cases where the writ is issued pursuant to section 3101, the marshal shall not enter into a residence or other building except upon specific order of the court.

"(3) When real property is levied upon, the United States marshal shall file a copy of the notice of levy in the same manner as provided for judgments in section 3202. The United States marshal shall also serve a copy of the writ and notice of levy upon the defendant in the same manner that a summons is served in a civil action and make his return thereof. If the United States marshal is unable to serve the writ upon the defendant, he shall post the writ and notice of levy in a conspicuous place upon the property and so make his return thereof.

"(4) Levy upon personal property is made by taking possession of it. Levy on personal property not easily taken into possession or which cannot be taken into possession without great inconvenience or expense, may be made by affixing a copy of the writ and notice of levy on it or in a conspicuous place in the vicinity of it describing in the notice of levy the property by quantity and with sufficient detail to identify the property levied upon. A copy of the writ and notice of levy shall also be served upon the defendant in the same manner that a summons is served in a civil action. Upon completion of the levy of personal property, the United States marshal shall so make his return thereof.

"(e) RETURN OF WRIT; DUTIES OF MARSHAL; FURTHER RETURN.—(1) A United States marshal executing a writ of attachment shall return the writ with his action endorsed thereon or attached thereto and signed by him, to the court from which it was issued within thirty days after the date of the levy.

"(2) The return shall describe the property attached with sufficient certainty to identify it, state the location where it was attached, when it was attached and the disposition made of the property. If no property was attached, the return shall so state.

"(3) When personal property has been replevied as authorized by section 3103(j), the United States marshal shall deliver the replevin bond to the clerk of the court to be filed in the action.

"(4) When the property levied on is claimed, replevied or sold after the return, the United States marshal shall immediately make a further return to the clerk of the court showing the disposition of the property.

"(f) LEVY OF ATTACHMENT AS LIEN ON PROPERTY; SATISFACTION OF LIEN.—(1) A levy on property under a writ of attachment creates a lien on the property in favor of the United States.

"(2) The levy of the writ of attachment upon any property of defendant subject thereto is a lien from the date of the levy on the real property and on such personal property as remains in the custody of the attaching United States marshal and on the proceeds of such personal property as is sold.

"(3) The lien in favor of the United States marshal shall be ranked ahead of any other security interests perfected after the time of levy and filing of a copy of the notice of levy pursuant to subsection (d)(3) of this section.

"(4) The lien shall arise from the time of levy and continue until a judgment in the case is obtained or denied, or the action is otherwise dismissed. The death of the defendant whose property is attached does not terminate the attachment lien. Upon issuance of a judgment in the action and registration under this chapter, the judgment lien so created relates back to the time of levy.

"(5) Upon entry of judgment for the United States, the court shall order the proceeds of the personal property, if any has been sold, to be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment, and also order the sale of any remaining personal property and the sale of any real property levied on to satisfy the judgment.

"(g) ATTACHMENT OF PERISHABLE PROPERTY; SALE; PROCEDURE.—(1) When personal property that has been attached is not replevied, the court may order it to be sold when it appears that the property is in danger of serious and immediate waste or decay, or that keeping it until trial will result in such expense or deterioration in value as substantially will lessen the amount likely to be realized therefrom.

"(2) In ascertaining whether the property is in danger of serious and immediate waste or decay or that keeping of the property until trial will result in such expense or deterioration in value as will substantially lessen the amount likely to be realized therefrom, the court may require or dispense with notice to the parties and may act upon such information provided by affidavit, certificate of the United States marshal or other proof, as appears sufficient to protect the interest of the parties.

"(h) DISPOSITION OF PROCEEDS OF SALE OF PERISHABLE PROPERTY; REPORT OF SALE.—Within five days after sale, the proceeds of the sale as provided in subsection 3103(g) after deduction of the United States marshal's expenses therefrom shall be paid by the United States marshal making the sale to the clerk of the court. The proceeds shall be accompanied by a statement in writing and signed by the United States marshal, to be filed in the action, stating the time and place of sale, the name of the purchaser and the amount received with an itemized account of expenses.

"(i) PRESERVATION OF PERSONAL PROPERTY UNDER ATTACHMENT.—If personal property in custody of the United States marshal under a writ of attachment is not replevied, claimed or sold, the court may make such order for its preservation or use as appears to be to the interest of the parties.

"(j) REPLEVIN OF ATTACHED PROPERTY BY DEFENDANT; BOND.—At any time before judgment, if the property has not previously been sold, defendant may replevy the property or any part thereof by giving a bond approved by counsel for the United States or the court and payable to the United States in double the amount of the debt.

"(k) JUDGMENT WHERE PERSONAL PROPERTY REPLEVIED.—When personal property under attachment has been replevied, the judgment which may be entered shall be against defendant and also against the sureties on his replevin bond for the amount of the judgment, interest and costs.

"(l) RESTORATION OF PROPERTY OR EXONERATION OF BOND; LEVY ON EXEMPT PROPERTY.—(1) If the attachment is vacated or if the judgment is for defendant, the court shall order the property or proceeds thereof restored to defendant or exonerate the replevin bond. The court may determine under what circumstances the defendant is entitled to receive the proceeds rather than the attached property.

"(2) When any property claimed to be exempt is levied upon, defendant may, at any time after such levy, apply to the court for vacation of such levy. If it appears to the court that the property so levied upon is exempt, the court shall order the levy vacated and the property returned to defendant.

"(m) REDUCTION OR DISCHARGE OF ATTACHMENT.—(1) If an excessive or unreasonable attachment is made, the defendant or person whose property has been attached may submit a written motion to the court which issued the writ for a reduction of the amount of the attachment or its discharge. Notice of such motion shall be served upon the United States in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The defendant may move for reduction or dissolution of attachment as appropriate.

"(2) The court shall order a part of the property to be released, if upon hearing the court finds that the amount of the attachment is excessive or unreasonable or where the attachment is for a sum larger than the liquidated or ascertainable amount of the debt plus an amount necessary to include interest and costs likely to be taxed.

"(3) The court shall dissolve the attachment if the amount of the debt is unliquidated and unascertainable by calculation.

"§ 3104. Garnishment

"(a) All prejudgment garnishments shall meet the requirements of sections 3101 and 3102.

"(b) All prejudgment garnishments as authorized by the court hereunder shall be issued and answered in the same manner and to the same extent as set forth in section 3306 with the following exceptions—

"(1) The writ shall specify the date that the order authorizing prejudgment garnishment was entered.

"(2) The writ shall specify the amount claimed by the United States.

"§ 3105. Injunctions

"Whether or not there are other remedies available to the United States under this chapter, nothing in this chapter shall be construed to preclude or otherwise limit the United States or any other party from obtaining injunctive relief under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in actions for debts owed the United States.

"§ 3106. Sequestration

"(a) APPLICATION FOR WRIT OF SEQUESTRATION AND ORDER.—If the United States claims in its complaint the right to title or possession of property or seeks to enforce a lien or security interest in such property, the United States may file an affidavit showing—

"(1) a description of the property sufficient to identify it;

"(2) the approximate value of the property;

"(3) the location of the real property, or in the case of personal property, the last known and likely locations of the property; or

"(4) the availability of sequestration.

"(b) AVAILABILITY OF SEQUESTRATION.—The United States after complying with, or in addition to, the provisions of sections 3101 or 3102 may have property sequestered—

"(1) upon a showing that there exists an immediate danger that the debtor or garnishee of such property will ill treat, waste, destroy or convert to his own use the property, which includes, but is not limited to, crops, timber, rents, perishable goods, livestock or the revenues therefrom; or

"(2) upon a showing that title to or possession of such property has been secured by the debtor or other defendant or the party in possession by surreptitious means, trick, scheme, fraud, force, violence, claim of adverse possession or such other claims or any means adverse to the claim in title or possession, or both, of the United States.

"(c) ISSUANCE OF WRIT.—A writ of sequestration shall be issued by the court directing the debtor or other defendant or party in possession to sequester the property and deliver it to the United States.

"(d) Unless inconsistent, the provisions governing section 3103 (g) through (l) shall be applicable to this section.

"(e) These writs shall be served in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"§ 3107. Replevin

"(a) APPLICATION FOR WRIT.—If the United States claims in its complaint the right to possession of specific personal property, the United States may, at any time after complying with the provisions of section 3101 or 3102, file an affidavit showing—

"(1) that the United States is the owner of the property claimed, or is lawfully entitled to its immediate possession;

"(2) a description of the property;

"(3) that the property is wrongfully detained by the defendant; or

"(4) the approximate value of the property.

"(b) SEIZURE.—If the court determines the United States has met the above requirements, it shall order that the United States marshal take possession of the specified property and deliver it to the United States.

"(c) REDELIVERY OF POSSESSION TO DEFENDANT.—The defendant may obtain redelivery of the property or any part thereof by giving bond as set forth in section 3103(j).

"§ 3108. Receivership

"(a) APPOINTMENT OF A RECEIVER.—The United States may apply for the appointment of a receiver for property in which it has an interest and which is or is to be the subject of an action in court. The application may be filed at any time prior to judgment or during the pendency of an appeal if there is a danger that the property will be removed from the jurisdiction of the court, lost, materially injured or damaged, mismanaged or the United States has otherwise established grounds for such relief under section 3101(a) or 3102(a). However when the security agreement so provides, a receiver shall be appointed without notice or without regard to adequacy of security. An application made by the United States when it is not already a party to the action constitutes an appearance in the action and the United States shall be joined as a party.

"(b) POWERS OF RECEIVER; EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL.—The court appointing a receiver may authorize him to take possession of real and personal property and sue for, collect and sell obligations upon such conditions and for such purposes as the court shall direct and to administer, collect, improve, lease, repair or sell such real and personal property, as the court shall direct. A receiver appointed to manage residential or commercial property shall have demonstrable expertise in the management of these types of property. Unless expressly authorized by order of the court, a receiver shall have no power to employ attorneys, accountants, appraisers, auctioneers or other professional persons. Upon motion of the receiver or a party, powers granted to a receiver may be expanded or limited. A receiver appointed under the terms of a security agreement shall be entitled to recover the rents and profits of the property covered by the security agreement as additional security and to pay them over to the United States in payment of any amount due arising from a default by the debtor.

"(c) UNITED STATES AS SECURED PARTY.—In the event of any default or defaults in paying the principal, interest, taxes, water, rents, or premiums of insurance required by the security instrument or in the event of a nonfinanced default or defaults, the United States in any action to foreclose the security interest shall be entitled, without notice and without regard to adequacy of any security for the debt, to the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits of the premises covered by the security interest, and the rents and profits of the premises are assigned to the United States as further security for the payment of the debts.

"(d) DURATION OF RECEIVERSHIP.—In an action to foreclose a security interest, the receivership shall terminate when the purchaser at the foreclosure sale takes lawful possession of the property unless the court directs otherwise. In all other actions, the receivership shall not continue past the entry of judgment unless the court orders it continued under section 3302(b) or unless the court otherwise directs its continuation.

"(e) ACCOUNTS; REQUIREMENT TO REPORT.—A receiver shall keep written accounts itemizing receipts and expenditures, describing the property and naming the depository of receivership funds and his accounts shall be open to inspection by any person having an apparent interest in the property. The receiver shall file reports at regular intervals as directed by the court and shall serve the United States with a copy thereof.

"(f) REMOVAL.—Upon motion of any party or upon its own initiative, the court which appointed the receiver may remove him at any time with or without cause.

"(g) PRIORITY.—If more than one court appoints a receiver, the receiver first qualifying under law shall be entitled to take possession, control or custody of the property.

"(h) COMMISSIONS OF RECEIVERS.—

"(1) GENERALLY.—A receiver is entitled to such commissions not exceeding 5 per centum of the sums received and disbursed by him as the court allows unless the court otherwise directs.

"(2) ALLOWANCE WHERE FUNDS DEPLETED.—If, at the termination of a receivership, there are no funds in the hands of a receiver, the court may fix the compensation of the receiver in accordance with the services rendered and may direct the party who moved for the appointment of the receiver to pay such compensation in addition to the necessary expenditures incurred by the receiver which remained unpaid.

"(3) PROCEDURE.—At the termination of a receivership, the receiver shall file a final accounting of the receipts and disbursements and apply for compensation setting forth the amount sought and the services rendered by him.

"3201. Judgment by confession.
"3202. Judgment lien.
"3203. Sale of property subject to judgment lien.
"3204. Interest on judgments.

"SUBCHAPTER C—JUDGMENTS; LIENS

"§ 3201. Judgment by confession

"(a) GENERAL PROVISION.—On application, a court may enter a judgment by confession in favor of the United States without the filing of a civil action for money due and owing.

"(b) VENUE.—The confession of judgment shall be filed in the district in which one or more of the defendants reside, can be found, are doing business at the time of the application, or in cases proceeding by in rem or quasi in rem jurisdiction where the property sought to be adjudicated is located.

"(c) STATEMENT BY DEFENDANT; CONTENTS.—Before a judgment by confession shall be entered, a sworn statement in writing shall be made and signed by the defendant after default and subsequent notice by the United States and filed with the court along with the application, stating—

"(1) the amount for which judgment may be entered and authorizing the entry of judgment;

"(2) the facts out of which the debt arose and that the amount confessed is justly due; and

"(3) that the person signing the statement understands that a judgment by confession allows the entry of judgment without further proceedings and authorizes enforced collection of the judgment.

"(d) ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.—The confession of judgment may be filed with the clerk of the court. The clerk shall enter a judgment for the amount confessed.

"(e) CONFESSION BY JOINT DEBTORS.—One or more joint debtors may confess a judgment for a joint debt due. Where all the joint debtors do not join in the confession, the judgment shall be entered and enforced against only those who confessed it. A confessed judgment against some of the joint debtors is not a bar to an action against the other joint debtors.

"(f) ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT BY CONFESSION.—Judgments by confession shall be enforced in the same manner as other judgments.

"§ 3202. Judgment lien

"(a) CREATION OF LIEN GENERALLY.—A judgment shall be a lien upon all real property of a judgment debtor upon filing a certified copy of the abstract of the judgment in the manner in which a notice of tax lien would be filed under section 6323(f) (1) and (2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

"(b) IN CRIMINAL CASES.—A judgment obtained by the United States in a criminal case shall create a lien as provided in sections 3565 and 3613 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

"(c) IN TAX CASES.—A judgment obtained by the United States in a tax case shall create a lien coextensive with any lien created prior to judgment under section 6321 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; if no lien was so created prior to the judgment, then the procedure in subsection (a) shall be followed.

"(d) AMOUNT OF LIEN.—A lien created hereunder is for the amount necessary to satisfy the judgment, including costs and interest.

"(e) PRIORITY OF LIEN.—A lien created hereunder shall have priority over any other lien or encumbrance which is perfected later in time. However, liens created under sections 3565 and 3613 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, regarding criminal judgments or under section 6321 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, regarding tax judgments shall have priority as otherwise provided by law.

"(f) DURATION OF LIEN; RENEWAL.—(1) A lien created hereunder is effective, unless satisfied, for a period of twenty years.

"(2) The lien may be renewed for one additional period of twenty years upon filing a notice of renewal in the same manner as the judgment was filed and shall relate back to the date the judgment was filed. The notice of renewal must be filed before the expiration of the first twenty-year period to prevent the expiration of the lien.

"(3) The duration and renewal of a lien created under sections 3565 and 3613 of title 18, United States Code, regarding criminal judgments, or a lien created under section 6321 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, regarding tax judgments shall be as otherwise provided by law.

"(g) RELEASE OF JUDGMENT LIEN.—A judgment lien shall be released upon the filing of a satisfaction of judgment or release of lien in the same manner as the judgment was filed to obtain the lien.

"(h) EFFECT OF LIEN UPON ELIGIBILITY FOR FEDERAL GRANTS, LOANS OR PROGRAMS.—Any person who has a judgment lien against his property for any debt to the United States shall not be eligible to receive any grant or loan which is made, insured, guaranteed or financed directly or indirectly by the United States or to receive funds directly from the Federal Government in any program, except funds to which such person is entitled as beneficiary, until the judgment is paid in full or otherwise satisfied. The agency responsible for such grants and loans may promulgate regulations to allow for waiver of this restriction on eligibility for such grants and loans.

"§ 3203. Sale of property subject to judgment lien

"Upon application to the court, the court may order the United States to sell pursuant to the provisions of sections 2001 and 2002 of title 28, United States Code, any real property subject to its judgment lien. This provision shall not preclude the United States from using an execution sale to sell real property subject to a judgment lien.

"§ 3204. Interest on judgments

"(a) Judgments for money, other than criminal or tax judgments, shall bear interest at the greater of—

"(1) the rate in an express contract or negotiable instrument, if the action was brought for the recovery of an amount due on the contract or negotiable instrument; or

"(2) the rate established by statute or regulation applicable to the debt owed;

"(3) the judgment interest rate established in accordance with this section.

"(b) The judgment interest rate, where applicable, shall be calculated from the date of the entry of the judgment, at a rate equal to 150 per centum of the coupon issue yield equivalent (as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury) of the average accepted auction price for the last auction of fifty-two-week United States Treasury bills settled immediately prior to the date of the judgment. The Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts shall distribute notice of that rate and any changes in it to all Federal courts.

"(c) Interest on judgments shall accrue daily from the date of entry of the judgment at the rate determined herein and shall be compounded annually to the date of payment.

"(d) Interest on tax judgments obtained under the Internal Revenue Code shall be allowed under section 6621 of such Code.

"(e) Interest on criminal judgments shall be allowed as provided in title 18, United States Code.

"(f) Nothing in this section shall preclude the assessment of prejudgment interest that is otherwise allowable by law.

"SUBCHAPTER D—POSTJUDGMENT REMEDIES

"§ 3301. Enforcement of judgments

"(a) A judgment may be enforced by any of the remedies set forth in this subchapter, and the court may issue other writs pursuant to section 1651 of title 28, United States Code, as necessary to supplement these remedies, subject to the provision of rule 81(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(b) The property of a judgment debtor which is subject to sale to satisfy the judgment may be sold by judicial sale, pursuant to sections 2001, 2002, and 2004 of title 28, United States Code, or by execution sale pursuant to section 3304(g) of this subchapter.

"§ 3302. Orders in aid of execution

"Where the judgment debtor has an ownership interest of any kind in property which is not exempt and cannot readily be attached or levied on by ordinary legal process, the United States is entitled to aid from the court by injunction or other appropriate order to reach the property to satisfy the judgment whether the property is located in the same district or other districts.

"(a) ORDER.—The court may order the property, together with all documents or records related to the property, that is in or subject to the possession or control of the judgment debtor or another person, to be turned over to the United States for execution or otherwise applied toward the satisfaction of the judgment. Where the judgment debtor or other person refuses to turn over the property, the court may enforce the order by proceedings for contempt or other appropriate order provided the judgment debtor or other person, as appropriate, is served with a copy of the order or has actual notice of the order.

"(b) RECEIVER.—The court may appoint a receiver of property where appropriate in accordance with section 3108 of this chapter.

"(c) SAME OR INDEPENDENT SUIT.—These proceedings may be brought by the United States in the same suit in which the judgment is rendered or in a new and independent suit.

"(d) COSTS.—Upon request, in a proceeding under this section, the United States shall recover from the judgment debtor 10 per centum of the reasonable costs. This provision shall apply to the extent that recovery of costs by the United States is not provided for under other applicable provisions of Federal law.

"§ 3303. Restraining notice

"(a) ISSUANCE; ON WHOM SERVED; FORM; SERVICE.—A restraining notice may be issued by the clerk of the court or counsel for the United States as officer of the court. It may be served upon any person, except the employer of a judgment debtor where the property sought to be restrained consists of earnings due or to become due to the judgment debtor. It shall be served personally in the same manner as a summons. It shall specify all of the parties to the action, the social security number of the judgment debtor, if known, the date the judgment was entered, the court in which it was entered, the amount of the judgment and the amount when due thereon, and the names of all parties against whom the judgment was entered. It shall set forth the requirements of subsection (b) below and shall state that disobedience is punishable as a contempt of court.

"(b) EFFECT OF RESTRAINT; PROHIBITION OF TRANSFER; DURATION.—(1) A judgment debtor who is served with a restraining notice shall not sell, assign, transfer or hypothecate any property, except as may be reasonably necessary for the maintenance or support of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor and if the debtor is engaged in business, as may be reasonably necessary for the payment of expenditures for the continuation, preservation, and operation of such business.

"(2) A person other than the judgment debtor who is served with restraining notice shall not—

"(A) repay any obligation to the judgment debtor;

"(B) return any property to the judgment debtor; or

"(C) sell, assign, transfer or hypothecate any property—

"(i) specifically described in the restraining notice;

"(ii) that the other person knows to be owned by the judgment debtor; or

"(iii) in which the other person could have reason to believe by the exercise of due diligence that the judgment debtor has an ownership interest.

"(3) The restraining notice shall remain in effect for one year from the date the notice is served, or until the judgment is satisfied or the restraining notice is vacated by order of the court, whichever occurs first.

"(c) DISCLOSURE.—The person upon whom a restraining notice is served, other than the judgment debtor, shall disclose to the counsel for the United States, in writing under oath within ten days after receipt of the restraining notice, the type or nature and value of such property of the judgment debtor as may be in his possession or custody. Upon such person receiving or acquiring property of the judgment debtor after receipt of a restraining notice, that person shall disclose to counsel for the United States, in writing under oath within seven days of receipt of the property, the type or nature and value of such property of the judgment debtor as may be in his possession or custody.

"(d) DISCOVERY.—Any discovery request under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure which accompanies this restraining notice and which seeks the disclosure of the type, nature and value of property of the judgment debtor must be responded to within ten days of service of the notice and discovery request or within ten days after property of the judgment debtor comes into the possession of the person served. Upon request, a reasonable extension may be granted.

"(e) SUBSEQUENT NOTICE.—Leave of court is required to serve more than one restraining notice upon the same person, other than the judgment debtor, with respect to the same judgment.

"(f) NOTICE TO JUDGMENT DEBTOR.—A copy of the restraining notice shall be mailed by first class mail by counsel for the United States to the judgment debtor within four days after the time of service of the restraining notice on a person other than the judgment debtor.

"§ 3304. Execution

"(a) PROPERTY SUBJECT TO EXECUTION.—All property which the judgment debtor possesses and in which the judgment debtor has an interest shall be subject to levy pursuant to a writ of execution; coowned property shall be subject to execution to the same extent as it is under the law of the State in which it is located. The judgment debtor must identify any property claimed to be exempt under the provisions of subchapter E.

"(b) EXECUTION LIEN.—A lien shall be created in favor of the United States on all property levied upon under a writ of execution and shall date from the time of the levy. This lien shall have priority over all subsequent liens and shall be for the amount due on the judgment. If the United States has a judgment lien, the execution lien shall relate back to the judgment lien date.

"(c) FORM OF WRIT OF EXECUTION.—

"(1) GENERAL REQUIREMENTS.—An execution writ shall specify the date that the judgment was entered, the court in which it was entered, the amount of the judgment if for money, the amount of the costs, and the sum actually due when the writ is issued, the amount of interest due, the rate of postjudgment interest, and the name of the party against whom the judgment was entered. The writ shall direct the United States marshal to satisfy the judgment out of all property, real and personal, of the judgment debtor not otherwise exempt pursuant to this chapter. An execution writ shall direct that only the property in which a named judgment debtor, who is not deceased, has an interest be levied upon or sold thereunder, and shall state the last known address of that judgment debtor.

"(2) EXCEPTION.—There shall be no requirement that personal property be levied upon and sold prior to levy and sale of real property of the judgment debtor.

"(3) EXECUTION FOR DELIVERY OF CERTAIN PROPERTY.—An execution issued upon a judgment for the delivery to the United States of the possession of personal property, or for the delivery of the possession of real property, shall particularly describe the property, and shall require the marshal to deliver the possession of the property to the United States.

"(4) EXECUTION FOR POSSESSION OR VALUE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.—If the judgment is for the recovery of personal property or its value, the writ shall command the marshal, in case a delivery thereof cannot be had, to levy and collect the value thereof for which the judgment was recovered, to be specified therein, out of any property of the party against whom judgment was rendered, liable to execution.

"(d) ISSUANCE.—(1) The clerk of any court where a judgment is docketed, entered or registered, upon written application of counsel for the United States, shall, and without other or further order of a judge of that court, forthwith issue writs of execution. The writs shall be addressed to "Any United States Marshal," and may be served and executed in any judicial district of the United States, but shall be returnable to the issuing court. The writ shall be signed by the clerk of the court issuing the writ.

"(2) Multiple writs may issue simultaneously, and successive writs may issue before the return date of a writ previously issued.

"(e) RECORDS OF UNITED STATES MARSHAL.—(1) The United States marshal receiving the execution shall endorse thereon the exact hour and day when he received it. If he receives more than one on the same day against the same person, he shall number them as received.

"(2) The United States marshal shall make a memorandum in writing of the date of every levy and specify the property upon which the levy has been made on the process or in an attached schedule. The memorandum or schedule shall also set forth the marshal's costs, expenses and fees.

"(f) LEVY OF EXECUTION.—(1) The United States marshal receiving the writ shall proceed without delay to levy upon the property of the debtor found within his district, unless otherwise directed by counsel for the United States.

"(2) In performing the levy, the United States marshal may enter onto the lands and into the residence or other buildings owned, occupied or controlled by the debtor.

"(3) When real property is levied upon, the United States marshal shall file a copy of the notice of levy in the same manner as provided for judgments in section 3202. The United States marshal shall also serve a copy of the writ and notice of levy upon the debtor in the same manner that a summons is served in a civil action and so make his return thereof. If the United States marshal is unable to serve the writ upon the debtor, he shall post the writ and notice of levy in a conspicuous place upon the property and so make his return thereof.

"(4) Levy upon personal property is made by taking possession of it. Levy on personal property not easily taken into possession or which cannot be taken into possession without great inconvenience or expense, may be made by affixing a copy of the writ and motion of levy on it or in a conspicuous place in the vicinity of it describing in the notice of levy the property by quantity and with sufficient detail to identify the property levied upon. A copy of the writ and notice of levy shall also be served upon the debtor in the same manner that a summons is served in a civil action. Upon completion of the levy of personal property, the United States marshal shall so make his return thereof.

"(5)(A) Real property subject to a security interest or conveyed in trust as security for any debt or contract may be levied upon and sold on execution against the interest of the judgment debtor, subject to such mortgage, and the terms and conditions thereof.

"(B) Personal property pledged, assigned or security for any debt or contract, may be levied upon and sold on complying with the conditions of the pledge, assignment or security interest.

"(g) EXECUTION SALE PROCEDURES.—

"(1) SALE OF REAL PROPERTY.—

"(A) Real property, or any interest therein, shall be sold for cash at public auction at the courthouse of the county, parish or city in which the greater part of the property is located or upon the premises or some parcel thereof.

"(B) The time and place of sale of real property, or any interest therein, under execution shall be advertised by the United States marshal, by publication of notice, once a week for at least three weeks prior to the sale, in at least one newspaper of general circulation in the county or parish where the property is located. The first of these publications shall appear not less than twenty-five days immediately preceding the day of sale. The notice shall contain a statement of the authority by which the sale is to be made, the time of levy, and the time and place of sale; it shall also contain a brief description of the property to be sold, sufficient to identify the property, such as a street address of the urban property, and the survey identification and location for rural property, but it shall not be necessary for it to contain field notes.

"(C) The United States marshal shall give written notice of public sale by personal delivery, or certified or registered mail, to persons and parties known to him to claim an interest in property under execution, including lienholders, coowners and tenants, at least twenty-five days prior to the day of sale, to the last known address of such persons or parties.

"(2) SALE OF CITY LOTS.—If the real property consists of several lots, tracts, or parcels in a city or town, each lot, tract, or parcel must be offered for sale separately, unless not susceptible to separate sale because of the character of improvements.

"(3) SALE OF RURAL PROPERTY.—If the real property is not located in a city or town, the debtor may divide the property into lots of not less than fifty acres or in such greater or lesser amounts as ordered by the court, furnish a survey of such prepared by a registered surveyor, and designate the order in which those lots shall be sold. When a sufficient number of lots are sold to satisfy the amount of the execution and costs of sale, the marshal shall stop the sale.

"(4) SALE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.—

"(A) Personal property levied on shall be offered for sale on the premises where it is located at the time of levy, or at the courthouse of the county, parish or city wherein it is located, or at some other place if, owing to the nature of the property, it is more convenient to exhibit it to purchasers at such place. Personal property susceptible of being exhibited shall not be sold unless it is present and subject to the view of those attending the sale, except shares of stock in corporations, and in cases, when by reason of the type or nature of the property, it is impractical to exhibit it, or where the debtor has merely an interest without the right to the exclusive possession, in which case the interest of the debtor may be sold and transferred without the presence of the property.

"(B) Notice of the time and place of the sales of personal property shall be given by posting notice thereof for ten days successively immediately prior to the day of sale at the courthouse of any county, parish, or city, and at the place where the sale is to be made, and by mailing a copy by registered or certified mail to the judgment debtor at his last known address, or by personal delivery.

"(5) POSTPONEMENT OF SALE.—The United States marshal may postpone an execution sale from time to time continuing the posting of notice and/or publication of the notice until the date to which the sale is postponed, and appending, at the foot of such notice of each successive postponement the following:

"The above sale is postponed until the _____ day of _____, 19___, at _____ o'clock ___ .M., _____, United States Marshal for the District of _____, by _____, Deputy, dated _____.

"(6) BIDDING REQUIREMENTS; LIABILITY OF BIDDER; RESALE.—

"(A) The United States marshal may require of any bidder at any sale a cash deposit of as much as 20 per centum of the sale price before the bid is received.

"(B) The cash deposit of any successful bidder at an execution sale shall be forfeited to the United States if he fails to comply with the terms of the sale; in addition, he shall be liable to the United States for all losses incurred by the United States at a subsequent sale of the same property. The liability for losses shall be limited to the difference between the amount of the deposit which was forfeited and the amount accepted by the United States as the highest bid by the defaulting bidder at the defaulted sale plus the costs of the defaulted sale. This liability shall be reduced by the amount the United States realizes from the subsequent sale, if any.

"(7) RESALE OF PROPERTY.—When the terms of the sale are not complied with by the bidder, the United States marshal shall proceed to sell the property again on the same day, if there is sufficient time; but if not, he shall readvertise and sell the property.

"(8) TRANSFER OF TITLE AFTER SALE.—

"(A) When the sale has been made and its terms complied with, the United States marshal shall execute and deliver any and all documents necessary to transfer ownership to the purchaser, without warranty, all the rights, titles, interest, and claims that the judgment debtor had in the property sold to the purchaser.

"(B) If the purchaser dies before execution and delivery of the documents needed to transfer ownership, the United States marshal shall execute and deliver them to the estate of the purchaser, and it shall have the same effect as if accomplished during the lifetime of the purchaser.

"(9) PURCHASER CONSIDERED INNOCENT PURCHASER WITHOUT NOTICE.—The purchaser of property sold under execution is considered to be an innocent purchaser without notice if the purchaser would have been considered an innocent purchaser without notice had the sale been made voluntarily and in person by the defendant.

"(10) NO RIGHT OF REDEMPTION.—The judgment debtor shall not be entitled to redeem the property after the execution sale.

"(11) DISTRIBUTION OF SALE PROCEEDS.—

"(A) The United States marshal shall first deliver to the judgment debtor, or his agent or attorney, such amounts to which he is entitled from the sale of partially exempt property as set forth in subchapter E of this chapter.

"(B) The United States marshal shall retain from the proceeds of a sale of property an amount equal to the reasonable expenses incurred in making the levy and keeping and maintaining the property.

"(C) The United States marshal shall deliver the balance of the money collected on execution to the counsel for the United States at the earliest opportunity.

"(D) If more money is received from the sale of the property than is sufficient to satisfy the executions held by the United States marshal, he shall pay forthwith the surplus to the judgment debtor or his agent or attorney.

"(h) REPLEVY.—(1) Any personal property taken in execution may be returned to the defendant by the United States marshal upon the delivery by the defendant to him of a bond or upon satisfaction of the judgment and any costs incurred in connection with scheduling the sale prior to the execution sale, payable to the United States, with two or more good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the United States marshal, conditioned upon the delivery of the property to the United States marshal at the time and place named in the bond, to be sold according to law, or for the payment to the United States marshal of a fair value thereof, which shall be stated in the bond.

"(2) Where property has been replevied, as provided above, the judgment debtor may sell or dispose of the property paying the United States marshal the stipulated value thereof.

"(3) In the case of the nondelivery of the property according to the terms of the delivery bond, and nonpayment of the value thereof, the United States marshal shall forthwith endorse the bond 'Forfeited' and return it to the clerk of the court from which the execution issued; whereupon, if the judgment remains unsatisfied in whole or in part, the clerk shall issue execution against the principal judgment debtor and the sureties on the bond for the amount due, not exceeding the stipulated value of the property, upon which execution no delivery bond shall be taken, which instruction shall be endorsed by the clerk on the execution.

"(i) DEATH OF JUDGMENT DEBTOR.—The death of the judgment debtor after a writ of execution is issued stays the execution proceedings, but any lien acquired by levy of the writ must be recognized and enforced by the court having jurisdiction over the estate of the deceased. The execution lien may be enforced against the executor, administrator, or personal representative of the estate of the deceased; or if there be none, against the heirs or devisees of the property of the deceased receiving same, but only to the extent of the value of the property coming to them.

"(j) WHEN EXECUTION NOT SATISFIED.—When the property levied upon does not sell for enough to satisfy the execution, the United States marshal shall proceed on the same writ of execution as to other property of the judgment debtor.

"(k) RETURN ON EXECUTION.—(1) The United States marshal shall make a written return on each writ of execution to the court from which the writ was issued and deliver a copy to counsel for the United States who requested the writ. It shall be returnable ninety days from the date of issuance unless counsel for the United States has specified an earlier date. The return shall be filed by the clerk of the court from which the writ was issued.

"(2) The United States marshal shall state concisely what was done in pursuance of the requirements of the writ.

"(3) The return shall be made forthwith if satisfied by the collection of the money, or if ordered by counsel for the United States, which order shall be noted on the return.

"§ 3305. Installment payment order

"Where it is shown that the judgment debtor is receiving or will receive money from any source or is attempting to impede the United States by rendering services without adequate compensation, upon motion of the United States and notice to the judgment debtor, the court may, if appropriate, order that the judgment debtor make specified installment payments to the United States. Notice of the motion shall be served on the judgment debtor in the same manner as a summons or by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested. In fixing the amount of the payments, the court shall take into consideration the reasonable requirements of the judgment debtor, any payments required to be made by the judgment debtor or deducted from the money he would otherwise receive in satisfaction of other judgments, the amount due on the judgment, and the amount being or to be received, or, if the judgment debtor is attempting to impede the United States by rendering services without adequate compensation, the reasonable value of the services rendered.

"Upon motion of the United States, and upon a showing that the debtor's financial circumstances have changed or that assets not previously disclosed by the debtor have been discovered, the court may increase the amount of payments or alter their frequency or require full payment.

"§ 3306. Garnishment

"(a) GENERAL.—A court may issue writs of garnishment, either prejudgment or postjudgment against the property of a debtor which is in the possession, custody or control of a third person in order to satisfy a judgment against the debtor; coowned property shall be subject to garnishment to the same extent as it is under the law of the States in which it is located. The United States may request and a court shall issue simultaneous separate writs of garnishment to several garnishees. All writs of garnishment issued pursuant to these provisions shall be continuing and shall terminate only as provided herein.

"(b) WRIT.—

"(1) GENERAL REQUIREMENTS.—The United States shall include in its application for a writ of garnishment, the following:

"(A) any matters required by section 3104 when seeking prejudgment garnishment;

"(B) the debtor's name, social security number, if known, and the debtor's last known address;

"(C) the nature and amount of the debt alleged to be owed and that demand on the debtor for payment of the debt has been made, but the debtor has not paid the amount due. A money judgment must be alleged for postjudgment garnishment; and

"(D) that the garnishee is believed to be indebted to the debtor or have possession of property of the debtor.

"(2) PROPER GARNISHEE FOR PARTICULAR PROPERTY.—

"(A) Where property consists of a right to or share in the stock of an association or corporation, or interests or profits therein, for which a certificate of stock or other negotiable instrument is not outstanding, the corporation, or the president or treasurer of the association, shall be the garnishee.

"(B) Where property consists of a right to or interest in a decedent's estate or any other property or fund held or controlled by a personal representative or fiduciary, the personal representative or fiduciary shall be the garnishee.

"(C) Where property consists of an interest in a partnership, any partner other than the debtor, shall be the garnishee on behalf of the partnership.

"(D) Where property or a debt is evidenced by a negotiable instrument for the payment of money, a negotiable document of title or a certificate of stock of an association or corporation, the instrument, document or certificate shall be treated as property capable of delivery and the person holding it shall be the garnishee; except that in the case of a security which is transferable in the manner set forth in State law, the firm or corporation which carries on its books an account in the name of the debtor in which is reflected such security, shall be the garnishee: Provided, however, That if such security has been pledged, the pledgee shall be the garnishee.

"(c) ISSUANCE OF WRIT.—

"(1) CLERK'S REVIEW.—The clerk or the court shall review the application for postjudgment writs of garnishment and if it meets the requirements set forth herein, shall issue an appropriate writ. The clerk shall issue prejudgment writs of garnishment as authorized by the court.

"(2) FORM OF WRIT.—

"(A) GENERAL PROVISIONS.—The writ shall state—

"(i) The nature and amount of the debt. If interest is accruing, the rate of accrual thereafter shall be stated. If a judgment is involved, the amount of any costs included in the judgment should be stated.

"(ii) The name and address of the garnishee.

"(iii) The name and address of counsel for the United States.

"(iv) The last known mailing address of the debtor.

"(v) That the garnishee shall answer the writ within ten days of service of the writ.

"(B) EARNINGS GARNISHMENT.—The United States may apply for garnishment of the nonexempt disposable earnings of a natural person. The writ for the garnishment of earnings shall direct the garnishee to withhold and retain the nonexempt earnings for which the garnishee is indebted to the debtor at the time of receipt of the writ and may thereafter become indebted to the debtor pending further order of the court.

"(C) GARNISHMENT OF OTHER PROPERTY.—As to all non-earnings property of a debtor who is a natural person and all property of other debtors in the possession, custody and control of the garnishee at the time the writ is received by the garnishee and anytime thereafter, the writ shall direct the garnishee to retain possession, custody and control of and not to transfer or return the property pending further order of the court.

"(D) SERVICE OF WRIT.—The United States may serve the garnishee with a copy of the writ by first class mail or by delivery by the United States marshal as provided by rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The United States shall, at the same time, serve the debtor with a copy of the writ by first class mail to the debtor's last known address; counsel for the United States shall certify to the court that this service was made. The writ of garnishment shall be accompanied by instructions explaining the requirement that the garnishee submit a written answer to the writ of garnishment and instructions to the debtor for objecting to the answer of the garnishee and for obtaining a hearing on the objections.

"(E) ANSWER OF THE GARNISHEE.—In its written answer to the writ of garnishment, the garnishee shall state under oath whether it is indebted to the debtor or has custody, control or possession of the debtor's property; a description of the indebtedness or property; whether the indebtedness or property is subject to any prior garnishments or levies and a description of any such claim; and whether the indebtedness or property is subject to any exemptions from garnishment. In addition, if the writ of garnishment is against the earnings of the debtor, the garnishee shall state whether the debtor was employed at the time the writ was received, and, if so, how much was owed at the time; and whether the garnishee anticipates owing earnings to the debtor in the future, and, if so, the amount and whether the pay period will be weekly or another specified period. In all cases, the garnishee shall file the original answer with the court issuing the writ and serve a copy on the debtor and counsel for the United States. Any garnishee, including a corporation, may file an answer without the representation of an attorney.

"(F) OBJECTIONS TO ANSWER.—Within twenty days after receipt of the answer, the debtor and the United States may file a written objection to the answer and request a hearing on the objection. The party objecting must state the grounds for the objection and bears the burden of proving them. A copy of the objection and request for hearing shall be served on the garnishee and the other party. The court shall set a hearing within ten days after the date the request was received by the court, or as soon thereafter as is practicable, and give notice of the date to all parties.

"(G) GARNISHEE'S FAILURE TO ANSWER OR PAY.—If a garnishee fails to answer or pay within the time specified, the United States may petition the court for an order requiring the garnishee to appear before the court to answer the writ or pay by the appearance date. If the garnishee fails to appear or does appear and fails to show good cause why he failed to comply with the garnishment writ, the court shall enter judgment against the garnishee for the full amount of the past debt owed by the debtor. The court shall award reasonable attorney's fees to the United States and against the garnishee if the writ has not been answered within the time specified therein and a petition requiring the garnishee to appear was filed as provided in this section. Failure to answer or pay within the time specified in the writ may also be punished as a contempt of the court.

"(H) DISPOSITION ORDER.—After the garnishee files its answer and if no hearing is required, the court shall promptly enter an order directing the garnishee as to the disposition of the debtor's property. If a hearing is required, the order shall be entered within five days of the hearing, or as soon thereafter as is practicable.

"(I) PRIORITIES.—Court orders and garnishments for the support of a person shall have priority over a writ of garnishment issued pursuant to these provisions. As to any other garnishment or levy, a garnishment issued pursuant to these provisions shall have priority over those which are later in time and shall be satisfied in the order in which the writs are served upon the garnishee.

"(J) ACCOUNTING.—The debtor or garnishee may request an accounting on a garnishment within ten days after the garnishment terminates. The United States shall give a written accounting to the debtor and garnishee of all earnings and property it receives under a writ of garnishment within twenty days after it receives the request of the debtor or garnishee. Within ten days after the accounting is received, the debtor or garnishee may file a written objection to the accounting and a request for hearing. The party objecting must state grounds for the objection. The court shall set a hearing on the objection within ten days after the court receives the request for a hearing, or as soon thereafter as is practicable.

"(K) DISCHARGE OF GARNISHEE'S OBLIGATION.—A garnishee shall be discharged as set forth in section 3311 of this subchapter.

"(L) TERMINATION OF GARNISHMENT.—A garnishment proceeding hereunder can be terminated by—

"(i) the court quashing the writ of garnishment;

"(ii) exhaustion of earnings or property in the possession, custody or control of the garnishee, unless the garnishee reinstates or reemploys the debtor within ninety days of dismissal or resignation; or

"(iii) satisfaction of the debtor's obligation to the United States.

"§ 3307. Modification or protective order; supervision of enforcement

"Within the provisions of this chapter, the court may at any time on its own initiative or the motion of any interested person, and upon such notice as it may require, make an order denying, limiting, conditioning, regulating, extending or modifying the use of any enforcement procedure.

"§ 3308. Power of court to punish for contempt

"A court shall have power to punish a civil or criminal contempt committed with respect to an enforcement procedure or order under this chapter.

"§ 3309. Arrest of judgment debtor

"Upon motion of the judgment creditor without notice, where it is shown by affidavit or otherwise that the judgment debtor is about to depart from the jurisdiction of the United States, or keeps himself concealed therein with intent to hinder, delay or defraud the judgment creditor, and that there is reason to believe that the judgment debtor has in his possession or custody nonexempt property in which he has an interest, the court may issue a warrant directed to the United States marshal to arrest the judgment debtor forthwith and bring him before the court. The United States marshal shall serve upon the judgment debtor a copy of the warrant and supporting documents at the time of arrest. When the judgment debtor is brought before the court, the court may order that he give a bond or undertaking in a sum to be fixed by the court, that he will appear before the court for examination and that he will obey the terms of a restraining notice contained in the order.

"§ 3310. Discharge

"A person who pursuant to an execution or order pays or delivers to the United States, a United States marshal or receiver, money or other personal property in which a judgment debtor has or will have an interest, or so pays a debt he owes the judgment debtor, is discharged from his obligation to the judgment debtor to the extent of the payment or delivery.

"SUBCHAPTER E—EXEMPT PROPERTY

"Sec.
"3401. Exempt property.
"3402. Limitation on exempt property.

"SUBCHAPTER E—EXEMPT PROPERTY

"§ 3401. Exempt property

"Except as provided under section 3402, the following property of natural persons shall be exempted from the enforcement procedures under the provisions of this chapter as to debts owed the United States—

"(a) the debtor's aggregate interest, not to exceed $7,500 in value in real property or personal property that the debtor or a dependent of the debtor uses as a residence, in a cooperative that owns property that the debtor uses as a residence, or in a burial plot for the debtor or a dependent of the debtor;

"(b) the debtor's interest, not to exceed $1,200 in value, in one motor vehicle;

"(c) the debtor's interest, not to exceed $200 in value in any particular item or $4,000 in aggregate value, in household furnishings, household goods, wearing apparel, appliances, books, animals, crops, or musical instruments, that are held primarily for the personal, family or household use of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor;

"(d) the debtor's aggregate interest, not to exceed $500 in value, in jewelry held primarily for the personal, family or household use of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor;

"(e) the debtor's aggregate interest in any property, not to exceed in value $400 plus up to $3,750 of any unused amount of the exemption provided under subsection (a) of this subsection;

"(f) any unmatured life insurance contract owned by the debtor, other than a credit life insurance contract;

"(g) the debtor's aggregate interest, not to exceed in value $4,000 less any amount of property of the estate transferred in the manner specified in section 542(d) of title 11, in any accrued dividend or interest under, or loan value of, any unmatured life insurance contract owned by the debtor under which the insured is the debtor or an individual of whom the debtor is a dependent;

"(h) the debtor's aggregate interest, not to exceed $750 in value in any implements, professional books or tools of the trade of the debtor or the trade of a dependent of the debtor;

"(i) professionally prescribed health aids for the debtor or a dependent of the debtor;

"(j) the debtor's right to receive—

"(1) a social security benefit, unemployment compensation, or a local public assistance benefit;

"(2) a veterans' benefit;

"(3) a disability, illness including Medicaid and Medicare, or unemployment benefit, and Aid to Families With Dependent Children benefits;

"(4) alimony, child and spousal support or separate maintenance paid or received, to the extent reasonably necessary for the support of the debtor and any dependent of the debtor;

"(5) a payment under a stock bonus, pension, profit-sharing, annuity, or similar plan or contract on account of illness, disability, death, age, or length of service, to the extent reasonably necessary for the support of the debtor and any dependent of the debtor, unless—

"(A) such plan or contract was established by or under the auspices of an insider that employed the debtor at the time the debtor's rights under such plan or contract arose;

"(B) such payment is on account of age or length of service; and

"(C) such plan or contract does not qualify under section 401(a), 403(a), 403(b), 408, or 409 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 401(a), 403(a), 403(b), 408, or 409).

"(k) the debtor's right to receive, or property that is traceable to—

"(1) an award under a crime victim's reparation law;

"(2) a payment on account of the wrongful death of an individual of whom the debtor was a dependent, to the extent reasonably necessary for the support of the debtor and any dependent of the debtor;

"(3) a payment under a life insurance contract that insured the life of an individual of whom the debtor was a dependent on the date of such individual's death, to the extent reasonably necessary for the support of the debtor and any dependent of the debtor;

"(4) a payment, not to exceed $7,500, on account of personal bodily injury, not including pain and suffering or compensation for actual pecuniary loss, of the debtor or an individual of whom the debtor is a dependent; or

"(5) a payment in compensation of loss of future earnings of the debtor or an individual of whom the debtor is or was a dependent, to the extent reasonably necessary for the support of the debtor and any dependent of the debtor.

"§ 3402. Limitations on exempt property

"(a) Property upon which a judgment debtor has voluntarily granted a lien, shall not be exempt to the extent of the balance due on the debt secured thereby.

"(b) If, within ninety days prior to judgment or thereafter, the debtor has transferred non-exempt property and as a result acquires, improves or increases in value exempt property, his interest shall not be exempt to the extent of the increased value.

"(c) The United States may require the judgment debtor to file a statement with regard to each claimed exemption; the original shall be filed with the court in which the enforcement proceeding is pending, and a copy served upon counsel for the United States. The statement shall be under oath and shall describe each item of property for which exemption is claimed, the value and the basis for such valuation, and the nature of the judgment debtor's ownership interest.

"(d) The United States, by application to the court where an enforcement proceeding is pending, may request a hearing on the applicability of any exemption claimed by the judgment debtor. The court shall determine whether the judgment debtor is entitled to the exemption claimed and the value of the property with respect to which the exemption is claimed; unless the court finds that it is reasonably evident that the exemption applies, the judgment debtor shall bear the burden of going forward with evidence and of persuasion.

"(e) Assertion of an exemption shall not prevent seizure and sale of the property to which such exemption applies. However, where an exemption has been validly and properly asserted, the sale proceeds for that item of property must be applied first to satisfy the dollar value of the exemption and then to the balance of the judgment. Any excess remaining after payment of judgment shall be paid to the judgment debtor.

"SUBCHAPTER F—FRAUDULENT TRANSFERS

"§ 3501. Definitions

"As used in this subchapter—

"(a) 'Affiliate' means—

"(1) a person who directly or indirectly owns, controls, or holds with power to vote, 20 per centum or more of the outstanding voting securities of the debtor other than a person who holds the securities—

"(A) as a fiduciary or agent without sole discretionary power to vote the securities; or

"(B) solely to secure a debt, if the person has not exercised the power to vote;

"(2) a corporation 20 per centum or more of whose voting securities are directly or indirectly owned, controlled, or held with power to vote, by the debtor or a person who directly or indirectly owns, controls, or holds, with power to vote, 20 per centum or more of the outstanding voting securities of the debtor, other than the person who holds the securities—

"(A) as a fiduciary or agent without sole power to vote the securities;

"(B) solely to secure a debt, if the person has not in fact exercised the power to vote;

"(C) a person whose business is operated by the debtor under a lease or other agreement, or a person substantially all of whose assets are controlled by the debtor; or

"(D) a person who operates the debtor's business under a lease or other agreement or controls substantially all of the debtor's assets.

"(b) 'Asset' means property of a debtor, but does not include—

"(1) property to the extent it is encumbered by a valid lien; or

"(2) property to the extent it is exempt under subchapter E of this chapter.

"(c) 'Insider' includes—

"(1) if the debtor is an individual—

"(A) a relative of the debtor or of a general partner of the debtor;

"(B) a partnership in which the debtor is a general partner;

"(C) a general partner in a partnership described in subsection (c)(1)(B); or

"(D) a corporation of which the debtor is a director, officer, or person in control.

"(2) if the debtor is a corporation—

"(A) a director of the debtor;

"(B) an officer of the debtor;

"(C) a person in control of the debtor;

"(D) a partnership in which the debtor is a general partner;

"(E) a general partner in a partnership described in subsection (c)(2)(D); or

"(F) a relative of a general partner, director, officer, or person in control of the debtor.

"(3) if the debtor is a partnership—

"(A) a general partner in the debtor;

"(B) a relative of a general partner in, a general partner of, or a person in control of the debtor;

"(C) another partnership in which the debtor is a general partner;

"(D) a general partner in a partnership described in subsection (c)(3)(C); or

"(E) a person in control of the debtor.

"(4) an affiliate, or an insider of an affiliate as if the affiliate were the debtor; and

"(5) a managing agent of the debtor.

"(d) 'Lien' means a charge against or an interest in property to secure payment of a debt or performance of an obligation, and includes a security interest created by agreement, a judicial lien obtained by legal or equitable process or proceeding, a common law lien, or a statutory lien.

"(e) 'Relative' means an individual related by consanguinity within the third degree as determined by the common law, a spouse, or an individual related to a spouse within the third degree as so determined, and includes an individual in an adoptive relationship within the third degree.

"(f) 'Transfer' means every mode, direct or indirect, absolute or conditional, voluntary or involuntary, of disposing of or parting with an asset or an interest in an asset, and includes payment of money, release, lease, and creation of a lien or other encumbrance.

"(g) 'Valid lien' means a lien that is effective against the holder of a judicial lien subsequently obtained by legal or equitable process or proceedings.

"§ 3502. Insolvency

"(a) A debtor is insolvent if the sum of the debtor's debts is greater than all of the debtor's assets at a fair valuation.

"(b) A debtor who is generally not paying his debts as they become due is presumed to be insolvent.

"(c) A partnership is insolvent under subsection (a) if the sum of the partnership's debts is greater than the aggregate, at a fair valuation, of all of the partnership's assets and the sum of the excess of the value of each general partner's nonpartnership assets over the partner's nonpartnership debts.

"(d) Assets under this section do not include property that has been transferred, concealed, or removed with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors or that has been transferred in a manner making the transfer voidable under this subchapter.

"(e) Debts under this section do not include an obligation to the extent it is secured by a valid lien on property of the debtor not included as an asset.

"§ 3503. Value

"(a) Value is given for a transfer or an obligation if, in exchange for the transfer or obligation, property is transferred or an antecedent debt is secured or satisfied, but value does not include an unperformed promise made otherwise than in the ordinary course of the promisor's business to furnish support to the debtor or another person.

"(b) For the purposes of sections 3504(a)(2) and 3507, a person gives a reasonably equivalent value if the person acquires an interest of the debtor in an asset pursuant to a regularly conducted, noncollusive foreclosure sale or execution of a power of sale for the acquisition or disposition of the interest of the debtor upon default under a mortgage, deed of trust, or security agreement.

"(c) A transfer is made for present value if the exchange between the debtor and the transferee is intended by them to be contemporaneous and is in fact substantially contemporaneous.

"§ 3504. Transfer fraudulent as to the United States on present and future claims

"(a) A transfer made or obligation incurred by a debtor is fraudulent as to the United States, whether its claim arose before or after the transfer was made or the obligation was incurred, if the debtor made the transfer or incurred the obligation—

"(1) with actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud the United States or any other creditor of the debtor; or

"(2) without receiving a reasonably equivalent value in exchange for the transfer or obligation, and the debtor—

"(A) was engaged or was about to engage in a business or a transaction for which the remaining assets of the debtor were unreasonably small in relation to the business or transaction; or

"(B) intended to incur, or believed or reasonably should have believed that he would incur, debts beyond his ability to pay as they became due.

"(b) In determining actual intent under subsection (a)(1), consideration may be given, among other factors, to whether—

"(1) the transfer or obligation was to an insider;

"(2) the debtor retained possession or control of the property transferred after the transfer;

"(3) the transfer or obligation was disclosed or concealed;

"(4) before the transfer was made or obligation was incurred, the debtor had been sued or threatened with suit;

"(5) the transfer was of substantially all of the debtor's assets;

"(6) the debtor absconded;

"(7) the debtor removed or concealed assets;

"(8) the value of the consideration received by the debtor was reasonably equivalent to the value of the asset transferred or the amount of the obligation incurred;

"(9) the debtor was insolvent or became insolvent shortly after the transfer was made or the obligation was incurred;

"(10) the transfer occurred shortly before or shortly after a substantial debt was incurred; and

"(11) the debtor transferred the essential assets of the business to a lienor who transferred the assets to an insider of the debtor.

"§ 3505. Transfer fraudulent as to the United States on a present claim

"(a) A transfer made or obligation incurred by a debtor is fraudulent as to the United States on its claims which arose before the transfer was made or the obligation was incurred if the debtor made the transfer or incurred the obligation without receiving a reasonably equivalent value in exchange for the transfer or obligation and the debtor was insolvent at the time or the debtor became insolvent as a result of the transfer or obligation.

"(b) A transfer made by a debtor is fraudulent as to the United States on its claim which arose before the transfer was made if the transfer was made to an insider for an antecedent debt, the debtor was insolvent at the time, and the insider had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent.

"§ 3506. When transfer is made or obligation is incurred

"For the purposes of this subchapter—

"(a) A transfer is made—

"(1) with respect to an asset that is real property, other than a fixture, but including the interest of a seller or purchaser under a contract for the sale of the asset, when the transfer is so far perfected that a good-faith purchaser of the asset from the debtor against whom applicable law permits the transfer to be perfected cannot acquire an interest in the asset that is superior to the interest of the transferee; and

"(2) with respect to an asset that is not real property or that is a fixture, when the transfer is so far perfected that the United States on a simple contract cannot acquire a judicial lien otherwise than under this subchapter that is superior to the interest of the transferee.

"(b) If applicable law permits the transfer to be perfected as approved in subsection (a) and the transfer is not so perfected before the commencement of an action for relief under this subchapter, the transfer is deemed made immediately before the commencement of the action.

"(c) If applicable law does not permit the transfer to be perfected as provided in subsection (a), the transfer is made when it becomes effective between the debtor and the transferee.

"(d) A transfer is not made until the debtor has acquired rights in the asset transferred.

"(e) An obligation is incurred—

"(1) if oral, when it becomes effective between the parties; or

"(2) if evidenced by a writing, when the writing was executed by the obligor is delivered to or for the benefit of the obligee.

"§ 3507. Remedies of the United States

"(a) In an action for relief against a transfer or obligation under this subchapter, the United States, subject to the limitations in section 3508, may obtain, subject to applicable principles of equity and in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure—

"(1) avoidance of the transfer or obligation to the extent necessary to satisfy the claim of the United States;

"(2) an attachment or other remedy against the asset transferred or other property of the transferee in accordance with the procedure described by this chapter.

"(b) If the United States has obtained a judgment on a claim against the debtor, if the court so orders, it may levy execution on the asset transferred or its proceeds.

"§ 3508. Defenses, liability and protection of transferee

"(a) A transfer or obligation is not voidable under section 3504(a) against a person who took in good faith and for a reasonably equivalent value or against any subsequent transferee or obligee.

"(b) Except as otherwise provided in this section, to the extent a transfer is voidable in an action by the United States under section 3507(a)(1), it may recover judgment for the value of the asset transferred, as adjusted under subsection (c), or the amount necessary to satisfy its claim, whichever is less. The judgment may be entered against—

"(1) the first transferee of the asset or the person for whose benefit the transfer was made; or

"(2) any subsequent transferee other than a good faith transferee who took for value or from any subsequent transferee.

"(c) If the judgment under subsection (b) is based upon the value of the asset transferred, the judgment must be for an amount equal to the value of the asset at the time of the transfer, subject to adjustment as the equities may require.

"(d) Notwithstanding voidability of a transfer or an obligation under this subchapter, a good-faith transferee or obligee is entitled, to the extent of the value given the debtor for the transfer or obligation, to—

"(1) a lien on or a right to retain any interest in the asset transferred;

"(2) enforcement of any obligation incurred; or

"(3) a reduction in the amount of the liability on the judgment.

"(e) A transfer is not voidable under section 3504(a)(2) or section 3505 if the transfer results from—

"(1) termination of a lease upon default by the debtor when the termination is pursuant to the lease and applicable law; or

"(2) enforcement of a security interest in compliance with article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code or its equivalent in effect in the jurisdiction where the property is located.

"(f) A transfer is not voidable under section 3505(b)—

"(1) to the extent the insider gave new value to or for the benefit of the debtor after the transfer was made unless the new value was secured by a valid lien;

"(2) if made in the ordinary course of business or financial affairs of the debtor and the insider, or

"(3) if made pursuant to a good-faith effort to rehabilitate the debtor and the transfer secured present value given for that purpose, as well as an antecedent debt of the debtor.

"§ 3509. Supplementary provision

"Unless displaced by the provisions of this subchapter, the principles of law and equity, including the law merchant and the law relating to principal and agent, fraud, misrepresentation, duress, coercion, mistake, insolvency, or other validating or invalidating cause, supplement its provisions.

"SUBCHAPTER G—PARTITION

"SUBCHAPTER G—PARTITION

"§ 3601. Action by United States for partition

"(a) The United States, as co-owner or claimant of real or personal property, or an interest therein, may compel a partition of the property among the co-owners and tenants.

"(b) The district court shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action brought by the United States for the partition of property. The action for partition shall be filed in the judicial district in which the property, or a part thereof, is located. An action in a State court in which the United States is a defendant and in which the United States seeks partition may be removed to the district court.

"(c) The United States shall file a complaint stating—

"(1) the name and residence, if known, of each co-owner or claimant to such property;

"(2) the share of interest, if known, of each coowner or claimant in such property;

"(3) a description of the property sought to be partitioned; and

"(4) the estimated value of the property for which partition is sought.

"§ 3602. Service of process in partition action

"(a) Personal service of summonses and complaints and other process shall be made in accordance with rules 4 (c) and (d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure upon a defendant who resides within the United States or its territories or insular possessions and whose residence is known.

"(b) Upon the filing of a certificate by counsel for the United States stating that it is believed that a defendant cannot be personally served, because after diligent inquiry within the State in which the complaint is filed his place of residence cannot be ascertained by the United States or, if ascertained, that it is beyond the territorial limits of personal service as provided in rules 4 (c) and (d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, service of Notice of Summons and Complaint shall be made on that defendant by publication in a newspaper published in the county where the property is located, or if there is no such newspaper, then in a newspaper having a general circulation in the State where the property is located, once a week for three successive weeks. Prior to the last publication, a copy of the notice shall also be mailed to a defendant who cannot be personally served as provided in this rule but whose place of residence is then known. Unknown owners may be served by publication in like manner by a notice addressed to 'Unknown Others'. Service by publication is complete upon the date of the last publication. Proof of publication and mailing shall be made by certificate of counsel for the United States, to which shall be attached a printed copy of the published notice with the name and dates of the newspaper marked thereon.

"§ 3603. Trial; commissioner; decree of partition

"(a) All questions of law or equity affecting the title of the property which may arise, and the determination of the share or interest of each of the co-owners or claimants shall be tried by the court without a jury.

"(b) The court shall determine whether the property, or any part thereof, is susceptible of partition. If the court determines that the whole, or any part of the property is susceptible of partition, then the court shall enter a decree directing the partition of the property which is held to be susceptible of partition, describing it and specifying the share or interest to which each party is entitled. The court shall then appoint three or more competent and disinterested persons as commissioners to make the partition in accordance with the court's decree, the majority of the commissioners may act.

"(c) The court may appoint a surveyor to assist the commissioners in making a partition of real estate. The commissioners may cause the real estate to be surveyed and partitioned into several tracts or parcels.

"(d) The court may appoint an appraiser or appraisers to value the property and file an appraisal report with the court and the commissioners, as the court directs.

"(e) The commissioners shall divide the property into as many shares as there are persons entitled thereto, as determined by the court, having due regard in the division of the property to the situation, quantity, and advantage of each share, so that the shares may be equal in value, as nearly as may be, in the proportion to the respective shares or interests of the parties entitled thereto.

"(f) The commissioners shall report in writing to the court; and the report shall be determined by a majority of the commissioners and the contents shall be governed by the provisions of rules 53(e) (1) and (2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The report shall also contain the following—

"(1) The several tracts, units, or parcels into which the property was divided (describing each particularly);

"(2) the number of shares and the estimated value of each share;

"(3) the allotment of each share; and

"(4) field notes and maps as to each estate, as may be necessary.

"The findings and reports of the commissioners shall have the effect, and be dealt with by the court in accordance with the practice prescribed in rule 53(e)(2).

"(g) The decree of the court confirming the report of commissioners in a partition of property gives a recipient of an interest in the property a title equivalent to a conveyance of the interest by warranty deed as in the case of real property or by bill of sale as to personal property, from the other parties in the action.

"(h) All conditions, restrictive covenants, and encumbrances against the property that applied to the property prior to the partition shall remain against the property as partitioned unless those restrictions, covenants and encumbrances have been included and are subject to the partition action.

"§ 3604. Partition by sale

"Should the court determine that a fair and equitable division of the property, or any part thereof, cannot be made, the court shall order a sale of that part which is incapable of partition, which sale shall be for cash, or upon such other terms as the court may direct, and shall be made as provided by title 28, United States Code, chapter 127, or through a receiver, as the court so orders. The proceeds of such sale shall be paid into the court and partitioned among the persons and parties entitled thereto according to their respective interests.

"§ 3605. Costs

"Costs shall be taxed against each party to whom a share has been allotted in proportion to the value of such share.

"SUBCHAPTER H—FORECLOSURE OF SECURITY INTERESTS

"Sec.
"3701. United States foreclosures governed by Federal law.
"3702. Deficiency rights on federally guaranteed or insured loans.

"SUBCHAPTER H—FORECLOSURE OF SECURITY INTERESTS

"§ 3701. United States foreclosures governed by Federal law

"Unless the documents specifically adopt State law, any action by the United States to foreclose security interests in real property shall be governed by the Federal statutes and applicable regulations, provisions set forth in the transaction documents and by Federal common law where there is no governing statute, applicable regulation or provision, and not by the State law where the real property is located. This shall include, but not be limited to, questions regarding redemption rights and deficiency judgments.

"§ 3702. Deficiency rights on federally guaranteed or insured loans

"Unless the documents specifically adopt State law, the right of the United States to collect a deficiency following the foreclosure of a loan guaranteed or insured by the United States or any agency thereof shall be governed by Federal statutes, applicable regulations, and the provisions set forth in the transaction documents. The rights of the United States under this section shall apply notwithstanding the provisions of any State law and without regard to the method used by the loan holder to foreclose the loan.".

"SEC. 508B. GRANTS FOR TRAINING OF DRUG TREATMENT PROFESSIONALS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish a grant program to make grants to eligible institutions to enable such institutions to provide training services to increase the supply of drug treatment professionals, including professionals trained to work with adolescents, and professionals trained to work with community prevention activities.

"(b) ELIGIBLE INSTITUTIONS.—Institutions eligible to receive a grant under this section shall include medical schools, schools of osteopathy, schools of nursing, schools of public health, schools of chiropractic services, schools of social work, and other appropriate educational institutions that submit an application in accordance with subsection (c).

"(c) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an eligible institution shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may by regulation require.

"(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

"(1) FISCAL YEAR 1990.—The Secretary shall use amounts appropriated under section 508 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, to carry out this section in fiscal year 1990.

"(2) SUBSEQUENT FISCAL YEARS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this section in each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992, such sums as may be necessary.".

SEC. 602. NATIONAL RESOURCE AND INFORMATION CENTER.

Part A of title V of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 509H. NATIONAL RESOURCE AND INFORMATION CENTER.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, shall use amounts made available under subsection (d) to make a grant to an institution of the type described in subsection (b) for the establishment of a National Resource and Information Center for Perinatal Addiction.

"(b) TYPE OF INSTITUTION.—The grant under subsection (a) shall be awarded, after a competitive search, to a private nonprofit institution that has an extensive background and experience in performing research on maternal substance abuse and in disseminating such information to professionals, policymakers, the general public and the media, as well as experience in providing educational services to maternal substance abusers and their exposed infants.

"(c) DUTIES.—The Center established under subsection (a) shall—

"(1) coordinate and disseminate research on maternal substance abuse, treatment options for such women and infants of such women, and prevention strategies;

"(2) develop and distribute training and educational information and materials concerning maternal substance abuse;

"(3) act as a clearinghouse for information on treatment programs for pregnant women who are addicted to illegal substances;

"(4) develop and manage a national toll free hotline to provide information and referrals;

"(5) provide policy analysis and program evaluation to the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and

"(6) provide any other services designed to carry out the purposes of this subsection.

"(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this paragraph, $2,500,000 for fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1991.".

SEC. 603. GRANTS FOR SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT FOR PREGNANT AND POST-PARTUM WOMEN.

Part A of title V of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa et seq.) (as amended by section 602) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 5091. GRANTS FOR SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT FOR PREGNANT AND POST-PARTUM WOMEN.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, shall subject to amounts available in appropriation Acts, make grants to entities to provide assistance to outpatient and residential substance abuse treatment programs relating to pregnant and post-partum women and their infants, that meet the requirements of subsection (b).

"(b) REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) DISTRIBUTION.—In making grants under subsection (a), the Administrator shall ensure that grants are reasonably distributed among projects that provide outpatient and residential treatment.

"(2) SERVICES.—An entity shall not be eligible for a grant under subsection (a) unless such entity provides the Administrator with an assurance that such entity will use assistance provided under such grant to provide, arrange for the provision of, or refer individuals to, services that shall include—

"(A) intervention services for pregnant and post-partum women, including—

"(i) substance abuse and addiction treatment services;

"(ii) support services (such as child care and transportation services);

"(iii) education and skill building services (such as parenting and job seeking skill services);

"(iv) integration and coordination of substance abuse treatment services with prenatal or post-partum health care services;

"(v) innovative methods of outreach to identify and recruit target populations for services early in the pregnancy of individuals of such populations;

"(vi) medical screening procedures of pregnant women for past and present substance use and abuse; and

"(vii) after care services;

"(B) interventions where infants are at risk, including—

"(i) direct intervention, treatment, or rehabilitation of infants, which may include other siblings, to reduce or prevent the impact of maternal substance abuse on such children; and

"(ii) supportive services for biologic or foster parents of infants affected by maternal substance abuse;

"(C) service delivery strategies that may include—

"(i) strategies for the coordination, for purposes of identification or service delivery, of family violence and homeless shelter programs, programs under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, and section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, crisis pregnancy centers programs, public housing programs, and prison programs, with other likely points of access for high risk women;

"(ii) strategies concerning the involvement of significant others (such as male partners of pregnant women) as direct intervention targets or strategies to aid in the outreach and service delivery processes for women;

"(iii) strategies for co-locating multiple facilities to facilitate the delivery of services; and

"(iv) innovative strategies (such as case management) to ensure the coordinated utilization of generally unrelated service systems;

"(D) other services necessary to improve pregnancy outcomes, reduce substance abuse among women of childbearing age, and increase the stability of the family home environment.

"(c) APPLICATION.—The Administrator shall not make a grant under subsection (a) unless—

"(1) an application for the grant is submitted to the Secretary;

"(2) with respect to carrying out the purpose for which the grant is to be made, the application provides assurances of compliance satisfactory to the Secretary;

"(3) the application otherwise is in such form, is made in such manner, and contains such agreements, assurances, and information as the Administrator determines to be necessary to carry out this section; and

"(4) the application contains an assurance that the applicant will provide funds, other than Federal funds, in an amount that is not less than 10 per centum of the amount of the grant under subsection (a).

"(d) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit the Secretary to discriminate in the awarding of grants under subsection (a) against applicants that propose or provide residential or outpatient rehabilitation services under applicable requirements of State law, including applicants that provide services to substance abusing pregnant and post-partum women that receive treatment by order of a court or other appropriate public agency, so long as all such applications include measures that encourage substance abusing pregnant and post-partum women to seek prenatal care and rehabilitation.

"(e) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $50,000,000 in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal year 1991.".

SEC. 604. EMERGENCY PROTECTIVE CHILD SERVICES GRANTS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101) is amended by adding after section 8 the following new section:

"SEC. 8A. EMERGENCY PROTECTIVE CHILD SERVICES GRANTS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Subject to the availability of appropriations, the Secretary shall establish a grant program to make grants to eligible entities to enable such entities to provide services to children whose parents are substance abusers.

"(b) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—Entities eligible to receive a grant under this section shall be State or local agencies that are responsible for administering protective child services or child abuse intervention services. Such agencies shall include those agencies responsible for administering foster care, child welfare, child protective services, and child abuse intervention programs.

"(c) APPLICATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an entity shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may by regulation require.

"(2) ASSURANCE OF USE.—An application submitted under paragraph (1) shall—

"(A) contain an assurance that the applicant operates in a geographic area where substance abuse has placed substantial strains on social service and law enforcement agencies and has resulted in substantial increases in the need for services that cannot be met without funds available under this section;

"(B) identify the responsible agency or agencies that will be involved in the use of funds provided under this section;

"(C) contain a description of the emergency situation with regard to children of substance abusers who need services of the type described in this section;

"(D) contain a plan for improving the delivery of such services to such children;

"(E) contain assurances that such services will be provided in a comprehensive multidisciplinary and coordinated manner; and

"(F) contain any additional information as the Secretary may reasonably require.

"(d) USE OF FUNDS.—Funds received by an entity under this section shall be used to improve the delivery of services to children whose parents are substance abusers. Such services may include—

"(1) the hiring of additional personnel by the entity to reduce caseloads;

"(2) the provision of additional training for personnel to improve their ability to provide emergency child protective services related to substance abuse by the parents of such children;

"(3) the provision of expanded services to deal with family crises created by substance abuse;

"(4) the recruitment of additional foster care families;

"(5) the recruitment of additional adoptive families; and

"(6) the establishment or improvement of coordination between the agency administering the grant and—

"(A) child protection and welfare organizations;

"(B) hospitals and health care providers;

"(C) public health and mental health professionals;

"(D) judicial and law enforcement officers;

"(E) child advocates;

"(F) public educational institutions;

"(G) community-based organizations that serve substance abusing parents, including pregnant and post-partum females and their infants;

"(H) public housing officials;

"(I) providers of shelter to abused and homeless females and families; and

"(J) parents and representatives of parent groups.

"(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this section, $40,000,000 in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary in each subsequent fiscal year.".

(b) CHILD ABUSE GRANTS.—

(1) FINDINGS.—Section 402(A) of the Joint Resolution entitled "A Joint Resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes", (approved October 12, 1984, Public Law 98-473, 98 Stat. 2198, 42 U.S.C. 5116d) is amended—

(A) by inserting after paragraph (3), the following new paragraph:

"(4) parental substance abuse places children at great risk of abuse and neglect;"; and

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (4), (5), (6), and (7) as paragraphs (5), (6), (7), and (8) respectively.

(2) STATE ELIGIBILITY.—Section 405(4)(A) of such Act (98 Stat. 2198, 42 U.S.C. 5116c) is amended by inserting "services to substance abusing parents, including pregnant and post-partum women," after "perinatal bonding,".

(2) submit a report to Congress annually on the manner and extent to which such remedies are being used and the effect of such use in curtailing drug trafficking. The amendments made by this section shall take effect one day after enactment.

Subtitle B—Constitutional Government in Panama

SEC. 811. POLICY TOWARD EFFORTS TO RESTORE CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT IN PANAMA.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that General Manuel Noriega—

(1) runs one of the most pervasive police states in the Western Hemisphere;

(2) has usurped the power of the legitimate government in Panama;

(3) has undermined the economy of Panama;

(4) has been indicted in the United States for international drug trafficking and money laundering;

(5) is opposed by the overwhelming majority of the Panamanian people;

(6) has lost support of all democratic governments in the Western Hemisphere; and

(7) has, as evidenced by the attempted coup of October 3, 1989, lost significant support within the Panama Defense Forces.

(b) POLICY.—(1) It is the sense of the Congress that the President in his capacity as Chief Executive and Commander-in-Chief has authority under the Constitution and consistent with relevant laws of the United States and treaty commitments of the United States, including the Treaty Concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal and the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (also known as the "Rio Treaty"), to protect United States citizens and property, to protect and defend the Panama Canal, and to enforce the laws of the United States.

(2) The Congress hereby supports—

(A) the efforts of the President of the United States to restore constitutional government to Panama and to remove General Manuel Noriega from his illegal control of the Republic of Panama;

(B) the President's utilization of the full range of appropriate diplomatic, economic, and the military options in the Republic of Panama; and

(C) the President's authority to exercise, to the fullest extent, the rights and obligations of the United States to protect the Panama Canal and American citizens in Panama pursuant to the Panama Canal treaties which entered into force in 1978.

(3) It is further the sense of the Congress that the President should inform the Congress of the steps he has taken to provide timely assistance for the establishment of a coordinating office for the Panamanian democratic opposition.

TITLE IX—FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT AGENCIES

SEC. 901. ADDITIONAL AUTHORIZATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, the following sums (which shall be in addition to any other appropriations):

(2) For the Drug Enforcement Administration: $47,500,000 which shall include—

(A) not to exceed $10,000,000 for enforcing provisions of Federal law regarding precursor and essential chemicals; and

(B) not to exceed $37,500,000 for assigning not fewer than 250 agents to rural areas where State and local law enforcement agencies have identified the distribution of "crack" cocaine and/or the manufacture and distribution of methamphetamine to be a serious law enforcement problem that exceeds the resources of local law enforcement, and involves trafficking across State or national boundaries;

(3) For the United States Courts: $9,000,000 for additional probation officers, judges, magistrates and other personnel including not to exceed $2,000,000 for training, document production, and other expenses related to the implementation of the Federal sentencing guidelines;

(4) For the United States Attorneys: $24,000,000 for additional prosecutors and staff to implement a program of prosecuting in Federal court drug offenses arising out of arrests and investigations conducted by State and local law enforcement agencies;

(5) For Defender Services: $8,000,000 for the defense of persons prosecuted in Federal court for drug offenses arising out of arrests and investigations conducted by State and local law enforcement agencies; and

(6) For the United States Marshals: $9,000,000.

TITLE X—JUVENILE JUSTICE ANTI-DRUG GRANT PROGRAM

SEC. 1001. GRANT PROGRAM.

The Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 is amended in part B by—

(1) inserting after the heading for such part the following:

"Subpart J—General Grant Programs";

and

(2) adding at the end thereof a new subpart III, as follows:

"Subpart III—Juvenile Drug Trafficking and Prevention Grants

"FORMULA GRANTS

"SEC. 231. (a) The Administrator is authorized to make grants to States and units of general local government or combinations thereof to assist them in planning, establishing, operating, coordinating, and evaluating projects directly or through grants and contracts with public and private agencies for the development of more effective programs to reduce the use and sale of illegal drugs by juveniles, including education, prevention, treatment and enforcement programs.

"(b) The grants made under this section can be used for any of the following specific purposes:

"(1) To reduce the participation of juveniles in drug related crimes (including drug trafficking and drug use), particularly in and around elementary and secondary schools;

"(2) To develop within the juvenile justice system, including the juvenile corrections system, new and innovative means to address the problems of juveniles convicted of serious criminal, drug-related and gang-related offenses;

"(3) To reduce juvenile involvement in organized crime, drug and gang-related activity, particularly activities that involve the distribution of drugs by or to juveniles;

"(4) To reduce juvenile drug and gang-related activity in public housing projects;

"(5) To provide technical assistance and training to personnel and agencies responsible for the adjudicatory and corrections components of the juvenile justice system to identify drug-dependent juvenile offenders and to provide appropriate counseling and treatment to such offenders;

"(6) To promote the involvement of juveniles in lawful activities, including in-school education and prevention programs and after-school programs;

"(7) To facilitate Federal and State cooperation with local school officials to develop education, prevention and treatment programs for juveniles who are likely to participate in the drug trafficking, drug use or gang-related activities;

"(8) To prevent juvenile drug and gang involvement in public housing projects through programs establishing youth sports and other activities, including girls club, boys club, scout troops, and little league;

"(9) To provide pre- and post-trial drug abuse treatment to juveniles in the juvenile justice system; with the highest possible priority to providing drug abuse treatment to drug-dependent pregnant juveniles and drug-dependent juvenile mothers; and

"(10) To provide drug abuse education and prevention involving police and juvenile justice personnel in demand reduction programs.

"(c) Of the funds made available to each State under this section (Formula Grants) 50 per centum of the funds made available to each State in any fiscal year shall be used for juvenile drug supply reduction programs and 50 per centum shall be used for juvenile drug demand reduction programs.

"SPECIAL EMPHASIS DRUG DEMAND REDUCTION AND ENFORCEMENT GRANTS

"SEC. 232. (a) The purpose of this section is to provide additional Federal assistance and support to identify promising new juvenile drug demand reduction and enforcement programs, to replicate and demonstrate these programs to serve as national, regional or local models that could be used, in whole or in part, by other public and private juvenile justice programs, and to provide technical assistance and training to public or private organizations to implement similar programs. In making grants under this section, the Administrator shall give priority to programs aimed at juvenile involvement in organized gang- and drug-related activities, including supply and demand reduction programs.

"(b) The Administrator is authorized to make grants to, or enter into contracts with, public or private agencies, institutions, or organizations or individuals to carry out any purpose authorized in section 231. The Administrator shall have final authority over all funds awarded under this subchapter.

"(c) Of the total amount appropriated for this subchapter, 20 per centum shall be reserved and set aside for this section in a special discretionary fund for use by the Administrator to carry out the purposes specified in section 231. Grants made under this section may be made for amounts up to 100 per centum of the costs of the programs or projects.

"AUTHORIZATION

"SEC. 233. There is authorized to be appropriated $100,000,000 in fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary in each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992 to carry out the purposes of this subpart.

"ALLOCATION OF FUND

"SEC. 234. Of the total amounts appropriated under this subpart in any fiscal year to carry out the purposes of section 231 (Formula Grants) the amount remaining after setting aside the amounts required to be reserved to carry out section 232 (Discretionary Grants) shall be allocated as follows:

"(1) $400,000 shall be allocated to each of the participating States;

"(2) Of the total funds remaining after the allocation under paragraph (a), there shall be allocated to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of remaining funds described in this paragraph as the population of such State bears to the population of all the States.

"APPLICATION

"SEC. 235. (a) Each State applying for grants under section 231 (Formula Grants) and each public or private entity applying for grants under section 232 (Discretionary Grants) shall submit an application to the Administrator in such form and containing such information as the Administrator shall prescribe.

"(b) To the extent practical, the Administrator shall prescribe regulations governing applications for this subpart that are substantially similar to the applications required under part I (general juvenile justice formula grant) and part C (special emphasis prevention and treatment grants), including the procedures relating to competition.

"(c) In addition to the requirements prescribed in subsection (b), each State application submitted under section 231 shall include a detailed description of how the funds made available shall be coordinated with Federal assistance provided in parts B and C of title II of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 and by the Bureau of Justice Assistance under the Drug Control and System Improvement Grant program.

"REVIEW AND APPROVAL OF APPLICATIONS

"SEC. 236. The procedures and time limits imposed on the Federal and State Governments under sections 505 and 508 respectively, of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 relating to the review of applications and distribution of Federal funds shall apply to the review of applications and distribution of funds under this subpart.".
